DO NOT MARK BOOKS

So many books are coming back to the library marked and otherwise mistreated that it is felt necessary to warn users against such practices. Most of the damage is probably done thoughtlessly. You are asked to think and not to mark. FAILURE TO OBSERVE THE SPIRIT OF THIS REQUEST WILL RESULT IN THE DISCONTINUANCE OF STATE LIBRARY SERVICE. These volumes are state property: use them but do not abuse them.

THE CLASSIC EXAMPLE OF A SUCCESSFUL ADVERTISING MAN WAS P. T. BARNUM—HOW WOULD HE EXPLOIT A PHOTO-PLAY TODAY?

WITH RITCHEY posters of course! With his instinctive knowledge of crowd psychology he would have appreciated the like knowledge possessed by the RITCHEY organization. He would also have appreciated our ability to denude a theme of its non-essentials. He would have perceived our ability to depict the very soul of a photo-play upon a poster. He would at once have recognized the tremendous force and power of the RITCHEY poster delineations and the conviction and the sincerity of their execution.

But P. T. Barnum is long since dead. How, therefore, can we make such positive statements about him?

Because the men who inherit his mantle—the men who are the acknowledged motion picture advertising authorities of the present time do use RITCHEY posters. They use them exclusively and exclusively for the reasons given above.

The list of such men is long. So long that we can only give it in part, but here follows some of the prominent examples:

It's a big field—give it a big thought! Five million dimes—five million quarters—burning holes in five million little pockets. Five million steady patrons who will turn into five million grown-ups in a year or two. Can you afford to neglect this monthly turn-in of nearly five million dollars? Are you getting your share of this business?

What sort of entertainment do these five million boy patrons want? You know the answer: Serials! Thrilling adventure—hairbreadth escapes—deeds of daring and physical prowess—mystery!

But you can't get them with the old time stuff. These five million boys are learning and they want the best. Give it to 'em and you've got 'em! Five million of them!

Universal saw this five million market—Universal knows this five million market. Universal is making serials for this five million market that are new stuff—as up-to-date as the boys themselves—that fit them to a “tee.” Do the boys like these new serials? Brother, they eat 'em alive!

The Full-house Five! A whole year's capacity business is waiting for you—your share of fifty-two multiplied by five million, multiplied by, say, fifteen cents—roughly, thirty-nine million dollars. “The Lion Man”—“Elmo, the Fearless”—“The Moonriders”—Eddie Polo in “The Vanishing Dagger”—Marie Walcamp in “The Dragon's Net.” See them; book them at your Universal Exchange today.

UNIVERSAL

IT'S just as important to know what to leave out of a News Reel as to know what to put in. It calls for the keenest care and expert skill to pick out of the maze of daily happenings only the really worth-while, and so to blend that selection with proper regard for balance, contrast, interest and variety as to make the perfect release. Your audiences may not realize the artistic skill expended in assembling an International News Reel but you know it—and you further know that this expert care in selection is one of the reasons why your people, consciously or unconsciously, prefer the International to any other News Service.

FOR THE BEST NAME

FOR

THE GREATEST NOVELTY REEL EVER PRODUCED

What the Reel Is

Within a few weeks Universal will release a 1,000-foot novelty reel. This release will consist of a number of startlingly odd and original subjects. The entire world is being combed for material which will present an irresistible appeal to photoplay patrons possessing even the most jaded of appetites. It will be a combination of humor, travel and adventure. It will contain examples of marvelous trick photography, the like of which the industry has heretofore never seen.

The Name We Want

We want a NEW NAME that will present an irresistible appeal to photoplay patrons of every degree from the type of audiences which attend the palatial picture palaces to those whose sole amusement resort is the 200-seat house. The name should be short and distinctive. Under no circumstance will a name in which the word "Magazine" appears be considered.

Terms of the Contest

This contest is for the single prize of $250. It is open to Exhibitors only. There are no other prizes. It costs nothing to enter it. There is no limit on the number of names you may suggest. IF MORE THAN ONE EXHIBITOR SUGGESTS THE NAME SELECTED BY THE JUDGES, AN AMOUNT EQUAL TO THAT OF THE PRIZE WILL BE AWARDED TO EACH OF THE WINNERS.

Contest Period

The contest for this $250 prize for the best name to be given Universal's wonder-reel opens with the publication of this advertisement in the current issue of this trade paper. IT CLOSES FRIDAY, APRIL 30th. All suggestions must be in the hands of Universal by midnight of that date.

Write your suggestions on one side of the paper only, and be sure to give the name and address of your theatre. Write clearly and legibly. Lists of names not containing the name and address of your theatre will not be considered.

THE JUDGES

In selecting the Judges for this contest, Universal has obtained the services of three men who are known wherever motion pictures are shown. Their decision will be announced as soon as possible after the closing of the contest. They are

LARRY SEMON in "THE FLY-COP"

Hist!

Sh-h-h! He's off again. On a new trail this time—as one of those regular made-to-order-by-mail “detectives,” Larry the laugh-maker, gumshoes himself into one hilarious hole after the other. Under the ground and up in the air he leads the merry man-hunt until—but that is the big surprise of this Larry Semon comedy.

Ha! Ha!

That's what this COMEDY contains. And lots of them. It begins with a laugh and ends with a roar. Its another sparkling gem in the crown of this king of comedy that takes its place alongside of “The Grocery Clerk” and the host host of other high-class comedies that has been Vitagraph's contribution to the merriment of a nation.

have been asking for something "different" every day for years.

There have been a few really "different" and really good, practical ideas in moving pictures. 100% of them have been 100% successes from the viewpoint of all of these fans, all of these exhibitors and all of these producers.

"COMEDYART" is the latest and greatest of really "different," really good practical ideas.

8000 of the fastest thinking exhibitors have recognized it. Their inquiries have been received and referred to our branches, and their contracts are already flooding our offices.

Where do YOU stand in this list? YOU also have our postage-prepaid inquiry cards. There is still time to get in on the ground floor. Put it off and forget it, or use the card NOW and win with us.

is the 1400-foot comedy part of our first "COMEDYART" production released March 28th. For 1300 feet of rollicking, situation and classy slapstick comedy, there is not a sub-title nor a face on the screen. NOTHING BUT FEET. It is as "different" from the usual comedy as day is from night, and it's a knockout that will make your house the talk of the town.

GOD'S COUNTRY

is the 400-foot Artcolor with this release. It is stunning. It makes men think deep; it raises them out of themselves, it leaves them happy. When God fashioned the earth, His most awe-inspiring work became the "Rockies"—the backbone of the Americas. That's where this comes from. And because our Color process, latest child of Science, is fully protected by patents, you can bet that this is "different."

MEMORIES

This 200-foot Novelty is a riot. A "different" comparison of yesterday's "rum-hounds" with today's "powder-puff-fans." Yes, it's "different."

2000 feet of "different" value. Use that card right now, and a "different" kind of price will reach you in a hurry.

COMEDYART

TURN IT WITH BUSINESS
RIGHT FROM THE START

A GOOD picture means capacity business, but not always from the start. Opening shows are sometimes poorly attended because the public must have time to "catch on." When they do, your house fills up every day and you preside at a busy box office. But why not keep that box office busy COMMENCING WITH THE OPENING SHOW? Why not fill those seats from the very beginning? When you advertise a sure fire star-name and a sure fire play-title, you line 'em up outside before your attraction opens — and IF the attraction is as good as

The Verdict on "JUST A WIFE"

The initial National Picture Theatres release is sweeping the country. These "glad tidings" tell the story:—

Sincere congratulations. Pictures like this will always be a welcome relief.

HAROLD FRANKLIN, SHEA'S HIPPODROME
Buffalo, N. Y.

Exceptional production; played capacity seven days, Alhambra and Isis.

CHARLES OLSON
Indianapolis, Ind.

Consider it wonderful picture of exceptional merit.

REGENT THEATRE
Rochester, N. Y.

Is picture of exceptional merit.

ECKEL THEATRE
Syracuse, N. Y.

A huge success from every angle.

POLI BIJOU THEATRE
New Haven, Conn.
Fred A. Valles, Mgr.

Patrons proclaim it best production of the season. I consider this one of the unusual productions of the year.

W. H. CLUNE
Los Angeles, Cal.

"BLIND YOUTH," second National production, will be ready about April 8th

The title alone makes it sure-fire at the box-office. The play's long run on Broadway has created its own photoplay audience to be measured only in the millions.

An Announcement of Importance To STATE RIGHT BUYERS

Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., has acquired SCREEN SMILES for distribution in the United States and Canada.

SCREEN SMILES is a series of Animated Topical Sayings.

The subjects comprise the most timely and wittiest remarks of America's leading newspaper writers.

The illustrations are the work of America's leading film cartoonists and present the most remarkable animated drawings ever devised for the screen.

SCREEN SMILES was viewed by the FIRST NATIONAL EXHIBITORS' CIRCUIT OF NEW YORK and of NEW ENGLAND, with the result that the rights were contracted for forthwith for New York, Northern New Jersey and New England.

SCREEN SMILES is now available for State Right purchase.

It is destined to become a standard and permanent feature of every exhibitor's program in the United States and Canada.

SCREEN SMILES will be given the most elaborate publicity and advertising campaign ever accorded a short length subject. The exhibitors' advertising accessories for SCREEN SMILES are worthy of a feature production.

Inquiries for State Rights will be accorded prompt attention. Get your bid in now. SCREEN SMILES will not be on the market long.

The capacity of the PALISADE LABORATORIES is 1,500,000 feet per week. The dead line, however, is 1,000,000 feet and we will not, under any circumstances, print more than this amount. We are thus enabled to give extraordinary attention to everything we turn out.

At the present time we are open for approximately 300,000 feet per week. Our past performances have caused us to be known as and we maintain a uniform standard of quality.

We do not use any so-called "developing machines," nor do we turn out our product with a sausage grinder, therefore our slogan is

"Not How CHEAP, but How GOOD"

We are ready to do business with any concern that appreciates the highest quality on the screen and is willing to pay a fair price for such service.

We believe the crew of the PALISADE LABORATORIES is the most efficient and highest salaried in the United States. Each person has been selected for special excellence in his particular branch of work and is a well known expert in his line.

Our confidence in our forces is such that we are willing to Challenge Any Laboratory on Earth— or Elsewhere

to match their skill against our own in turning out a print of a five reel picture, the loser to donate $500.00 to any charity agreed upon.

Mr. Griffith has gone and done it again! Twanging upon the harp of life with all his might, he has made a pictorial love story of the tropic seas, visioning romance there as a languorous and heavy-scented flower.

Richard Barthelmess and Clarence Seymour are the players featured.

Miss Seymour, who is of a dark, accented beauty, fits very well the role of French-Samoan-Japanese maid who dances wild, strange dances to her "devil-devil," and who wears a sort of super-Hawaiian costume in preference to the staid gingham which the white missionary offers.

Some of Richard Barthelmess's earnest devotees will bewail the fact that he is in this a crude, unshaven creature, but they'll surely not find fault with his playing. He seems to me to have added several inches to his histrionic stature and is to the life Dan McGuire, the comber, torn by the many emotions with which the director (or the scenario writer; one never knows) endows him.

"The Idol Dancer" tells a story

"FIND"

Clarine Seymour Is Big Hit in Griffith Film

CLARINE SEYMOUR, who plays the vivid, romantic heroine of "The Idol Dancer" at the Strand Theatre, is evidently a D. W. Griffith "find." So far as we know, this is the first picture in which she has been starred. Her stellar honors are gracefully upon her.

that is purely theatrical, but it gives, and Mr. Griffith takes, many opportunities for the sort of grouping and the effects he manages so very well. There's a rather doubtful element of comedy in the person of Florence Short, as Pansy, a little South Sea flower who grows wilder hour by hour. The audience—or optience—at the Strand yesterday afternoon was vastly amused by her curious wriggings.

THE EVENING TELEGRAM NEW YORK

"The Idol Dancer" Another Griffith Screen Masterpiece

RICHARD BARTHELMESS.

Wins new triumph as beachcomber in "The Idol Dancer" at the Strand.

Again the magic which in this case is another term for the imagination, is manifest in the new film at the Strand Theatre. "The Idol Dancer" is a work that takes its appointed place in the growing list of master works by this arch wizard. Here is a story of the South Seas told with all the tropical wealth which the story demands. The watcher lost in enchantment, rides the surf of the Pacific, wanders in the tangled jungles, watches with many thrills the head hunters and cannibals.

It is not about them that the story centres. It is rather in the conflict between a dissipated beachcomber and an invalid from the north, both of whom with a wisp of a girl who flutters through the play in the semblance of a South Sea Island maiden.

With that unflinching keen eye for contrast, Mr. Griffith suddenly transports the audience from the languors of a winter as he reveals the invaded flow of the south.

Through this oddly assorted trio live through a great crisis, how the invalid meets the great adventure and goes out of life, not like a weakling but like a hero, is only one of many fine episodes. The regeneration of the me'er-do-well beachcomber is a graphic bit of psychology which the camera, it might be supposed, could never reveal, yet here it is clearly defined on the screen.

The parting between the two young men is an unusually poignant moment. For thrills there is the attack of a South Sea pirate and his black minions on a group of helpless women and children while the men are absent on a fishing expedition. The summoning of the men by means of a vibrant drum is one of the best scenes among many excellent scenes leading up to a climax of great power.

Let it not be forgotten that there are moments of delightful comedy in "The Idol Dancer." The manner in which a South Sea beau marries his South Sea belle by knocking out her front teeth is one of these scenes. Miss Clarice Seymour, who appears as the Idol Dancer, is one of the most effective of youthful screen stars. Richard Barthelmess wins a new triumph as the beachcomber. His facial expression alone makes this film worthy of several visits.

Mr. Griffith's genius is not only apparent in the excellent pictures, but in the alluring quality of the presentation. The music is worthy of a special word of praise, particularly in the adroit use of a Hawaiian orchestra to express the emotions of the little heroine of the South Seas.

Short Subjects and Long

A RECENT interview with D. W. Griffith quotes him as saying: "The ideal show—an evening's entertainment—the thing for which I am working, requires from eight to twelve reels . . . an evening's entertainment made up of one complete picture."

An editorial in the publication that printed the interview is headed, "The Day of the Short Subject." Both articles appear in the same issue. The editorial states, in part, that "The 'short subject,' as it is called today, is back where it used to be because exhibitors have found it to be an indispensable adjunct to their programs. The exhibitor has learned several things about his audiences. He has learned that his patrons don't give a tinker's dam how long a picture is. They only care how good it is. He has learned the value of contrast and relief in his programs—a thing that only the short subject can give. Before long the one and two reel drama will be revived. The five-reeler is going to be forced to fight for its five-reel existence."

In support of the one complete picture an evening standard, Mr. Griffith holds that the system of allowing spectators to enter a theatre when a picture is half over and get the finish of the story becoming acquainted with the beginning tends to weaken the character drawing and undo much of the effect of the director's work.

IN their contentions both the editor and Mr. Griffith are right. In other words, it is a question of quality and not of kind. There will continue to be packed houses of highly pleased spectators for the one-complete-picture theatres, and also for the five-reel-feature-and-short-subject theatres; and the one and two reel dramas will receive a royal welcome when they arrive. The five-reeler will not have to fight for its five-reel existence, if it is a worthy specimen of its class. It is only the poor five-reelers that will have to do any fighting. And the poor one and two reel dramas will be knocked out quite as readily.

The crux of the matter lies in the fact that there are as many different tastes among patrons of the moving picture theatres as there are among the supporters of the speaking stage. Mr. Griffith already has demonstrated that there is a large and enthusiastic public for the kind of picture entertainment he advocates. It is large and enthusiastic because when Mr. Griffith invites the public to look at a picture that is eight to twelve reels in length he is satisfied the production contains sufficient strength to match its length. It is a fact nevertheless that the public rarely gets enthusiastic over a subject eight to twelve reels long—and few producers have the temerity to undertake the task of making one.

THE marked success of short subjects proves that their place in public affection is secure. Practically no motion picture house of any pretension fails to include in its program two to three thousand feet of news, comedy and scenic films. The scenics have been responsible for the conversion into picturegoers of many who in the beginning never would have entered a theatre to see a dramatic production. The news weeklies, too, have beaten down the prejudices of many others—who came to scoff and remained to praise, who found unexpected elements of entertainment in the remainder of the list. That the short subjects are popular is indicated by the expansion of the older companies making them and the organization of new ones to create them.

Screen patrons do not buy their entertainment by the foot or by the yard. "They only care how good it is"—and how near it suits their taste.

While on the subject of merit it is a safe prediction to set down that motion pictures will be better, in larger quantities,

When screen novelists, scenario writers and directors learn not to encore the characters and situations in a serious story;

When exhibitors know more about the technical difficulties that must be overcome in making pictures and understand that there are elements in the building of all forms of drama that are absolutely beyond control;

When all branches of the film business learn more about the laws of dramatic construction.

As Kansas Sees Censorship

KANSAS exhibitors have taken up with the governor of their commonwealth the matter of the personnel of the state's censorship board. At the present time the three members are women. While adhering to the general proposition of Votes for Men, the picture showmen of the Sunflower State also are more urgently discussing with their chief executive the fallacy of censorship as a whole.

Just why there should be this demand for a change in the personnel of the board is not clear. As our correspondent tells us, in the days when there was a man on the board there was an absence of peace. Practically every subject was criticised and cut. While at present it is said the three women never agree, at the same time it is almost certain that two of them will. Rarely is a picture condemned in toto.

We incline to the view that after all the exhibitors do not love the women less but that actually they abominate censorship more.

Dr. Geare and the Flat Throw

THE marked success of short subjects proves that their Mr. Richardson describing the plans for projection installation in Crandall's Strand Theatre in Cumberland, Md., in which the machine room is placed directly opposite the screen and not near the roof. It is our belief the design of Architect Geare will provide material for careful study. The best screen results frequently are obtained in the smaller houses, in those not possessing any balcony—and for that reason. There seems to be no disagreement among the experts that the flat throw is the right throw. Also there seems to be practically unanimous agreement among the exhibitors that in a large house front-of-the-balcony projection is open to several administrative objections. Consequently any design that promises flat trajectory and at the same time the elimination of the objectionable features is worth while.

Art in Advertising

RECOGNITION of the artistry displayed in motion picture advertising is freely given in the March number of "The Printing Art," a handsomely printed technical publication issued by the University Press of Cambridge, Mass. The compliment takes the form of reprinting a four-page colored insert of Realart which appeared in the motion picture trade press February 28. We think advertising men exploiting the products of other industries will agree with us when we say motion picture display announcements lead all the rest in attractiveness.

Some Short and Snappy Stuff

"See How the Star Is Shining."

We're going to dedicate this song to Elaine Hammerstein, Selznick's star.

Modified Censorship Bill to Be Reported in Massachusetts

A BILL providing that the Massachusetts Department of Public Safety be given power to prohibit anything in a motion picture film or in connection with one which the department considers cruel, obscene, indecent, immoral or likely to debase or to corrupt morals or to incite to crime, is being drafted by the sub-committee of the Massachusetts legislative committee on mercantile affairs.

The sub-committee, it is learned, will present this modified censorship act to the full committee, which in turn will report it to the legislature.

Rejecting the proposed plan of censorship advocates to have a board of censorship of motion pictures in the department of labor and industries, the full committee appointed the sub-committee to draw up a bill that would do away with the censorship idea and yet would protect the public against any improper films. The sub-committee has decided, it is learned, that the public safety bureau is the body where the authority should rest, inasmuch as the bureau at present has supervision of films shown at Sunday performances.

Exhibitors to Ask Governor for Change in Kansas Censors

A CHANGE in the personnel of the board of censors in Kansas City is said to be a certainty. The board now consists of three women. There was a man on the board once—in the days when every film was cut and criticized, when every day there was a row, and when a distributor knew that any punch his picture had would be softened to a blunt end before the board got through with it.

The women censors have got away with their job pretty well, considering everything. The three women are of widely different types, and, as might be expected, they seldom agree. The wonder is that any picture gets through—the situation being saved, apparently, by the fact that one or another of the censors objects strenuously to every picture and the two others agree in its favor. It is true, however remarkable it may seem, that seldom do two of the censors agree on a proposition of condemning an entire picture.

The result has been that pictures move through the board fairly, steadily, with fewer cuts than occurred a few years ago.

But the Kansas exhibitors take the position that it is weakness to submit to censorship at all, when they know it is wrong, when they feel that the public resents censorship. Therefore it is the acme of base submission to allow censorship to be conducted in a manner positively against what they consider the public interest. They have taken the matter up with the governor and will secure changes in the personnel if possible.

H. D. Kline-Universal Suit Has Been Settled Amicably

THE suit instituted in the Federal Court of New York City by Harry D. Kline, who was formerly employed as manager of the production department in the Universal Film Manufacturing Company's studio at Universal City, against the film company to recover approximately $33,000 was discontinued on March 12.

While no statement was forthcoming in connection with the discontinuance of the litigation, it is understood that the controversy was settled amicably out of court. The order of discontinuance was signed by Judge Learned Hand upon the consent of counsel for both sides.

The film company set up a counterclaim of $150,000, alleging that Kline had been wasteful and extravagant in the expenditure of the corporation's funds in the production end of the business; that he had refused to consider the suggestions of the executives of the company and that he had demoralized the studio staff.

South Bend Mayor Charges Profiteering by Exhibitors

F. R. CARSON, mayor of South Bend, Ind., has started a war against alleged profiteering by certain motion picture exhibitors of that city. He called the various managers to his office and informed them of complaints that the proprietors of some of the theatres had bought cheap films for Sunday performances and then had boosted the admission price.

According to the mayor one South Bend theatre charged 28 cents admission on a Sunday for a show far inferior to that presented during the week for only 22 cents.

"This looks to me as if that manager was trying to take advantage of the Sunday crowds," said the mayor. "This must stop or I shall take drastic action against the theatres. I am strongly in favor of Sunday shows, but I don't favor profiteering."

He instructed the theatre men not to increase admission prices or cut programs on Sundays, and also ordered that the doors are not to be opened until 1 o'clock in the afternoon. He informed the proprietors that a continuance of the policy which had been brought to his attention would result in the city administration closing the theatres on Sundays. The theatre men all agreed to abide by his suggestions.

W. H. Swanson Returns to Salt Lake.

W. H. Swanson, president of the Swanson Theatre Circuit which operates the American, Gem and Strand theatres, has returned to Salt Lake City from a two-months' business trip to New York, where he attended the annual meeting of the First National officers and transacted other business. After spending a few days in Salt Lake City he went to Los Angeles on a brief business trip.

Max Spiegel to Build Theatre on Astor Site

MAX SPIEGEL, vice-president of the Strand Theatre Company, has closed a sixty-three year lease with William Vincent Astor, on premises 246-256 (inclusive) West Forty-fourth street, New York, making a plot of 100 by 125 feet. This property is located directly opposite the Broadhurst Theatre and joins the Little Theatre on the west.

Mr. Spiegel will be given possession of this property on May 1 next, when the buildings will be demolished to be replaced by a new theatre of the highest type of construction, with a seating capacity of 1,600, of which 1,000 will be located on the lower floor and 600 in the balcony. It is Mr. Spiegel's intention to devote his new theatre to the presentation of high class musical productions exclusively.

Plan to Use 200 Prints of "Is America Worth Saving?"

COLONEL ARTHUR WOODS, former police commissioner of New York, and now in charge of all welfare work for the American Legion, together with scores of other well-known men and women, visited the Universal Service Theatre during the last week and saw "Is America Worth Saving?" the straight Americanization picture produced by Harry Levey from the scenario written by Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University.

The picture was of particular interest to Mrs. Arthur Woods, who was present with her husband after war-time service overseas, for the reason that her great, great grandfather, Alexander Hamilton, is visualized in Dr. Butler's patriotic picturization along with Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln and Roosevelt. As the grand-daughter of J. Pierpont Morgan, and a direct descendant of the first secretary of the treasury of the United States in Mrs. Woods' veins flows the blood of America's two greatest financiers.

Dr. Butler has not yet seen the completed picture, but is expected home from Augusta, Ga., within the next few days, when he will aid Mr. Levey in putting the finishing touches to the film. Two hundred prints of "Is America Worth Saving?" will be circulated, and it is believed that within three months almost every person in the country will have had an opportunity of seeing it.

Balkan States Offers Big Opportunities for Pictures

A FINE field for motion pictures exists in the Balkan States, according to Captain Eaton Webster, of the Balkan Reconstruction Commission, who addressed the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at their weekly luncheon at the Cafe Boulevard. Introduced by Charles Barrell, Captain Eaton explained that he was sent to the Balkans to do special work in Serbia and Jugo-Slavia.

"The opportunities for motion pictures in the Balkans are exceptionally fine," said Captain Eaton. "The people there are motion picture 'fans.' American motion picture enterprise would be just the thing that would bring a ready response from the people."

"Another point is that the Serbs are born motion picture actors. Anyone taking a picture in that country would not have to bother about taking 'extras' along with him."

George Mayne Heads Salt Lake Theatre Managers' Association

THE Salt Lake Moving Picture Theatre Managers' Association elected officers for the ensuing year at a recent meeting at the American Theatre. George Mayne, manager of the Swanson Theatre Circuit, was elected president; M. H. Hanauer, of the Broadway Theatre, vice-president; George E. Carpenter, manager of the Paramount-Empress Theatre, secretary, and W. E. Shieler, of the Empire Theatre, treasurer.

The managers appointed a committee with power to act, to which will be referred petitions for all sorts of screen advertising, charities and so forth. Applications for these favors have become so numerous of late that the theatres have been compelled to take steps to regulate the practice. The committee consists of H. S. Rand, of the Isis Theatre; M. H. Hanauer, of the Broadway, and Grant Pemberton, of the Casino.

The managers put themselves on record as opposed to the proposed daylight saving time legislation and agreed to file with the city commission a petition against such an ordinance.

Following a few announcements in connection with the Utah education campaign, which opens this week, advertising slides are to be barred from the screen, according to the managers' decision.

Revenue Figures Show Big Theatre Attendance Increase

ONLY as a result of prohibition can officials of the Bureau of Internal Revenue account for the great increase in theatre attendance, which has increased more than 50 per cent. in the last year, according to the admission taxes collected.

According to a report just secured from the commissioner of internal revenue at Washington, D. C., admission taxes collected during January amounted to $6,713,993.72, an increase of $2,419,420 over the collections of the same month in 1919. That this increase is not due merely to the holidays in December but is an actual and permanent condition is proven by the fact that collections for the eight months ended with February amounted to $41,236,658.66, as compared with $25,083,887.76 during the corresponding period of last year, an increase of approximately 65 per cent.

The report also shows that $412,979.11 was collected during the month on motion picture films leased and licensed, as compared with $435,454.36 during the preceding month, while $37,190.47 was received from the seating tax. Other collections in which the moving picture industry is interested included $19,348,187 collected on freight shipments, $1,452,645 on express packages, $14,297,577 on personal transportation $952,696 on seats, berths and staterooms, and $2,321,212 on telegraph and long-distance telephone messages.

Chamberlain Company Buys Opera House in Shamokin

THE Chamberlain Amusement Enterprises, Inc., Shamokin, Pa., have consummated the biggest real estate deal in the history of the city with the purchase of the G. A. R. Opera House for $100,000. It has a frontage of 75 feet and a depth of 160 feet and has a larger stage than several of the leading Philadelphia theatres.

L. J. Chamberlain, president and general manager, is one of the pioneers in the operation of picture theatres and has made his chain of theatres successful and popular. His theatres are the Victoria Theatre and Opera House, Shamokin; Theatorium and Valentine theatres, Mount Carmel; Victoria, Tamaqua; Victoria, Bloomsburg, and Victoria, Sunbury. He also controls options on several other properties in the central and eastern part of the state, and he owns the Opera House site at Lewisburg.

Junior Rockefeller Praises Screen Aid in Y. W. C. A. Drive

ADDRESSING a group of 250 workers in the Y. W. C. A. drive for $1,500,000 at a recent meeting held at the Hotel Commodore, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., gave high praise to the part the motion picture industry is playing in carrying the campaign to the goal which has been set.

"The motion picture industry has been of tremendous assistance in the launching of this drive to raise a sum which will enable the Y. W. C. A. to further increase its efficiency," said Mr. Rockefeller. "Through the screen it has enabled us to reach millions of people and to inform them of the drive and its purposes. The Y. W. C. A. fills a civic need and is one of the most effective means of combating the social evil. Much of the success which we are going to have in the campaign just inaugurated will be due to the co-operation of the motion picture industry."

Mr. Rockefeller denied that in a speech made at the Lexington Theatre, coincident with the official opening of the drive, he had said that "the city has too many immoral motion picture shows."

She Saw Patrick Calhoun, Long Lost Brother, in Film

THAT the motion picture as a medium for the discovery of missing persons is now world-wide in its scope is revealed in a letter received by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation from a former American girl in Johannesburg, pleading for aid to complete her joy after recognizing an actor in one of the firm's productions as a brother whom she has not seen or heard from in eighteen years. As a result the Hodkinson organization has instituted a search for Patrick Calhoun, who appeared in "The Law Divides," starring Kathleen Clifford.

Rita Sutton, of 71 St. Amant street, Malvern, Johannesburg, writes that she attended a performance of the picture in the South African metropolis and immediately recognized her long lost brother in the opening scene. As Calhoun played an important role his subsequent appearances, she says, made assurances doubly certain that it was he. Thereupon Miss Sutton consulted the theatre manager and learned of the Hodkinson organization's connection with the picture.

Do You Want to Help?

"We loved each other so before our separation that I believed him dead when I failed to hear from him. Will you please do your utmost to help find him?" Miss Sutton's letter concludes.

Motion picture players and acquaintances are urged to aid "The Law that Divides" in re-uniting the Johannesburg girl and the object of her many years' search.

Well, Boys, What About the High Prices That Drive the Public to Vaudeville

By J. R. DENNISTON
Family Theatre, Monroe, Mich.

IT isn't very often that I rush into print, and I am not doing it this time to blow my own horn, but I've got something in my system that I simply must get out, so am asking the courtesy of the columns of your valuable paper to use as a safety valve for my pent-up emotions.

I am going to start my rampage by asking this question. Is the high-salaried star and the high-priced production killing the goose that laid the golden egg? Now don't laugh, because I know there is nothing startlingly new in this idea, but I have had some experiences recently which I wish to recount here for the benefit of the boys throughout the state who read the Michigan Film Review. I hope that this will bring out some replies, whether they agree with me or not, as it is always interesting to get the other fellow's viewpoint.

"Hope You Are; I'm Not."

You boys all remember how the producer opened the season of 1920 with extravagant promises of fewer and better pictures. You remember that gospel of optimism they preached up and down the state, declaring that all signs pointed to the harvesting this season of the greatest riches the industry had ever known. Well, boys, I hope you are all raking in the coin by the bushel, but I am frank to say that the season of 1920 has not as yet made a millionaire of me.

Candidly, boys, how much better are the average run of pictures you are receiving this year than the ones you used last season? There has been some improvement, no doubt, but has it been in the same proportion to the increase in price.

Camouflage for Extravagance.

I think a great many of us are beginning to realize that most of the talk about better pictures and better times was camouflage, a smoke-screen behind which the producers hope to hide their mad extravaganzas of price boosting, in which each seems to vie with the other in establishing a record for high prices. They told us, didn't they, that the people had so much money they didn't know what to do with it and all we had to do was to raise our prices and more than make it back?

I don't know what experience the rest of you birds have had in raising admission prices, but my experience has been that

HIS COMBINATION SHOW WILL "LICK" HIGH PRICED SPECIALS

DON'T know what experience the rest of you birds have had in raising admission prices, but my experience has been that any further increase in admissions, if not actually resented, has had the effect of cooling the ardor of the picture fan. At any rate, they have not broken down the doors in any mad rush to see the high price pictures we have shown."

"Well, we fellows who are equipped to run vaudeville, we should worry. I am at present running vaudeville three days a week to make up the losses sustained on high priced pictures."

any further increase in admissions, if not actually resented, has had the effect of cooling the ardor of the picture fan. At any rate, they have not broken down the doors in any mad rush.

Runs Vaudeville Three Days.

I claim the bird of the golden egg in the picture industry is being slaughtered, because the high admission prices are driving the public to the vaudeville houses and other places of amusement. Well, we fellows who are equipped to run vaudeville, we should worry. I am at present running vaudeville three days a week to make up the losses sustained on high-priced pictures.

Take your pencil and do a little figuring. Monroe is a two-day town, so we will figure on a two-day basis. For the big picture we are asked to pay $250. To this must be add another $50 for exploitation, so your show is costing you $300 for two days in addition to your regular daily nut.

Comparing Costs of Programs.

Now let us figure on a vaudeville show against this program. You can buy a pretty good program picture with a minor star for two days for $50. You can get five acts of good vaudeville for $200 and you still have $50 left for advertising, but you will not need the half of it because photos are furnished free and it is not necessary to use as much newspaper space to advertise a vaudeville show as it is to exploit a feature picture. Then you have this advantage—that while the public has been pictured to death, the vaudeville game has not been so overdone. You have another advantage—there's no war tax on salaries.

I do not know that the same thing would prove true generally, but in my town, where we depend upon the laboring class for most of our business, I can take a four or five act vaudeville bill with an average program picture and lick the high-priced special to a standstill.

When the theatres begin to pass up the high-priced pictures and the producers begin to realize we can run our houses without their product, then and not until then will we again be able to buy pictures on a live and let live policy. Who is next? Come on, boys, let's get to the bottom of this thing.

Mayor J. Hampton Moore and Col. Woods Made Members of Americanism Committee

OWING to the death of Major R. W. Pullman, secretary of the Americanism Committee organized by Franklin K. Lane while secretary of the interior, the active efforts of the committee were halted.

A reorganization of the committee has been effected, with W. A. Ryan as its executive secretary, with offices at 1520 Broadway, New York. Mr. Ryan was selected by the committee at the suggestion of Mr. Lane, with whom he has been associated for many years. Mr. Ryan was formerly controller of the U. S. Reclamation Service and secretary of the Railroad Wage Commission, of which Mr. Lane was the chairman.

Mayor J. Hampton Moore, of Philadelphia, and Colonel Arthur Woods, of the Americanism Commission of the Legion of Honor, have accepted the committee's invitation to become members.

In answer to the invitation of Chairman Lane nearly all the leading producers, directors, stars and distributors have signified their desire and intention to co-operate in the making of one- and two-reel films in which shall be embodied lessons in practical Americanism, with the especial motive of affording inspirational example to the youth of the nation.

The enthusiasm and interest manifested in the first release, "The Land of Opportunity," shows what popular appeal lies in the stories of achievement of those who have attained to greatness through their own effort and worth.

Among the stars who have volunteered to assist in the making of films are Lionel Barrymore, Irene Castle Tremain, George Fawcett, George Fitzmaurice, Tom Mix, Chester Conklin, Dorothy Phillips and Norma and Constance Talmadge.

In the preliminary work of this committee the distribution of "trailers" embodying extracts from the speeches and state papers of Lincoln and epigrammatic utterances by Franklin K. Lane and Herbert Kaufman, all the national distributing concerns are heartily co-operating.

Nine thousand trailers are now in circulation attached to 9,000 prominent features, and will be shown in every theatre in the United States whose management is interested in the Americanism movement. The reception given these by audiences everywhere indicates that a popular chord has been struck. The response is immediate and enthusiastic.

Christies to Build Studios for Features on Fifteen Acres of Land Bought Last July

ADDED speculation as to what is to become of the forty acre tract of land lying in the center of the film sector of Hollywood, known as the Beesemeyer tract, has arisen since the discovery that the remainder of the tract, twenty acres of which was recently announced as having been acquired by Al Kaufman, who is planning a big studio, was bought by the Christie Film Company last July, and has been held by Christie since that time as the basis for a big studio.

No announcement had been made by the Christie Film Company until the return of Charles H. Christie to Los Angeles this week, when he stated that the Christie Film Company had been the first to secure a big plot of ground in this forty-acre tract. It is understood that the Christies acquired fifteen acres of ground which includes nearly all of the tract not covered by Kaufman's recent deal.

Realized Need of More Space.

The Beesemeyer tract, which may soon spring up with two large studio centers, lies on Sunset Boulevard between Western avenue and Gower street, the latter corner being the present site of the Christie studios.

Commenting on the land deal, Charles H. Christie said: "We have long realized that when the time was ripe for our entry into the field of big productions we would eventually have to spread out beyond the limits of our block, which we are building up within the boundaries of Sunset, Gower, El Centro and Salem streets. erty is now being built up continually, and at this location we shall continue the production of our already established one and two-reel Christie Comedies. We have decided to cut all production of comedies other than those which bear our name. But the short subjects known as Christie Comedies will require practically all of the space which we now have, with carpenter shops, dressings room buildings and open and closed stages now arranged for.

"The fact that we are going into feature productions on a large scale makes this enlargement necessary. We have always realized that the most successful way to produce big features is to have the sets well segregated and give plenty of space to each producing company.

"The features already arranged for and those which we are negotiating to secure will give us a program of production, beginning in June with "So Long, Letty," which will require the best services of every part of our organization. So we must protect ourselves and have plenty of acreage on which to spread out when the necessity for additional buildings and stages requires our further building."

"Big Four" Lists Sennett's Five-Reel Comedy April 25

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by Hiram Abrams, of United Artists Corporation that the Mack Sennett big new five-reel comedy "Down on the Farm," which had been acquired for release by the "Big Four," would be issued on April 25.

That productions of this type have been hungered for by the leading exhibitors throughout the country is exemplified on every hand through the reports that have been received by Mr. Abrams from the sales managers of all of his branch offices, who have waxed most enthusiastic over the wonderful manner in which this sensational feature comedy has been accepted. Contracts galore have been signed on this production and records for the exceptional number accepted have been made by the United Artists sales department in the short period of time the men in the field have had to acquaint the exhibitors with this product.

"The Flapper" Has 24 Principal Characters.

The cast of "The Flapper," in which Lewis J. Selznick is to present Olive Thomas as star, with tentative release in May, contains twenty-four characters in principal parts. This was made known for the first time this week in an announcement from Myron Selznick, head of production of Selznick pictures, in which the characters and the players were named. Olive Thomas is cast in the part of Ginger King, and the role of her father, Senator King, is taken by Warren Cook.

Universal Branch Managers Convention Agrees on "Plain, Open-Faced Policy"

THE Universal branch exchange managers for the eastern district were assembled in New York City early last week for an important pow-wow to consider plans for the Universal fall sales campaign. The convention had for its purpose an attempt to get the exhibitor's point of view, through the territorial manager, before establishing new policies for the coming season. Similar conventions will be held in other sections of the country. The second, in Chicago, will begin Sunday, March 28.

The New York meeting was the most enthusiastic gathering of Universal men ever held. The assembled branch exchange managers represented the most important centers in the United States, and each gave voice to cheerful accounts of Universal popularity.

Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges, presided at all meetings of the film men, held at the Universal office and at the Hotel Astor. They greeted with enthusiasm his announcement that Universal plans to mould its ideas of the fall campaign with the policies of the country's exhibitors. The exchange managers, being in close touch with the exhibitors, were solicited for information as to what the exhibitor likes and wants. Upon this information, all new Universal plans will be based.

Exhibitor Desires Guide Policy.

The discussion revealed that Universal does not intend to set any new and questionable precedents in the film world or to promulgate any new "wrinkles," but is projecting a plain, open-faced policy calculated to give the exhibitor what he wants.

The main business of the conference was transacted in the Universal offices on Sunday, the opening day of the convention. The exchange managers in rotation were given the floor and pumped for their ideas. E. H. Goldstein, general sales manager, warmed up the meeting with a red hot sales talk.

All phases of the Universal product was discussed with a view to possible improvements, every brand being taken up in its turn. The serial subject came in for an unusual amount of consideration. Every exchange manager reported extraordinary success with serials, giving as a reason the unusual advantages this form of Universal product extends to the exhibitor, in the way of guaranteed product, advertised stars, protection against competition and advance advertising.

Those Who Attended.

Art A. Schmidt, district manager for the Universal territory east of the Mississippi and north of the Ohio, was the principal out of town man on hand. George Uffner and Charles Rosenzweig, of New York; F. S. Hopkins, of Buffalo; Herman Stern, of Pittsburgh; E. J. Smith, of Cleveland; Louis Baum, of Cincinnati; W. D. Ward, of Detroit; Ralph Abbott, of Indianapolis; Edward Golden and W. H. Hill, of Boston; Vernon Carrick, of Philadelphia; Morris Josephs, of New Haven, and Jules Levy, of Toledo, completed the list of visiting exchange men. Mr. Maurice Fleckles, an official of the Universal Company, also attended.

On Sunday evening, Mr. Berman was host at a dinner at the Hotel Astor for his assembled managers. After the dinner, the entire assembly adjourned to the Broadway Theatre to attend the opening of Priscilla Dean's new picture, "The Virgin of Stamboul." The exchange men were delighted with the picture and enthusiastic over the prospect of selling it.

Paid Respects to Times Square.

Despite the volume of business transacted, the visitors found plenty of time to pay respects to Times Square and other points of interest. W. D. Ward, of Detroit, even hopped a Fifth avenue bus and dashed over to the Hippodrome (via Grant's Tomb, which was just passing astern of him when he realized his mistake).

Louis Baum, Cincinnati's bid for fame, won the leather D.S.C. of the New York engagement. He proved by mouth and by deed that the most "non-consequential" part of the convention was the business conference. He strongly urged that the next convention be held in Charleston, W. Va., where he maintains, there would be no disturbing factors.

The high water mark of the conference was reached in an able speech by Charles Rosenzweig, of the New York office, on how to sell film. He concluded, modestly, with the remark that his knowledge of the picture game extends as far north as the Bronx and as far south as Tenafly, N. J. He was loudly applauded. The visitor who applauded reaped rich reward, later, in the form of Rosenzweig's abundant hospitality.

The convention came to a close about Monday night sometime.

Tourneur Aids Government in Spreading Americanism Through the Picture Screen

MAURICE TOURNEUR has been requested by the Department of the Interior to co-operate with a government plan to spread propaganda for true Americanism through the medium of the screen. He is one of several prominent producers who have been requested to participate in this movement.

"There is much to be done in this country just now," remarked Mr. Tourneur. "The unsettled conditions that always follow great wars must be straightened out, but we are fortunate that in this great crisis we have such a medium as a motion picture screen to carry its message to the people. The Department of the Interior has not suggested what sort of stories it wishes, and as yet I have not fully decided just what sort of a picture I will make for them. It will take a lot of careful study to determine just which phase of life is the best to play on, but I will start work on it right away."

Pacific Signs Eileen Sedgwick.

Eileen Sedgwick, remembered as the blond heroine in the Universal serial, "The Great Radium Mystery," has been signed by the Pacific Producing Company to appear in two-reel westerns. Her first is "Sergeant Hammond of the N. W. M. P.," which was written by Francis Power and will be directed by William Craft. Others in the cast include Joe Moore, George Williams, Robert Kortman and Joe Dickson.

It is a virile story of the great Northwest, with many elements which will make it different from the usual western. It will be released through Universal.

Carpentier Here from France; to Start Work Soon on Robertson-Cole Special

GEORGES CARPENTIER, the idol of France, heavyweight champion of Europe and challenger for Jack Dempsey's crown, accompanied by his bride and his manager, M. Descamps, arrived in New York on March 23 on the French liner La Savoie. The Frenchman came here under contract to work in a Robertson-Cole special, which will be directed by John G. Adolfi and produced by a studio in New Jersey. Work on this super special will soon commence.

A royal welcome was extended Carpentier from the moment that the Customs cutter drew up alongside the La Savoie at Quarantine with its cargo of newspaper reporters and celebrities of the sporting world until the Carpentier party disappeared behind the portals of the fourteen room suite at the Biltmore.

Would he speak a word of greeting to the American press? He would, and said in his attractive broken English and through his interpreter that his one message to America was one of thanks for the assistance that she had so generously given to his beloved "patrie" when she needed it most.

There was no doubt in Georges' mind as to which nation had gone into the world war at the crucial moment. He said: "France realizes the debt she owes the United States and she shall never forget the blood spilled by your valiant sons for the defense of her soil and to save the world from the threat of autocracy."

Georges has a distinguished war record with more than two years of actual service on the fighting front, first in the capacity of a general staff chauffeur, and later as a bomber and observation aviator. Georges was thrice decorated and received several citations for his work over the German lines in an artillery observation plane during the last assaults against Verdun by Crown Prince Wilhelm's armies. It was after this siege that Carpentier's nerves gave way under the strain of battle duty and he was sent to training camps as an instructor.

Carpentier was met down the bay by Adolfi and John F. Rielley, publicity director for Robertson-Cole. Adolfi, who will be remembered for his work in "The Cavell Case," continued to register silence when asked to give an inkling as to the plot of the story Carpentier is to be starred in. "It will all come out in good time," he smiled as he bundled Georges and Mrs. Carpentier into their auto on the trip from the pier to the Biltmore.

The public interest in the fighting groom and his bride is intense.

Industry's Donation to Y. W. C. A. Fund Is Set at $15,000; Drive Now Under Way

THE sum of $15,000, the share of the $1,500,000 campaign of the Y. W. C. A. for funds in New York apportioned to the motion picture industry to raise, should be easily attained if the vigorous efforts of the committee in charge meet with deserved response. The committee has the indorsement of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Under the chairmanship of Rose Tapley plans are rapidly materializing for a thorough canvass of the studios and exchanges in New York. Miss Tapley has systemized the work by the appointment of captains for each corporation, in most cases the wife of some prominent member of the organization. These captains meet each day at the Y. W. C. A. luncheons at the Commodore.

Two benefit performances have been arranged. On Friday, April 2, the big screen production of Edgar Rice Burroughs' story, "The Return of Tarzan," will be shown at a Broadway theatre to be designated later. Numa Pictures Corporation, through Louis Weiss, has shown this courtesy. The corporation will also take charge of what promises to be an unusual street advertising campaign for the performance. On April 3, through the courtesy of Hugo Riesenfeld, a program of screen and dance numbers will be given at the Rivoli Theatre. Mrs.

Martin Coming to New York.

Frederick Martin, manager of publicity and advertising for the Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., distributors of Paramount Arctcraft pictures in Great Britain, will sail for New York with Mrs. Martin on April 10 for a three-weeks' business trip, according to a cable received by E. E. Shauer, of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Mr. Martin will devote his time to a study of film conditions and the methods used by American exhibitors in exploiting Paramount Arctcraft productions in order that the service rendered by his department may be made more useful to British exhibitors.

J. Stuart Blackton has been active in arranging an attractive program that includes Harriet Hoctor and Edward Chalif dancing a Russian mazurka, a toe dance by Zaza Arroyo, Violet Blackton in a number, Petite Coquette and young Charles Blackton in "The Little Horseman." Two of the two-reel Country Life subjects will be the screen portion of the bill. These two entertainments will be given at 9:30 of the two mornings.

The committee in charge of the raising of the fund and working under Miss Tapley's supervision includes Mrs. Frank Wilson, for the Griffith Productions; Mrs. John Flinn and Miss L. A. Wicker, for Famous Players-Lasky; Mrs. Hiram Abrams, for United Artists; Mrs. Hallberg, United Theatre Equipment Supplies; Mrs. Charles Urban, Kineto Company; Mrs. Adolph Zukor, Paramount-Arctcraft; Mrs. Lewis Innerarity, Pathe; Louella Parsons, Morning Telegraph; Grace Wynden-Vail, New York American; Beulah Livingstone, Talmadge Studios; Mrs. Oscar A. Hammons, Educational; Helen Hancock, Exhibitors' Trade Review; Marguerite Jones, Motion Picture News; Anita Loos, Miriam Kurzman, and Mrs. Walter Miller.

Campaign headquarters for the industry are room 12, New York Theatre Building. The Americanism Committee of the Motion Picture Industry of the United States, through Executive Secretary W. A. Ryan, kindly placed its quarters at the disposal of Miss Tapley and co-workers. The drive runs through next week.

Cinematographers Elect.

At a recent meeting in Hollywood of the American Society of Cinematographers the following members were chosen to serve for one year on the board of governors: Joe August, H. Lyman Broening, William C. Foster, Eugene Gaudio, T. G. Gaudio, Frank B. Good, King D. Gray, W. L. Griffin, F. W. Jackman, R. S. Newhard, S. S. Norton, Philip E. Rosen, C. G. Rosher, H. A. Scott and L. Guy Wilky.

The organization, which now has a membership of fifty-seven active cinematographers, also elected the following officers: president, Philip E. Rosen; first vice-president, William C. Foster; second vice-president, L. Guy Wilky; treasurer, Fred W. Jackman; secretary, H. Lyman Broening.

Cosmopolitan Adds to Press Staff.

"We have had our troubles, but I rather imagine we have, to a very great extent, attained many of the ideals we had in mind. In regard to the personnel of our company, I think we have a very great advantage, because there is no divided authority. We Have With Us To-day

Samuel E. Morris, from Oil City

IF you live in Oil City, Pennsylvania, it's most unconventional not to go into the oil business. It violates tradition. As the name implies, oil is the leading industry there. If you give Oil City as your address, people naturally suppose you are interested in oil—they may even think you sell oil stock and shun you accordingly. So if you want to be square with the world and you feel that oil is not your medium, then do the honorable thing and leave Oil City.

That's what Sam Morris did. And he has since risen to a comfortable armchair on the top of the motion picture industry.

"The credit for the move is not entirely due to me," Mr. Morris admits modestly. "My father moved me at the age of 6. But if he hadn't done so, I should have later."

From Oil City, Mr. Morris went eastward to Cleveland, where he went to school and learned that there are many lines of business besides oil. And when he was through school he went to Chicago, where he engaged in the tobacco business. And then he travelled to Europe, Asia, South and Central America, and the incense from Turkish cigarettes followed his trail across two hemispheres.

Obliged Pittsburgh Millionaires.

As Mr. Morris sold tobacco he studied men and conditions. By dealing with men of all nationalities and classes he learned how true it is that people the world over are the same. And the price of goodwill is the same in Paris, France and Paris, Missouri.

Early in his career he decided that of all the geometric designs on the market the most satisfactory one for a business man's coat of arms is the "good old square."

When he returned to his native heath Mr. Morris settled in Pittsburgh. Now Pittsburgh millionaires have to be amused. So, Mr. Morris obligingly went into the amusement business. A survey of the situation prompted, in fact shoved him into the motion picture end of the business.

He became identified with Lewis J. Selznick, who was then organizing the World Film Corporation. He struck his natural gait—which seems to be a walk-away.

Even Office Boys Respect Him.

From salesman and branch manager he soon lifted himself to one of the seats of the mighty. He now holds two of the most responsible positions in the industry. He is vice president and general manager of Select Pictures and general manager of the Republic Distributing Company. And he's the right hand man of Lewis J. Selznick.

He has reached the rarefied atmosphere where pay checks grow large and luscious. Even the office boys treat him with respect.

That he is commander-in-chief of an a good man and started him on his way to success and made him an asset to our business than to create any work of art.

"The realm of business is just as big as you make it—the sky is the limit. However, I am not sure that the possibilities of business would have been revealed to me had I not been associated with a man of such unusual ability as Mr. Selznick. I have only applied his precepts."

New York Outshines Oil City.

"How about Oil City—have you any desire to go back?" he was asked.

"I went back—once," Mr. Morris replied. "I arrived at midnight and stayed half an hour—I walked up and down the railroad platform and looked at the sleeping town and somehow I couldn't feel I had made a mistake in choosing New York."

Many persons in rival producing companies wish Mr. Morris had stayed in Oil City. Lewis J. Selznick is very thankful that he didn't. But if Mr. Morris had decided to stay in Oil City and go into the oil business—well, the troubled waters of some big concern would eventually have been calmed by his presence. Instead of being at the top in the motion picture business, he'd be at the top in the oil business. Wherever he made his start, you could safely place your money on his getting to the top.

Titles for Kaufman Weeklies Given.

Titles for twelve Herbert Kaufman editorials which are being filmed by Lewis J. Selznick as short-reel features are announced by Mr. Selznick. The titles announced are "Little Red Riding Hood," "The Faded Butterfly," "Puppy Love," "Rich Man, Poor Man, Beggar Man," "Easy Money," "The Scarlet Letter," "Society Bad Man," "A Good Fellow," "Dictionary of Success," "Nature's Policeman," "What Next" and "Content."

Directors of the above subjects are John Lopez, Wray Physioc, William Schilling, Philip W. Masi and Burton George. The scenarios were prepared by Merle Johnson.

Moving Picture World is edited with small town showmen especially in mind. The "big fellow" can take care of himself. That's why there are so many easy and practical methods for exploiting pictures in every issue—ways to sell tickets and run a theatre as showmen.

army of salesmen and a super executive is due to his logical application of what appears to be just plain common sense.

"This is the dawn of the home rule in business," he says. "The day of the commercial autocracy is over. A policy that breeds rubber stamp men is as wrong as the Prussian military system. I develop my men and my men develop the business. We're co-operatives."

Business Is His Hobby.

"Business, that is the promotion of business along the lines of humanity and individuality, is my hobby," he continued. "I've passed through the stage of fads and experiments. I used to collect stamps and coins and books and even found myself assembling antiques. But now I find that I care much more for people than for things. I'd rather feel that I had developed

Architect Geare Plans Flat Trajectory for Projection in New Crandall House

By F. H. RICHARDSON

FOR many years the writer has consistently and persistently objected to the way-back, up-high projection room location. He has, times almost without number, pointed out and explained the literally tremendous damage done to the industry by this atrocious procedure. He has taken theatre owners and architects severely to task for the handicap thus placed upon screen results, seemingly without much effect, so far as applies to the East, though the West has given greater heed and has been inclined to follow more along the lines of common sense and scientific procedure.

Illustrative of the almost entire indifference of men who should have studied these matters to better effect, we recently called upon one of the largest exhibitors in New York City. We were invited into his office after a considerable wait, but he remained standing beside his desk, which was as plain a hint as could possibly be given that he did not consider our business as worth devoting much time to. It was a plain "get through quick" hint, and we did not, of course, feel privileged to consume time in setting the matter forth in detail, in all its many phases.

A Question of Importance.

This item is cited as evidence of the fact that even large exhibitors who have many hundreds of thousands of dollars invested, whom one would expect to give close study to matters of such large importance, do not understand that they are important. The man in question did not mean any discourtesy to his visitor personally. He simply utterly failed to grasp the significance of his visit and its importance as applied to his own business. His attitude is that of the eastern exhibitor in general toward this particular thing.

Quite recently, however, we have succeeded in getting what looks like forward action. We published an article in the editorial section a few weeks ago, describing and illustrating our idea of the possibilities of the front-of-the-balcony projection room location. This brought forth the first letter we have ever received from an architect indicative of desire to examine into the possibilities of the balcony location.

Reginald Wycliffe Geare, architect, Washington, D. C., wrote that he was applying an adaptation of the idea to Crandall's Strand Theatre for which he was then preparing the plans, the house to be situated in Cumberland, with a capacity of 1,800 seats.

Objections to the Steep Pitch.

Architect Geare very kindly offered to have made for the Moving Picture World a special drawing showing the details of the room, which offer was promptly accepted, with thanks. It appears herewith.

And now let us examine into the various objections to the up-high, way-back location.

The average exhibitor and architect seems obsessed with the idea that slanting outward of the side lines of the picture is the only evil attendant upon locating the projection room high above the screen. They know that the picture side lines are readily made perpendicular by a very simple expedient, and imagine that once that is accomplished all is well.

This view may be compared with that of the ostrich, which thinks that because his head is buried in the sand his entire body is concealed from view.

The evils resulting from pitch in projection, especially if coupled with a long projection distance (throw), are many and serious. First, there is the slanting side lines of the picture, which is, as before intimated, a minor, easily remedied fault. The remedying of slant in side lines does not, however, correct a very much more serious evil, namely, the distortion in the picture itself and all things contained therein.

Throws Picture Out of Proportion.

Let us take, for example, a picture 16 feet wide. Such a picture would normally be 12 feet high, but let us suppose that by reason of pitch in projection it is 14 feet high—a not at all uncommon thing. We may readily remedy the resulting slant in the side lines, but we will then have a picture 2 feet too high for its width, in consequence of which everything contained in the picture will be taller in exactly that proportion, but not a bit wider if at the top of the screen (provided the picture be 16 feet wide at its top) and decidedly wider if at its bottom.

This means that a man who is normally 6 feet in height will appear to be 8 feet, but with little or no added width at his head and considerable added width at his feet.

Double Distortion Results.

This double distortion applies to every object in the picture, in greater or less degree, according to its location on the screen and its height. As applies to men and women it makes them tall and "skinny," with feet proportionally larger than their head, though this latter is seldom noticeable without a normal figure to compare with. The distortion is especially noticeable and objectionable when figures advance down stage. There is no possible way in which this distortion can be remedied except by reducing the projection pitch or tilting the screen square with the lens, and the latter is in itself highly objectionable.

The distortion is especially objectionable to patrons seated at a heavy angle to the screen, if any such there be. Even with a normal, undistorted picture they, by reason of their location, get the effect of thinness in everything on the screen, which has the effect of making things appear abnormally tall. If we now add actual unnatural tallness caused by projection pitch distortion, then the effect is pretty bad—so much so that the value of the front side seats will be greatly reduced, if not entirely destroyed.

Spoken to on the matter of distortion the average exhibitor is apt to retort: "Yes, I know there is distortion, but the audience doesn't, so what does it matter if there is?"

Influence of Distortion Is Present.

Never was there greater fallacy of reasoning. Having nothing with which to compare, it is quite true that the audience, except for those seated at a heavy angle to the screen, if any such there be, is not actually aware that anything is wrong. But that fact is no proof that distortion is not doing damage, since the general effect is very much less pleasing, as you would readily see and understand were an undistorted picture placed beside the distorted one, and since patronage depends to a very great extent upon the generally pleasing effect of what those who purchase tickets see within the theatre, anything which detracts from the general effect adversely affects ticket sales. As well dispute the proposition that one and one makes two as to question that proposition.

Be it known that distortion is by no means the only evil brought about by the projection room location we are discussing, if, as is usually the case, the "up-high" be coupled with "way-back," which means long projection distance. Where the projection distance (throw) is long certain evils are set up, especially if the condition be aggravated, as it is in nine cases out of ten, by observation ports which are too small and poorly placed.

We make the unqualified assertion that not one man in a thousand has eyes sufficiently telescopic that he can stand 100 feet away from a picture of ordinary, theatre size and tell when it is in the sharpest possible definition—focus. This being true—and it is true, it follows that where the projection room is more than a hundred feet from the screen the picture is seldom in the sharpest possible "focus." True, the projectionist can sharpen the definition by using a good opera glass, but that is a thing he just simply will not do with sufficient regularity to insure 100 per cent. results. He feels that if the management takes so very little interest in high class presentation that it unnecessarily hampers the work by a wretched projection room location, it is not up to him to work under constant strain in an endeavor to overcome the handicap.

Three Factors in Good Projection.

Nor are we able to find much fault with this attitude. We have for many years emphasized three things, viz.: Remuneration sufficient to induce men of real ability and brains to take up projection; decent, healthful working conditions for the projectionist, and the very best service of which the men in the projection rooms are capable in return for the pay they accept. These things we hold to be fundamentally right, and for the best good of all concerned, but before the exhibitor demands high class work from the projectionist he should first show sufficient interest to do everything he can to make high class work possible.

Calls for High Amperage.

And there is still another very serious fault with the up-high, far-back projection room location, in that it usually calls for high amperage and an objective of very long focal length, which sets up a condition in which great waste of light between the aperture and objective is almost inevitable. True, this loss may be somewhat controlled by a special, very carefully planned lens system, but it cannot be entirely eliminated. This loss very often amounts to 50 per cent. of the light which under better conditions would be available at the screen—50 per cent. of the total input wattage. Often it even exceeds 50 per cent. because in the endeavor to get a brilliant screen under atrocious conditions the projectionist boosts his amperage far beyond the limits of common sense.

The only remedy for this condition is the shortening of the projection distance, which would be accomplished by a front of the balcony location.

Short Throw Makes for Sharpness.

The front of the balcony projection room location not only makes possible the elimination of light loss as before set forth, but also it places the projectionist within "seeing" distance of his screen, which makes for added sharpness of definition and generally improved results. And let me say right here that lack of sharpness of definition (focus) is a very serious matter indeed. If you want to know what it does to the eyes, have a stenographer make half a dozen carbon copies and try to read the last one. Of course, the lack of sharpness in a picture is never so bad as it is in the carbon, but any lack of sharpness, no matter how slight, reacts upon the eyes and makes for eyestrain, and the more of eyestrain there is in moving pictures the less satisfactory they will be to the people, hence the less they will be patronized, to say nothing of the eventual injury to eyesight of the people as a whole, as they come more and more to depend upon the moving picture for amusement and education.

Flat Trajectory, Undistorted Picture.

In addition to all this the front of the balcony location gives us a practically level projection, hence to all intents and purposes an undistorted picture. It therefore gives a decidedly more pleasing general result. There can be no possible reasonable argument against this latter proposition.

The usual stock objections advanced as against the front of the balcony location are, first, that seating capacity must be sacrificed. Second, that there will be noise from the room which will annoy the audience. Third, that there will be danger in case of fire, and fourth, that the light ray will be visible to the audience.

Taking up these objections in their order, first, it will not be necessary to sacrifice few, if any seats. But even suppose it were, we would call the undivided attention of exhibitors to the fact that the sacrifice of a reasonable number of seats will prove to be an excellent investment from the business point of view, if such sacrifice serves to make the remaining seats more desirable, hence more valuable. And that this will be the case we do not believe admits of serious doubt.

Room Thoroughly Fireproofed.

Second, the room may readily be so sound-proofed that even that part of the audience seated immediately over it will not be annoyed in the least. Mr. Geare has indicated the method to be employed in his most excellent drawing.

Third, the room will, of course, be of thoroughly fireproof construction, and there is no earthly reason why vent pipes ample to carry away every particle of smoke and fumes from even the most vicious film fire cannot be provided, the same to be, of course, thoroughly insulated for heat. These same pipes, together with proper fresh air intake pipes, will render the room healthful and ideal insofar as ventilation goes.

Generally of Minor Importance.

Fourth, inasmuch as the first ten, fifteen or even twenty feet of the ray, where it is very highly concentrated, will or may be hidden, we think objection four has very little effect, except in houses where the air is heavily filled with tobacco smoke, and even then we believe the good would more than counterbalance the evil effect of the visibility of the ray.

In closing allow us most cordially to thank Architect Geare for his excellent drawing and to commend his enterprise in working out a practical method of utilizing the balcony structure for housing the projection room. Such progressive men should be encouraged, as against those who have, up to this time, utterly failed in the giving of anything tangible in the way of a well worked out, apparently practical plan for projections room location, such as the one under discussion.

Tourneur to Go to Europe but Will Not Produce There

MAURICE TOURNEUR is planning to leave America this fall for an extended trip through England, France, Spain and Northern Africa. His contract with Famous Players-Lasky will expire in time for him to make several productions for the Associated Producers by the end of the summer months, when he expects to take the first vacation he has had in several years.

Mr. Tourneur emphatically states that it is not his intention to make pictures on the other side, and that this country is not only the ideal place for making pictures but the only practical place. "I had a taste of making pictures in Europe before I came to America," said Mr. Tourneur. "Over there it is the hardest thing in the world to get action, as practically all of the actors work in the theatres, and simply make their side money in pictures. For this reason, producers must govern their time to suit the convenience of the theatre managers. If there is a matinee, or rehearsal, off go the actors and the picture producer must stop work until he can get them back."

"It is easy to understand that making pictures under these conditions is almost impossible for a producer who is accustomed to the elaborate methods that are used in this country. The studios, too, are greatly inferior to ours. Their lighting systems are altogether out of the question."

While in London Mr. Tourneur will devote a part of his time in looking for story material for screen interpretation, but the main object of his trip will be to get a much needed rest.

Baker Getting Cast for Next Picture.

George D. Baker is assembling the cast for his next Cosmopolitan picture. The story is "A Whiff of Heliotrope," by Richard Washburn Child, and appeared a few months ago in Hearst's Magazine. Director Baker wrote the scenario himself. In the cast will be Wilfred Lytell, Julia Swayne Gordon, Ben Hendricks, Frank Nelson, and others.

Barrymore Does Amazing Transformation in Paramount's "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde"

By EDWARD WEITZEL

THREE things make the screen production of "Doctor Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" of unusual interest: The weird fascination of the Robert Louis Stevenson story to which he gave the title "The Strange Case of Doctor Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," the remarkable success achieved in the stage version by Richard Mansfield and the appearance of John Barrymore on the silver sheet as the man with the dual personality. Following so close upon the heels of Mr. Barrymore's triumphant first night as "Richard the Third" at the Plymouth Theatre the engagement of the picture at the Rivoli, New York, the week of March 28, will give the admirers of America's foremost tragic actor an opportunity to see him in another part that calls for much of the display of imaginative power, ability to evoke the baser passions of humanity and the sweep of tremendous force as a figure of sinister and malignant intent that is found in his impersonation of the crooked-back tyrant who fought his bloody path to the throne of England.

Changes from Jekyll to Hyde.

When it was announced that the Famous Players-Lasky Company was to screen the Stevenson story with John Barrymore in Mansfield's original dual role my mind traveled back to the night, some thirty years ago, when I first saw the stage version of the play and I recalled with what eagerness I waited for the moment when the actor went through his wonderful transformation before the eyes of the audience from the gentle, high-minded, distinguished appearing Henry Jekyll to the loathsome and inconceivable monster Hyde. The enthralling horror of it remains with me yet.

Then came the moment when the man who had dared to trifle with the mysteries of the unknown could no longer control the evil he had summoned and underwent the change from Hyde to the remorseful scientist before the terrified eyes of his closest friend. The thing was inexplicable. It was all done in full view of the audience. The toadlike form of Hyde with his demoniac features was in front of you and the next instant the haggard face and upright figure of Jekyll took his place.

Columns were written about the tricks used by the actor in making the change.

The articles were wrong. Mansfield relied almost entirely upon his imagination and his readiness in bending it to his will. One writer contented himself with describing the effect the actor created and maintained that Mansfield threw a mist about himself and rose out of it as the other half of his dual personality. One thing is certain: the illusion was complete.

Presto! Change Dr. Jekyll to the Monster Mr. Hyde.

John Barrymore in Paramount's "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde."

John Barrymore's Method.

With a fair knowledge of the wizardry of the camera to strengthen the thought I said to myself it will be well worth while to watch the clever trickery by which the actor, the director and the cameraman will deceive the spectator when John Barrymore makes these changes from one personality to the other. The filming of the picture will show me novel tricks in the use of double exposure and the "fade-in" and "fade-out." So I arranged to learn how it was done.

I saw the scene where Doctor Jekyll drinks the mixture that, he both hopes and dreads, will give him more than mortal power. I felt the breathless intensity and feeling of impending abomination the actor had at his command. I watched his face as the infernal drug took possession of him. I saw the handsome heaven-stamped features of Henry Jekyll change before my eyes and grow rapidly into the leering hell-owned lineaments of the repulsive Hyde. And I saw it done without trickery of any kind. The art of the actor sufficed.

With the genius of his predecessor John Barrymore stood under a strong light and wrought his magic by the aid of his imagination and his mobility of body and countenance. There are later scenes where he has the help of make-up and the slight-of-hand of the camera. But that first change is as amazing as it is convincing. Having shown you that there is no deception connected with his physical transformation, that he can do the thing demanded of him, he does not disdain the aid of skilfully wrought artifice.

Spanish Players in Cosmopolitan Picture.

The entire "Land of Joy" company of twenty-two Spanish players took part in several scenes taken at the Cosmopolitan Studio, 127th street and Second avenue, New York, recently, by Director Robert G. Vignola for his forthcoming Cosmopolitan Production, "The World and His Wife," featuring Alma Rubens. A magnificent Spanish period set comprising a whole mansion with sunken gardens, marble pool, and other rich men's extravagances was constructed at the studio occupying the entire floor space which normally is sufficient to permit four companies to work simultaneously.

Several hundred people were used in this set and the "Land of Joy" company took a prominent part, along with Alma Rubens, Montagu Love, Gaston Glass, Pedro de Cordoba, Charles Gerard. This production is Director Vignola's first picture for Cosmopolitan.

METRO productions just completed at Hollywood studios include May Allison, in "The Cheater"; Alice Lake, in "Shore Acres"; special cast in "The Hope"; Emma Dunn, in "Old Lady 31," and Mitchell Lewis, in "Burning Daylight." Work has just begun on Bert Lytell's "The Temple of Dawn" and Viola Dana's "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath."

Zasu Pitts is finishing at Brentwood studios, in Hollywood, "The Heart of Twenty," a photodrama directed by Henry Kolker.

Clara Kimball Young is busily engaged on another Harry Garson screen production, titled "For the Soul of Raphael." Details are approaching the stage of completion and early announcements of distribution may be expected.

Roscoe (Fatty) Arbuckle has just signed a contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to appear hereafter only in five-reel feature comedy productions as a Paramount-Artcraft star. The number of millions involved are not mentioned.

Ridgewell Cullum's novel, "The Twins of Suffering Creek," has been purchased by William Fox for the purpose of screen presentation. Mr. Fox has assigned the stellar role to William Russell.

"Too Much Speed," the title announced for the latest Paramount-Artcraft picture to be made by Wallace Reid, has been changed to "What's Your Hurry?" The field is still open for a photoplay titled "Take Your Time."

Pittsburgh papers please copy: Charles Hutchison, who furnishes sixty thrills to the minute in "The Whirlwind," was born in Pittsburgh and educated in the University of Pennsylvania.

"The Crucifix of Destiny" is a photoplay, thus far unheralded, that is coming out of Los Angeles to create a promised or, at least, expectant sensation. Pandora Productions is responsible for the work and this film will be first out of Pandora's box.

Gloria Hope has the feminine lead in Owen Moore's third Selznick picture, "A Desperate Hero," which is being made in California under the direction of Wesley Ruggles.

Betty Compson, having established herself as her own "boss," will screen her first photoplay under the title of "The Test." Ralph Lewis, Claire MacDowell, Roy Stewart, Emory Johnson and Betty Schade will be in Miss Compson's support.

Walter Miller and Grace Darmond have been engaged to support Walter McGrail and Leatrice Joy in "The Invisible Divorce." The direction is in the hands of Tom Mills.

"The Rose of Nome" is the attractive title William Fox has fixed upon for his next Gladys Brockwell release.

Sounds like photoplaying a dog show: Mae Murray's Russian wolfhound, "Reno," and George Fitzmaurice's Airedale, "Scotty," are contesting for canine honors in "The Man Who Killed," the Paramount-Artcraft picture which Mr. Fitzmaurice is now directing.

Alice Hollister, star in Kalem pictures of some few years ago, makes her return to the screen in Goldwyn's production of Arnold Bennett's stage play, "Milestones."

Supporting Dorothy Dalton in "This Man—This Woman," the Paramount-Artcraft version of Avery Hopwood's play of the same name on which she is now at work, are Edward Langford, Augusta Anderson, Julia R. Hurley, Charles Lane, Henry J. Carvill, Douglas Redmond and Ivy Ward.

Mary Pickford, having scored one of the greatest successes in her career as "Pollyanna," has begun work on a screen version of "Op o' My Thumb," the stage play Maude Adams at one time presented.

"Dollars and the Woman" is being prepared for the screen, with Alice Joyce the star and George Terwilliger directing. This will be Miss Joyce's first picture as the bride of young Regan, whose father owns the Knickerbocker Hotel, New York—if that is of any interest to you!

John Bowers has been engaged by Realart to become Mary Miles Minter's leading man. Incidentally Realart has coined a "sub-title" for Miss Minter—using her three M's to say "Magic Money Maker." Not bad, eh?

"The Harvest Moon" is shining brightly throughout the world's screen—with pretty Doris Kenyon the star. The class in astronomy may go further—and fare worse, perhaps.

Corinne Griffith has begun photoplaying Forrest Crissey's "Gumshoes 4-B." This was one of thirty stories awarded honors in the recent O. Henry memorial contest conducted by the American Society of Arts and Sciences.

Eugene Walters, author of numerous stage plays of great vogue, has been engaged by Metro to head its staff of eminent authors who prepare, originate or supervise scenarios for the movies.

Two's a Couple—Three's a Multitude.

A Metro trio, showing Maxwell Karger and Viola Dana as friends and Bert Lytell as the outcast.

Charley Ray has started work on his first production under his own direction and management. Sol Smith Russell's "Peaceful Valley" will soon be circulated, with Ray fitted to a part that seems likely to add further to his increasing popularity.

Thomas Meighan and the company making the Paramount-Artcraft screen version of "Civilian Clothes," under the direction of Hugh Ford, went to Baltimore to take exterior scenes at Camp Meade. Scenes were also taken in Cuba.

In "The Toll Gate," the Paramount-Artcraft picture which William S. Hart has recently completed, Anna Q. Nilsson is leading woman.

"Three Gobs," the latest Prizma release, shows the remarkable accomplishments of the navy during the late war and shows how deep sea divers, torpedo experts and aviators are produced in the training school of the navy.

Louis Weiss, of Numa Pictures Corporation, has a little job for some brave animal hunter. He wants to send a man to Africa to select and purchase a number of apes and orang-outangs to be added to the animal family Numa is rearing in New York City. Line forms at the box office.

In "Paris Green," Charles Ray's forthcoming Paramount-Artcraft picture, the star plays a New Jersey country boy who spends forty minutes in the French capital and who on his return is hailed by the home folks as "the best French speaker in the village."

"Indiscreet Wives" is the title decided upon for Metro's next production, with Alice Lake starring. The picture is an adaptation of a stage play by Julie Herne, daughter of the late James A. Herne. Its original title was "An Outsider."

The screen presentation of "The Penalty" will be made by Goldwyn, to be circulated as an early attraction.

"Tillie's Punctured Romance" is going the rounds as a screen revival. In this comedy Marie Dressler, Mabel Normand, Mack Swain, Chester Conklin and the one and only Charlie Chaplin are shown disporting themselves in a day when they were all less famous than now—and they do their best work.

Frank Mayo is a screen star who is getting double publicity and popularity, appearing simultaneously on screens of the world in Universal's "Burnt Wings" and Radin's "Through Eyes of Men."

"The Scar of Shame" gets into picture titles with Lucille De Tar the stellar magnate. Recalls "The Scarlet Letter," somehow.

"Love Without Question," starring Olive Tell, is a photoplay adaptation of C. Wadsworth Camp's novel "The Abandoned Room."

Ora Carew is being film-starred in a dramatic feature called "The Lost Daughter." She will soon be "found" in numerous movie houses.

Mona Darkfather, real Indian star of the screen, is being presented in a version of "Hiawatha" which is said to handsomely visualize the great poem.

Arline Pretty—entirely equal to her name—is being screen-starred in "A Woman in Gray."

Mildred Harris Chaplin, despite rumors of domestic difficulties, is going right ahead with her screen work. She is now preparing "Old Dad," a photoplay worked out from a Woman's Home Companion story.

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

RUBBERNECKING may not be the place for any such—but this is going to be a Sweet Love Story! Page seven hundred and eighty-nine of The Low Down on Literature, in six easy lessons, says: "To write a love story, one must have a well established Love interest."

I've got that—her name is Bessie. She's been in the movies since she was knee high to a grasshopper, and I reckon she's pretty well established by this time.

Remarking further, the book says: "There must be a basis upon which to build the romance—a theme, a Story."

Regarding the subjoined portrait of Edith. Doesn't she look like an interesting theme?

Elucidating some more, the book says: "There must be tenderness and sweetness."

All About a Sweet Love Story.

Finding this ingredient was hard work. I hope Blanche won't be offended by being spoken of as if she were one of the parts of a cooking recipe, but I was forced to make four trips out to the J. D. Hampton studio, where she does her acting, before I found her, and I'm referring to her as an ingredient to get even.

But at any rate I've got all the dope, and, since the love interest is the most important thing about a Sweet Love Story, I'll begin with Bessie.

I've met a mess of stars in my time, but I don't think I ever took part in a more pleasant interview. I hope Miss Love enjoyed it as much as I did.

Bessie doesn't seem to realize that she is a star. She showed none of the symptoms of astraitis, the dreadful malady that afflicts so many of our leading players. She didn't pull a single bit of leading lady stuff all during the time we were talking.

Bessie Talks of All But Herself.

Bessie told me the story of "The Midlanders," her first film under the management of Andrew J. Callahan, who organized a company for her especial benefit and exploitation.

Some stars have a very weak memory and a very vague idea about any part of the play in which they are not the central figure. Bessie was not that way. She spoke about every one else first—about Joseph De Grasse and Ida May Parke, her two directors, and the idea behind the two directors' system; about Curt Rehfeld's fine part of the one-legged captain of a houseboat, and the powerful role played by C. Norman Raymond as John Lindstrom, the captain's fanatical brother, and how Lloyd Bacon plays the part of a country editor to perfection, and about Jack Donovan, the scientific farmer, and Truman Van Dyke, who almost marries her in the play, and Sidney Dean as a judge, and Frances Raymond as the judge's wife; but almost nothing about herself until I asked about Aurelie, the heroine of the story.

By GIEBLER

A Little and Forlorn Orphan.

I wish you could have heard Bessie tell the story. I wish I could describe how little and forlorn she looked when she told about being in the Orphan's Home in New Orleans, and how the expression changed to one of daring at the point where she climbed a wall and followed the Mardi Gras parade and changed again to fear when she got lost, and how she made friends with a dog and got way down on the levee and was taken in by the captain of the houseboat and lived with the outfit with an Indian woman for a companion.

Just a Fifty Per Cent. Bootlegger.

The houseboat owner was a bootlegger, but not a very bad one, Bessie said. "You see he had only one leg," Bessie explained, "and, of course, he couldn't have been a very bad bootlegger, since he only had one boot to bootleg with."

Characters Really Not So Bad.

She was always explaining the characters, and at times apologizing for them. The bad people in the story were not really bad, only misguided, she said, and that part of the story when Truman Van Dyke as the judge's son was ashamed of her before the fine company at a party she had a good word for him by saying that his action was caused by a narrow view bred by inexperience with life.

"After I am on the river for years I go to live with the brother of the bootlegger in a little town. A newspaper there has a contest to determine the most beautiful girl in the county, and I win the prize."

Then Bessie did some more explaining and apologizing.

"It wasn't because I was really good looking, you know," she said with the utmost earnestness. "The whole thing was just a scheme to get subscribers for the paper. They had to give the prize to some one."

The Imagination of Youth.

Up to this time I had not understood Bessie's apologies and explanations, but after this remark I began to understand. The story was all real to her.

The bootlegger was her friend, and she wanted me to understand that he had a heart of gold in spite of his failings, and at that part of the story about the beauty contest she said it was only a circulation building scheme, although that development has nothing to do with the story, because she did not want anyone to think that she thought she was good looking enough to take a medal, just as any modest little girl would do if it had all actually happened.

To Live the Role Is Genius.

I've heard of players living a part while they are going through it—I've seen it done, in fact—but to live an entire story and regard all of its people and all of the circumstances as real as this girl does, well, I suppose that's what we call genius. That's the only name I know for it. But whatever it is I'm glad there are that kind of people in the world, and I'm sorry there are not more of them in the movies. There is certainly a lot of room for a whole lot of that kind of divine afflatus in the films.

Sweet Stuff, by Blanche.

Love Interest, by Bessie.

Blanche Sets by the Telephone Board.

As has been previously explained the sweet-enin' for this tale was hard to find, but when I did find her, well, if you could have seen her sitting there at the switch-board of the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company plugging in and giving parties the parties they wanted instead of parties they didn't want, and saying "Number, please," without pronouncing the last syllable of the first word "bah" instead of "ber," and without gumming up her vocabulary with gum, you would have said, "Isn't that just too sweet for anything," if her name had been Blanche Bitter instead of Blanche Sweet.

Miss Sweet was working in a story under the direction of Henry King, a story about Leonie, a 'phone operator, who is left a legacy by a rich aunt. Mr. King was making the scene where Leonie gets the legacy. Daisy Robinson was playing the part of Ethel, another hello girl, and Leonie's friend.

Baiting a Trap with a Thousand.

Leonie is afraid that the size of the check will give her heart failure or something, and hands it to Ethel to look at first. The check is only for one thousand dollars. This amount looks like a mere bag of shells to Ethel, but it seems a fortune to Leonie.

"There's only one thing you can do with one thousand," says Ethel. "Catch a husband."

After this scene was finished Miss Sweet came out of the set and we went into a hotel lobby and sat down, and she told me more about Leonie and how she spent her thousand in search of a husband. How she would come into the hotel where we were sitting and ask for a suite, and how the clerk would say, "Something at about seventy-five or a hundred?" and how she would ask, "Seventy-five or a hundred, what—month?" And how the clerkly nose would go up in the air as he replied, "No, Madame—day."

A Choice of Two Evils.

"After that I go up in a hydroplane," Miss Sweet informed me.

I don't think Miss Sweet likes the hydroplane idea very much, although she says she has "flown" once or twice—maybe that's the reason. I tried to tell her that it is much nicer falling out of a hydroplane than an airplane because you can't hit a rock when you 'light. But she said that water was just as hard as any rock when you strike it at the end of a fall.

And then Evans Turley, one of the many red-headed actors that infest the colony who was with me, butted into the conversation with the suggestion that she carry along a package of rain water crystals, guaranteed to make the hardest water soft. Turley may be getting something for boosting laundry compounds—but I'll let it go this time.

At any rate I had a very interesting conversation with Miss Sweet, even if we did almost quarrel about how long ago it was since she came out to the coast. I finally gave in. You've got to be polite to a lady.

Come Now to the Storey.

Now after all the Sweet Love stuff we'll get down to the Storey. I don't believe I could have picked a better girl for this part than Edith. If you could have seen her standing there in that beautiful set wearing a perfectly gorgeous gown, her black hair a-shining, her eyes a-snapping, and her lips a-curling in scorn and anger when William Courtleigh tried to kiss her, it being his duty as the rascal of the piece to act that way, you would have said, "My! What a vivid—what a dramatic Storey!"

studios, where Colin Campbell was directing her in "Moon Madness," an Arabian story written by Grubb Alexander. Wallace MacDonald is the leading man, and he was there all dressed up with a long robe and a burnouse, or whatever it is that Arabs wear on their heads, and was a fine contrast to William Courtleigh's spike tails and full dress outfit.

"Moon Madness" is a turgid romance, with the hot hearts and wild passions of the desert, and Miss Storey is just the person for the picturesque part she is playing in it.

Reminiscences of a Reformed P. A.

I think Edith Storey is one of the most striking personalities I've ever met. She is one of the kind of people you remember for a long time, but for that matter I remembered her for a long time before I ever met her.

Once upon a time, before I discovered that I had a rubberneck, I was acting as a press agent for a large theatre in a large city. The boss of the house decided to make a big splash. He booked a film that had been heralded as the big stuff of the year. The star was one of the country's most famous players."

We bought newspaper space in chunks, papered the town with 24 sheets, sent the ushers' uniforms to the cleaner, made the janitor change his collar, put cut flowers in the lobby, and a colored person with white gloves at the curb to open carriage doors, and boosted the price way up yonder!

The program was to be twelve reels—the big smash, a comedy, a scenic and Edith Storey in a film called "The Dust of Egypt." It's a sad story, mates, but Edith ran away with the whole show. "The Dust of Egypt" left the other picture so far behind that we couldn't see the dust.

That's the reason I remembered Miss Storey for a long time before I had the pleasure of meeting her.

Educational Says "Four Times Foiled" Set New Record for Prerelease Showing

A NEW record for pre-release showing in New York of a two-reel comedy is claimed by Educational Films Corporation for "Four Times Foiled," the first of the new C. L. Chester comedies. Educational has just contracted with Mr. Chester for the production of thirteen of these comedies a year.

Without advance announcement in the trade press or exploitation in the daily papers, "Four Times Foiled" was first shown at the Rivoli Theatre during the week of February 22 and given an unusual reception by the audiences. So pleased was Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld that for the first time in his management of the two theatres he sent the same comedy to the Rialto, it being shown at that house during the week of March 14, repeating its success.

Now comes announcement from the Educational offices that "Four Times Foiled" has been booked for seventy days over the Loew metropolitan circuit, including every one of the Marcus Loew Broadway theatres and the principal ones through the city. Although it is almost the invariable rule to play pictures but a single day at Loew's New York theatre, "Four Times Foiled" will be seen there for two days. This means a total run of eighty-four days for the comedy in the principal motion picture houses of New York before it is ready for general release.

While E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of Educational Films, is delighted with the unusual record made by this picture, he declared that it was but a foretaste of the promise of the future.

"As good as this picture is," said Mr. Hammons, "it is not any accidental success. We know that the next of the C. L. Chester comedies will be just as good for it is almost finished now, and we have every assurance that the remainder of this product will come up to that standard. It is with such a guarantee that we will release them to exhibitors.

"We expect to be able to announce in a few days the acquisition of other comedy series which will be in classes quite by themselves. We are seeking the distinctly 'different' things in comedies and we believe that we will very shortly be able to offer a considerable part of the higher quality product. Producers of one and two reel comedies have been quick to grasp the advantage that obtains from having their product distributed by a company that has no concern with the so-called 'feature' subjects and that can offer them a specialization in distribution and exploitation that cannot be expected from companies whose chief concern is with the longer pictures."

Equity Special Sold for Illinois to Circuit Exchange

JOSEPH I. SCHNITZER, general manager of Equity Pictures, announces the disposal of the first Equity special, "Silk Husbands and Calico Wives," for the State of Illinois to the First National Exhibitors Exchange, 110 South State street, Chicago. Negotiations were closed by R. C. Seery, representing First National, who has already arranged early bookings on the Asher Circuit and all Balaban & Katz houses. An extensive advertising campaign commensurate with the dignity of the picture will be inaugurated, with new and unusual methods of exploitation to direct the public attention to the unusual theme of the film.

Reports from the Colonial Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, where the production opened the week of March 21, announce record breaking attendance and increasing crowds. "Silk Husbands and Calico Wives" will open early in April at Harry Crandall's Metropolitan Theatre, with Crandall's entire circuit to follow.

Pioneer Adds Minneapolis to Co-operative Chain, Also Opens Exchange in Cincinnati

THAT Pioneer is making strides which will give it a full hundred per cent distribution in the United States within a short time is indicated by additions to the Co-operative Distribution System which has been built during the past year. The latest addition is the Merit Film Company of Minneapolis, which will take over the Pioneer franchise for the States of Minnesota and North and South Dakota.

The Merit Film Company is managed by F. W. Thayer and is located in the heart of Minneapolis, at 206 Film Exchange Building. Mr. Thayer has been long favorably known to the exhibitors of that section as an independent exchangeman.

The first picture to be scheduled for release in the new office will be "The Long Arm of Mannister," which is said to be one of the biggest successes that the Pioneer has ever handled.

The Pioneer Film Corporation also announces that in southern Ohio and Kentucky its productions will be handled out of the new office just established in Cincinnati. R. E. Kerly, who for the past year has been second in command of the Cleveland office, has been placed in charge of the Cincinnati branch, which will occupy quarters at 532 Walnut street in conjunction with the C. C. Hite Attractions.

The Detroit office has been moved to 302 Joseph Mack Building. A. W. Blankmeyer, who has been in charge, resigned to give his sole attention to his outside interests. It was with regret that the Pioneer home office accepted his resignation. He is being succeeded by Edward Fontaine. The physical distribution of the Pioneer productions will be handled by the Minter United Amusements, the sales force of which will co-operate with the Pioneer representatives.

Arrow Film Announces Changes in Its Staff

DON WALK, formerly of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., has taken charge of advertising and publicity for the Arrow Film Corporation, according to an announcement by W. E. Shallenberger, president. P. B. Dana, who has been in charge of this work in the past, has been advanced to sales manager, and will confine his effort to that branch of the business.

Another acquisition to the Arrow offices is A. C. Novotny, who will be auditor in charge of Arrow accounts. Mr. Novotny was formerly connected with the William L. Sherry Feature Film Company, of New York.

Majority of Territory Sold on Jans Pictures

HERMAN F. JANS, president of Jans Pictures, Inc., who with Franklin Backer, general manager of the company, is now on a tour of the West in the interest of the series of six Olive Tell features, of which "Love Without Question" is the first, has wired his office that seventy-five per cent. of the territory of the United States has been sold on these productions and exhibitors are enthusiastic over the first picture.

In many cities visited by Messrs. Jans and Backer, special trade showings of this picture has been given, and reports which the company have received from exhibitors who attended these showings indicate that they consider the picture lives up to the advance claims made for it. Mr. Jans promises that the succeeding releases will be up to the high standard set by the initial release. The company also says that the second of the series, "A Woman's Business," is now well under way and will soon be ready for cutting and titling. Under the plans adopted by Jans Pictures, exhibitors will be able to take the entire series of six pictures.

Mona Darkfeather Films Adapted from "Hiawatha"

THE series of Mona Darkfeather films which have been booked by the Broadway Theatre, New York, and other first-run houses, and announced by C. B. Price Co., Inc., as being based on the poem "Hiawatha."

"Educational institutions are especially interested in these productions," says Mr. Price, "and many exhibitors are putting on special matinees for children which are endorsed by their teachers. It is a well-known fact that a picture must have entertainment value to a high degree to both entertain and educate, and those familiar with Longfellow know the many dramatic values he put into this work."

Wistaria Productions for Coming Year Will Be Handled on State Right Basis

THOMAS DEVASSEY, secretary of Wistaria Productions, Inc., announces that his company has definitely decided to market all their productions for the coming year on the state right plan.

"I went over the field, and after conference with distributors of big productions found it would be a simple matter to get excellent distribution for 'Why Women Sin,' but believe it will be to our greater advantage to give a production of this magnitude to state right buyers, and in this way help them to make money and expand their field of activity. Only by giving independent exchanges an opportunity to secure these productions will the independent manufacturer keep these exchanges in a position where they can support the independent manufacturer."

"Our policy of distribution seems to have met with general favor among state right exchanges, judging from the number of inquiries among high-class independent buyers. For this reason, we anticipate no difficulty in disposing of the large productions we expect to manufacture in the near future, via this channel," says Jacques Kopfsstein, sales manager of Wistaria.

Burston Considering Psychic Drama.

Louis Burston announces he has under consideration a drama which deals with the psychic as expounded by the leading spiritualists, and believes that the time is ripe for a film which will delve deeper into this subject.

Arrow Presents Feature with "All Indian" Cast

AN unusual photoplay has been obtained by the Arrow Film Corporation, in which every character is portrayed by an Indian. It is called "Before the White Man Came," and is said to be a beautiful love story, filled with exciting events, including a fight between rival tribes and several hand-to-hand encounters.

Arrow announces that the producer was very careful to see that the production is correct in every detail, and the story will prove of especial interest to children. It deals with two rival tribes that become embroiled in war through the love of an Indian princess for the son of a chief of her own tribe. The battles and tribal ceremonies are said to form interesting and thrilling spectacles and the entire production to be one that will appeal to lovers of Indian lore and tradition.

Byron Park Reports Big Demand for "Empty Arms"

BYRON PARK, general manager of Photoplay Libraries, Inc., announces that his company is encountering little difficulty in disposing of rights to "Empty Arms" in the various sections of the United States and Canada. Mr. Park recently returned from a tour of leading western cities.

"We have succeeded in arousing a tremendous amount of interest in 'Empty Arms.' A buyer must have more than the mere purchase price to secure this picture for his territory. He must possess the ability and means to put over 'Empty Arms' in a manner befitting its bigness. It has a tremendous theme, one which lends itself to the most impressive variety of exploitation. I have closed considerable territory and the names of the buyers will be announced within the next fortnight."

Kremer to Make Long Trip in Interest of His Films

VICTOR KREMER, president of the Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., will leave soon for a tour of the state rights exchanges throughout the United States and Canada, in the interest of the five Chaplin comedies which his organization is distributing, together with "Skinner's Dress Suit" and the recently acquired novelty reel, "Screen Smiles."

Mr. Kremer's purpose in making this trip is not only to visit exchanges distributing the Chaplin productions, but to endeavor to dispose of the remaining territory. He will visit Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Cleveland, Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Omaha, Kansas City, St. Louis, Dallas, Denver, Seattle, Los Angeles, Kansas City and Oklahoma City. The five latter territories last named are the only ones now open for the Chaplin comedies.

Christie Company Announces Its First Feature Film Will Be "So Long Letty"

FOLLOWING up his statement made to our Chicago representative, as published in our last issue, Charles H. Christie, on his arrival in Los Angeles, called attention to the fact that "The Smart Aleck," featuring Chic Sale, produced for Robertson-Cole, marked the entry of the Christie Company into the production of films longer than two reels.

"We have already announced the acquisition of rights to 'So Long Letty,' which contains material for a big special picture," continued Mr. Christie. "This will be only one of a number of big features we will make, and production will start in June."

"We believe there is ample room in the market for features of the character we are planning, along the lines of comedy drama, with no particular emphasis on star parts, but with an adequate cast. The feature with Chic Sale is an example, including such members as Colleen Moore, Bob McKim, Walt Whitman, Lydia Yeamans Titus, J. P. Lockney, Bert Woodruff, Colin Kenny and Tommy O'Brien."

"We are looking over the field on both coasts for a cast for 'So Long Letty,' which will be produced under Al Christie's direction. We have an able corps of directors engaged in production of the Christie Comedies, including such men as Scott Sidney, William Beaudine, Frederick Sullivan, Allen Watt and Reggie Morris."

Dana of Arrow Enthusiastic Over State Right Condition

SALES MANAGER P. B. DANA, of Arrow Film Corporation, who has just returned from an extensive trip through the West, is enthusiastic over the condition of the independent market, and the progress made in this field in recent months.

"I have talked to some of the most prominent exhibitors," says Mr. Dana, "and not one has a word to say against the independent system. A year or eighteen months ago there would have been plenty of kicks. They are beginning to realize that there is a financial saving and also a minimum of detail in independent booking, that real pictures can be obtained for much less than have been spending in the past, and that audiences give them the same appreciation as other features."

During his trip Mr. Dana handled par-

Success of "Hawk's Trail" Shows Public Likes Consistency in Plot, Says Burston

BEFORE leaving to attend a convention in Chicago, Louis Burston reported the sales of "The Hawk's Trail," King Baggot serial for Ohio and Kentucky to the David Warner Film Company of Cleveland; Michigan to the Strand Features of Detroit, and Kansas, Missouri and Illinois to the Standard Film Corporation of Kansas City.

"I am especially elated by reports coming in from all quarters where audiences have had a chance to see this serial," declared Mr. Burston, "for the reason that the public seems to specially applaud and praise what I might term the dignity of its story as well as its acting and general presentation."

"I have long been convinced that audiences want something like consistency in plot, incidents and episodes and sincerity in interpretation."

"When I considered starring King Baggot I was warned that this player's standards of acting were too deliberate and refined for what was to me then termed the 'hurly burly' of serial demands."

Reelcraft Names First Two Subjects for Its Schedule

REELCRAFT Pictures Corporation has received word from the Los Angeles studio, that Texas Guinan has completed her first two-reel feature for release on the Reelcraft program, "Fighting the Vigilantes."

Billy West also announces the completion of his first release for Reelcraft, titled "The Artist." This picture was produced at the Hollywood Studio by Mr. West's producing company, headed by himself and Ethel Gibson, who has played leads opposite him in many of his pictures. Reelcraft also has two more producing units in process of organization, which will be announced shortly.

Kremer-Chaplin Comedy Now Showing at Rialto

THE CHAMPION," the two-part Essanay-Chaplin Comedy, has been booked for a showing this week at the Rialto Theatre, New York. This marks the second of the series of Chaplin comedies which Victor Kremer controls to play on Broadway, "A Burlesque on Carmen" having enjoyed a week's run at the Rivoli last month. The showing of "The Champion" at the Rialto is the premier performance in the New York territory.

As announced, plans are now under way whereby "The Champion" will be offered to exhibitors in conjunction with the Athletic Girls Revue. A company of eight girls will execute a series of fencing, boxing and wrestling maneuvers.

"The Jitney Elopement," "Work" and "By the Sea" are now being booked by the Kremer Exchange to various exhibitors as a Chaplin comedy series.

Movie Sales by Tower Film.

Tower Film Corporation reports the following territories sold within the past few days: "Some Nerve" and "Lord Helpus," each single-reel Charlie Chaplin reissues, sold to McDermond Theatre Amusement Co. of Salt Lake, for Idaho and Utah; "Some Nerve," to Tucker Bros. Film Exchange, Oklahoma City, Okla., for Oklahoma, and to M. & B. Distributing Co., Batesville, Ark., for Arkansas.

Consolidated Market for Feature.

Marion H. Kohn, head of the Consolidated Film Corporation, San Francisco, has installed a feature department in his exchange in that city and also in Los Angeles, and announces that his company is now in the market for reels of all lengths.

Carmen Revue Elaborated.

The Carmen Beauties Revue, the girl show, which is being presented in conjunction with Charlie Chaplin's "A Burlesque on Carmen," has been completely revised since its premier. The chorus is enlarged and several specialties added and the show now runs thirty-five minutes.

The new version of the show will receive a route of twenty weeks on one of the leading vaudeville circuits. A special stage setting rich in colorful Spanish atmosphere has also been constructed.

W. H. Productions Announces Sales.

W. H. Productions Co. announce the following sales made within the past few days: "The Straight Road," Bessie Barriscale reissue in five reels, to L. C. Baxley Attractions, Dallas, Tex., for Oklahoma and Arkansas; "Staking His Life," a five-reel William S. Hart reissue, to W. I. Film Service of Indianapolis, for Indiana.

CHICAGO NEWS LETTER

JAMES S. McQUADE

Independent Manufacturers Would Show Preference to Independent Exchanges

JOE BRANDT, of the National Film Corporation, New York, who spent several days in the city recently, was interviewed Monday, March 15, just before leaving for his home city. He announced that all independent manufacturers in the United States had been notified to attend a convention to be held at the Congress Hotel, this city, Wednesday and Thursday, March 24 and 25.

Mr. Brandt stated that the object of this convention will be to determine whether or not it will be possible for independent manufacturers to produce features and short subjects for independent exchanges, with the certainty that these exchange owners can offer sufficient financial inducements to make it possible for independent manufacturers to sell their product to them, instead of accepting the offers made for their product by the large program organizations. This convention will consider carefully the charge of independent exchanges that they are only offered what is left of the independent output, after the big program organizations have had their pick and choice.

The independent manufacturers do not deny that they have favored the large program organizations in the past, because it was impossible for them to continue producing, with the sole object of selling their product to thirty independent exchanges. This plan would necessitate a great waste of money and time, as it offered no certainty of the disposing of their product for the entire country.

Plan to Get Best Productions.

The independent manufacturers hope to be able to formulate a feasible plan at their convention which will enable independent exchanges to secure the best of the output of independent manufacturers, without any greater cost to them than at present, with the assurance that as long as the independent exchanges are financially able to buy their output, these exchanges will have an even chance—and, possibly, the preference—with the large program organizations.

All in Class "A" Called.

In order to insure the best possible results, within the shortest period of time, for both independent manufacturers and exchanges, it was deemed wise to issue a call to all class "A" independent exchanges throughout the country to attend the convention, to be held concurrently with the independent manufacturers' convention. This call has been sent out by J. L. Friedman, president of Celebrated Players Corporation, of Chicago, and he has received replies that each of the following exchanges will be represented:

Federal Feature Film Company, Boston; Chadwick Exchange, New York; Masterpiece Film Company, Philadelphia; Quality Film Company, Pittsburgh; Standard Film Service, Cleveland; Sabini Film Company, Atlanta; Pearce Film Co., New Orleans; Merit Film Company, Minneapolis; Midwest Film Company, Milwaukee; Standard Film Corporation, Kansas City; R. D. Lewis Film Company, Oklahoma City; Crescent Film Company, Kansas City; S.

Frisch Films, Des Moines; Supreme Photoplays Corporation, Denver; Consolidated Film Corporation, San Francisco, and Greater Features Company, Seattle.

Both Sides Well Represented.

It will be seen from this list that the entire country will be represented at the independent exchange owners' convention. The list of independent manufacturers is also thoroughly representative; so that the deliberations of the two conventions, held in separate quarters of the same hotel, will proceed concurrently. Joint meeting or action can be taken at any appointed time by the two bodies, without any loss of time.

It is the opinion of prominent independents, both manufacturers and exchanges, that on the deliberations of these concurrent conventions depend the most important results yet chronicled in the history of the independent movement.

Locklear, Dare Devil of the Skies, Now Has Own Company

ORMER LOCKLEAR, who is at present thrilling picture theatregoers throughout the country by his daring aerial feats in "The Great Air Robbery," a Universal-Jewel production, has now his own company. The new organization, which will be known as Locklear Productions, Inc., was formed Tuesday, March 16, with the following officers: Joseph Brandt, of the National Film Corporation, New York, president; Isadore Bernstein, vice-president and supervising director of productions; Eddie Eckels, of the Capital Film Company, secretary, and S. L. Barnhard, president of the Capital Film Company, treasurer. Mr. Bernstein resigned his position as general manager of the National Picture Corporation to accept his present position with Locklear Productions, Inc.

Ormer L. Locklear.

Film Corporation to accept his present position with Locklear Productions, Inc.

It will be seen that Mr. Locklear's name does not appear in the list of officers, and it is understood that he is leaving the business department of the concern entirely in the hands of his experienced associates.

Locklear has created such intense interest in "The Great Air Robbery" that numerous exhibitors have already placed him high up on the list of big drawing cards. His exploits in the air are not only daring but sensational, and the thrills he creates have a novelty that tends to advertise his name widely. His dramatic work in the film has also won favorable comments.

Will Create Many Thrills.

The Locklear Productions, Inc., has already planned to make productions that will give him great opportunities as a thrill raiser and at the same time provide an atmosphere of artistry and refinement. Isadore Bernstein has already purchased a Randall Parrish story, "The Air Pilot," which will be used in Locklear's first production for the company bearing his name. This book was published in 1913 and is now in its fourth edition.

Joe Brandt is very enthusiastic over the acquirement of his new star and he is equally pleased with the story which has been selected for Locklear's first picture, for the company bearing his name. Distribution arrangements for "The Air Pilot" are already being considered and will be announced later.

Offices in the Consumers Building.

It may be of interest to know that Lieut. Locklear has not confined himself alone to aviation and its thrills. He is a professional swimmer and fancy high-diver, a motor cyclist of note and the winner of numerous medals and cups in boat racing. At the present time he owns and drives the sister machine to Barney Oldfield's Golden submarine, which cost him the round sum of $14,000. However, the doughty Locklear is making it pay for itself in rapid time by his skillful work at the wheel.

The executive headquarters of Locklear Productions, Inc., are in the Consumers Building, Chicago, and the eastern office is in Room 201, at 1600 Broadway, New York.

Harry Rice, who secured Lieut. Locklear for "The Great Air Robbery," has conducted all negotiations concerning Locklear Productions, Inc., and will represent Mr. Locklear's interests for the coming three years.

United's Board of Directors Holds Its Meeting in Chicago

THE board of directors and the officials of United Picture Theatres, Inc., held the regular quarterly meeting at the Hotel Morrison, Chicago, Tuesday and Wednesday, March 16 and 17. It was originally intended to include Thursday in their work, but the officials and several members of the executive committee of the organization were obliged to leave a day earlier than expected, to attend to some urgent business which had been discussed in secret session, the opening day.

Officers Who Were Present.

The officers present were: J. A. Berst, president; Milton Goldsmith, treasurer;

Charles C. Johnson, secretary; David G. Rogers, southern division manager; Alfred Tanzer, special representative; Jack E. O'Toole, manager Chicago and Milwaukee offices, and Herman Hertz, of Los Angeles, assistant treasurer.

It was announced at the opening session that over 2,000 theatres throughout the United States were franchise holders and stockholders of United Picture Theatres, Inc., and that the present rate of growth indicates that the 3,000 mark will be reached in the very near future.

A general discussion concerning new productions was then engaged in and resulted in the mapping out of a series of feature pictures for the next six months that will cost over $1,000,000.

President Berst then announced the first four releases for this year as follows: "The Corsican Brothers," "Women Men Forget," "The Eternal Mother" and "Face to Face," the first featuring Dustin Farnum, the second Mollie King, the third Florence Reed and the fourth a big mystery drama with an all star cast.

Executive Committee Elected.

An executive committee was then elected to act until the next quarterly meeting of the board of directors. The members are Harry Hall, Troy, N. Y.; George J. Schade, Sandusky, Ohio; C. M. McCloskey, Uniontown, Pa.; W. G. Hartford, Pawtucket, R. I., and Leo Brecher, New York City.

The board of directors then discussed the acquisition of the Triangle and Lynch exchanges by their organization and unanimously approved the action of the officers in negotiating and completing the deals. The acquisition of another important distributing company was then advocated, and the officers and the executive committee were invested with full powers to act in the matter, so that an announcement may be made prior to the next quarterly meeting of the board.

President Berst then announced that he had closed a contract which will give United pictures billboard showings in about thirty of the largest cities of the United States, the contract being in force for one year. This had been done to forestall the possibility of finding national advertising billboard space reduced during the ensuing year. The cost of this contract is over $600,000, Mr. Berst stated.

The board of directors then advocated and resolved that every franchise holder of United pay for at least three pictures in advance, recognizing that, in order to compete with the larger companies for the purchase of independent pictures in the open market, a large war chest will be necessary. The directors then set an example, in several instances, by paying in advance for as many as ten pictures individually.

It was the consensus of opinion at this juncture that the theatre owners of the country represented by United, with its 2,000 theatres in various towns throughout the United States, are capable of purchasing pictures of the latest value, from a box office standpoint.

To Open United Trade Boards.

The directors next decided on the establishment of United boards of trade throughout the respective exchange centers, and they immediately proceeded to establish a 100 per cent. representation of United in their respective districts. They are confident that a close community of the theatres throughout the country will be the immediate result.

At one of the closing sessions of this quarterly meeting, attention was drawn to the fact that the common stock of United Picture Productions Corporation, now being traded on the New York curb, had risen sharply while the meeting was in session in Chicago. This, it was declared, was partly due to the heavy buying by the directors of United Picture Theatres, Inc., themselves.

It was freely predicted that at the next quarterly meeting of the board, which will probably be held in Los Angeles, that United Picture Theatres, Inc., will be in a position to furnish the theatres of the circuit three pictures a month, of a standard fully equal in merit to "The Corsican Brothers" and "Women Men Forget."

Those Present.

The following members of the board of directors were present at the quarterly meeting in Chicago: W. H. Linton, Utica, N. Y.; Leo Brecher, New York City; George J. Schade, Sandusky, O.; Harry Hall, Troy and Buffalo, N. Y.; Neil Birk, New York City; Abe Goodside, Portland, Me.; C. M. McCloskey, Uniontown, Pa.; Fred Seeger, Milwaukee, Wis.; W. G. Hartford, Pawtucket, R. I.; W. P. Cuff, Chillicothe, Mo.; I. W. Rogers, Poplar Bluff, Mo.; George H. Hines, South Bend, Ind.; Henry Savage, Boston, Mass.; Thomas Norman, Racine, Wis.; George Monroe, Omaha, Neb.; M. H. Gwynn, Dallas, Tex.; Phil Meyers, Minot, N. Dak.; S. M. Boas, Fall River, Mass.; A. G. Hettesheimer, Cincinnati, O., and H. T. Treffer, Davenport, Ia.

The following exhibitors were added to the board of directors at the opening session of the Chicago meeting: Abe Goodside, Portland, Me.; W. H. Linton, Utica, N. Y.; S. M. Boas, Fall River, Mass., and H. T. Treffer, Davenport, Ia.

Letters of regret were read at the opening session from the following directors, who were unable to attend: Henry Crandall, Washington, D. C.; L. M. Boas, Fall River, Mass.; James Beatty, San Francisco; E. W. Bickert, Boise, Idaho; D. H. Schumann, Pasadena, Cal.; Henry Turner, Missoula, Mont.; L. J. Chamberlain, Shamoken, Pa.; Frank D. Hill, Reading, Pa.; Fred Schaefer, Chicago; H. Gainsboro, Flushing, L. I.; Peter A. Adams, Paterson, N. J., and Gustav Koenigswald, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Carl Laemmle Reassures

Bashful Bewitching Maids

CARL LAEMMLE arrived in Chicago Wednesday, March 17. He stopped several days and then left for Los Angeles, where he will remain from six to eight weeks. He will have entire charge of Universal City during that time.

When seen, Mr. Laemmle announced the signing of Carmel Myers for a long term contract. Miss Myers was formerly a Universal star and had a large following. She is now starring on Broadway, in a big dramatic success, and will reappear on the list of Laemmle notables just as soon as her present engagement expires.

When the writer called on Mr. Laemmle, he was the central figure of a group of Chicago's loveliest girls, who were posing for a flashlight photo. These girls are among the host of entrants in the National Elks Convention Beauty Contest, at present being conducted by the Chicago Herald-Examiner in conjunction with Universal.

"Don't be afraid to get close to me," said the head of Universal, as several of the young women showed signs of bashfulness, at the command of the flashlight men to form a more compact group. Mr. Laemmle's smile was most encouraging and the girls took him at his word, as they beamed back their sweetest.

But there was a big reason why the bevy of bewitching damsels should look their prettiest for Harry Rice, Universal's dynamic publicity man has taken advantage of the Elks' contest to secure the loveliest girl in Chicago for Universal City.

Arrangements have been made that Universal will engage the winner of the contest on a year's contract, at $10,000, to appear in moving pictures at Universal City. Many hundreds of Chicago's prettiest girls are being photographed and reproductions appear in the Hearst dailies, morning and evening.

You Might Think Boston Would Learn But We Still Get the Same Old Black

GENERALLY a person learns through experience, but Boston managers for years have contributed to turn out the rottenest looking dramatic pages to be found in this country. Press work is poor and to make things worse there is a fad for hand lettered and drawn designs, though few large spaces are ever taken in the Boston papers. It seems strange that in the last quarter century no Bostonian has ever thought to use light type faces and outline designs, but apparently it has never occurred to anyone to try this experiment and week after week the evil look-as a matter of fact such a stunt will widely advertise pictures to the public and bring a direct return to the theatres in paying patrons.

Washington Chain Displays Avoid Clashes While Showing Distinction

TOM NORTH, who is now managing director of the Tom Moore theatres in Washington, D. C., sends in some samples of the work of E. G. Evans, his general publicity man. In an effort to get individuality in display for three large houses, Mr. Evans has recourse to a variety of expedients, but we do not ing smudges appear and no one ever seeks to offer a change. Poor presswork seems to be characteristic of most New England prints, and Boston leads the rest. In any other part of the country there would be at least one live wire manager to lead the way to better things, but Boston sticks along with one and two column small spaces printed as black as ink will print and generally loaded with confused lettering and badly drawn sketches and half tones. In the two examples we reproduce from the Boston Globe, we have not picked the worst, merely selecting one drawing and one half tone. The half tone is a stock Paramount cut which has printed well in most papers. Here you can make out Huck's ear and the high light on his nose.

In the Scollay Square the design is in silhouette and does not mud up, but the lettering of the title is poor and runs together because it is only an 85 lines across two columns. We have seen similarly small displays in other papers gotten over, but it cannot be done in Boston though they have been trying as far back as the oldest inhabitant can remember. Where all are so bad it probably does not matter much, but there is a great chance for one man with advertising brains to do something different and for a time stand out on the page like a house afire on a moonless night.

Theatres Combine in Circulation Scheme

PRACTICALLY all of the theatres in Salt Lake City united with the Telegram in a picture players guessing contest. Primarily, it was a circulation scheme for the newspaper with six cash prizes and ticket prizes ranging from two passes good for two each to two different theatres to twelve single admissions to one house. There were thirty-five local awards in all. In conformity with the post office rulings a tie gave each contestant a similar prize.

The contest was staged for nine weeks and in that time the Telegram printed daily the picture of a photoplay star. The persons guessing the largest number took the prizes. To help in the selection, correctness of spelling and neatness of the submission were to have weight in the awards. At first glance it would seem that such a scheme worked only for the paper and that the theatres were held up for the ticket prizes, but particularly like the benday backed display for the Strand. The benday is good, but the cut is too light in tone. It sinks in. A black and white, strong in blacks, to match the boat, would have been better. It is 135 lines across three columns.

The Garden is much better from every angle and takes about 175 lines. The reverse comes up well and no important line in the black is small enough to fade in. The three big names stand out and the rest does not matter. The hand lettered title looks almost like type and a striking cut attractor helps much. It is a very pretty display. A third house is not shown here, but it stands well on the page. There seems to be a tendency in Washington to let each house stand "on its own," instead of grouping them in a single large space. This makes it necessary to make each display work harder than where three announcements are grouped and can unite to dominate the page. With Tom North on the job we look for some good stunt stuff presently. What Tom used to do in the old V-L-S-E exchange was ample, if you remember those happy days.

Chain Houses Use Lightline to Gain Effect of Larger Spaces for Display

SAMUEL SIVITS, of the Rowland and Clark theatres, Pittsburgh, sends in some more of his displays for the Pittsburgh houses, one in line and the other combined line and benday. The three houses take only five lines between them, with the Liberty and Regent getting the better on the display, yet the common combined space stands out better than would a two fives for any one house and by using light line where others seem to prefer the blackest type, Mr. Sivits gets more for his money than do those who run more to black type and overloaded white space. The individual display is not always as strong, but the mass effect gets over.

Tell It With Tents When the Circus Comes

The reproductions are from the engraver's proofs and the half tones do not show as well in the paper, but they get over, for a coarse screen is used, which does not mud easily. We think that mortised type would be much better for the smaller letters, but where so many measures are used it is probably argued that what is lost in legibility is gained in general effect. With the Washington chain houses getting divorces from each other and the Pittsburgh theatres getting better results with combination it seems to be difficult to figure the answer, but the real solution is that the Washington spaces are larger, each house often taking as much as the three Pittsburgh theatres.

Snappy Lines Give Jazz to Program Boxes

GIVING life to program boxes the Palace, Hamilton, Ohio, uses snappy lines at the top and bottom of each box or a comment on the author or producer of the attraction announced in that particular space. Some of the lines have a real selling value and all of them give an appearance of importance to the usually dead spaces. It is a small thing, but it brightens the program wonderfully and it doubles the advertising value of the program.

Johnny Mack Is Branching Out

JOHNNY MACK, of the Hill, Newark, which is not named after our Rambler, but refers to its geographical location, is branching out to fight the other nearby houses. He took a full page in the local paper the other day, which is a good stunt, and put in double attractions—which is not. The trouble is that in his house organ Mr. Mack is pounding so hard on the other fellow that his patrons are liable to argue that he is afraid; which is a bad suggestion to create.

To Get a Novelty Go Ten Years Into the Past

Stanley Chambers Two Pages Shy on "Everywoman" Sheet

STANLEY CHAMBERS, of the Palace, Wichita, Kans., is two pages shy on his special section for "Everywoman." He ran only eight pages as against the usual ten, but he got enough, so he should worry. One thing he got was his advertisement on the front page, instead of on the back, and he dug up a good layout, clean, clear, and decidedly effective. The lower panel tells be better yet. Some of the old black and white stuff would serve to make your patrons realize the difference more acutely than any talk could. Try and dig some old stuff up somewhere and run it as a feature. Don't get the reissues of five years ago, but go back of 1910 if you can. Possibly you can pick up some such stuff.

Open Spaces Get Showing for Titles and Sale Talk

BOTH of these displays from the Adams, Detroit, are good, but that on the right gives emphasis to the value of open display. In the advertisement for "The River's End," the title runs into the cut and is obscured by it. You are more interested in the cut than the title because you can see it more clearly. If the cut interests you sufficiently you get the title, but interest must be won. On the other hand the Talmadge display gives you star and title almost as soon as you get the striking figure of the girl, and you get of the high lights in the play. The other type pimpls each take up a good point and yet while much it said it has the value of open work.

The production was played at the dramatic house instead of the Palace, as has been done with other large features, and all of the eight pages carried stuff about the play. One good idea was the use of extracts from the subtitles run in narrow panels across the top of each page. This is a new and decidedly good idea, for it gives class to every page and there was plenty of material to be found in the titles for seven good extracts. Not all of the advertisers made a direct hook-up with "Everywoman," but they were given every aid when they did in the way of cuts and suggestions and even if Mr. Chambers ran eight pages instead of ten we think that he made up in enterprise what he lacked in page numbers.

It is one of the best of the many special sections gotten out for this play, but Mr. Chambers usually does do things well, and it was to be expected. If you will compare this page with some of the ones lately shown you will see how much better the light space works. Most times Mr. Chambers makes his artist work for the house instead of doing as he pleases, and that is an accomplishment.

Here's an Idea for You

ON his Garfield Theatre program Charles H. Ryan, of Chicago, advertises an oldtime picture show "as it was ten years ago." We don't know where he dug up the stuff, but if you can get hold of a series of the old one and two reels of that day it will be a good thing to put them on your program and make a fuss over them to point up the difference. If you can go further back than that it would that as soon as your eye sees the page as a whole. Of course this story lends itself better to selling talk than the more serious Curwood story. It is snappy and saucy and gives the copy writer plenty of opportunities to get over catchy lines.

This seems to be characteristic of the Constance Talmadge stories, which apparently are put together for the benefit of the press agent, and anyone would fall for "A bit naughty but lively story of a perfectly nice girl who was married to an old fossil so good that the angels had to take him away." The selling talk is almost self-writing, but the big fact is that the single figure and the white space permit the lines to be played up so they will be read. If it is well done, the single figure is by far a better attractor than a scene cut because it leaves more room for the letter press and this holds good no matter what the size of the advertisement may be. The smaller space is $9\frac{1}{2}$ and the larger 11 inches, both across three columns.

Spirited Cut Better Than "Pretty" Design to Pull

THIS five elevens from the Strand, Toronto, is a good example of the value of a spirited drawing for an attractor. The house sends in another larger space in which the horseshoe design is used, but this latter does not possess half the value of this cut because it is merely pretty where this is suggestive of action. There is strength to this drawing which sug-

A Five Elevens from the Strand, Toronto.

The panel to the right of the horse's head gives the selling talk, but the reader approaches this panel already favorably impressed by the cut. He is interested and wants to know, even in spite of the chills and fever, lettering of the star and title. The other design is pretty and artistic, but it lacks the selling power of this display. And it is worth noting that this nearly square space works up much better than the narrow but deeper space used in the other paper. Week after week the result is so nearly always better that we wonder that the Strand does not proportion both spaces alike, since the results are so decidedly evident.

—P. T. A.—

Used the Canadian Angle for "The River's End" in Detroit

BECAUSE Detroit is just across the river from Canada, and because, "The River's End" is a Canadian story, the Adams, one of the Kunsky houses in Detroit, played the Canadian angle across the boards and brought an unusually large patronage from Windsor and other points across the border. More help for the press agent was found in the fact that Curwood used to work on the Detroit papers, and this also served to make business and was played up by Howard O. Pierce and Harold Heffernan.

Much use was also made of a telegram from Marshall Nielan complimenting Detroit on its critical ability in approving his play. This may have appealed to local pride, but it was a rather obvious bait. The advertising was mostly well done, but there is one two column display in which in an effort to get a written paragraph across two cut figures leads to the alternate use of white and black script that is an eyesore. Apart from this the work was very well done from all angles.

Used Fortune Teller for "Should a Woman Tell?"

USING a fortune teller to get interest in "Should a Woman Tell?" the Madison, Detroit, announced "the famous Madame X" in a special single column six. It starts off with the statement that there is many a woman who holds within her heart a secret and that "Mme. X" will give advice upon these secrets at each performance of the story, with the suggestion that only such questions be asked as could be answered publicly. Women were advised not to sign their names to communications, but to preserve their incognito. Probably some few women came in the hope that their doubts would be set at rest and hundreds of others attended, some more than once, in the hope that the replies might be of a sufficiently sensational nature to start a scandal. This is a stunt easily worked, and capable of being built into a tremendous money maker not alone for this but for similar plays.

—P. T. A.—

Overcrowded Advertisement Is Against a Proper Display

TWO fives is not a very large space, at best, and when effort is made to get a four tens display into a quarter of the space, something is bound to get bumped. In this case it is the name of the star. The artist seems to have been more greatly concerned with his design than other merely because it is striking and can be more easily read. That Parkway space is as crowded as a street car in rush hours. It is packed as full of type as the space can stand, as the printer could get it. The very offers a good suggestion in that it is both a display advertisement and a reading notice where a reading notice will do the most good. Display advertisements should largest possible type faces are used for every bank. Probably the compositor shed tears because he had to indent some of the lines. It is all so crowded that the mind gets only the impression of many words and does not stop to read.

In the New display the message is caught at once. This is Katherine MacDonald in "The Turning Point." She seems to be an attractive girl in a pleasant setting, so the smaller paragraphs are read, even if they are in small type. If they are not read the mind has at least received the more important message, which gets over at first glance. Pick up any newspaper and you will find that nine times out of ten the theatrical advertising carries more type face to the square inch than any other display advertising in the paper. Some theatrical pages are almost black with type and some, notably the Boston Sunday issues, are positively hideous, and yet it is not merely the wording which counts. The best advertising is framed to get the message over at a single glance and build up on this with additional argument if interest is gained.

This is the whole philosophy of advertising, and it is more and more understood by commercial advertisers, yet year after year theatrical advertising is pumped so full of type that little gets over. It is better to advertise ten words which are read than one hundred which do not impress.

Put Over a Comedy with a Novel K. C. B. Layout

H. M. THOMAS, of the Rialto, Omaha, casting about for something new with which to advertise "A Twilight Baby" hit upon a good idea in a combination of an open title with a K. C. B. liner talk. It was not so much the style as it was the snappy line of language. It gave him a three thirteens enough out of the ordinary to get everyone laughing—and talking. Almost any new style of advertisement is good for at least once, and there are some new styles still possible, strange as that may seem.

carry little type; no more than a good three nine, but here is an exception to the rule in that a reader is all right if it is just one reader and is not cut into fifteen or twenty display banks. The right hand is pure reader. The left is pure display, so that the house gets double value for the space. An attempt to tell one-fourth as much as the reader contains would have spoiled the advertisement, but making it so clearly a reading notice lifts the curse. It is there for the reader to peruse or not, as it may please him, but the big stuff is so big that he cannot possibly overlook the facts, and there is no dodging.

Why Gove Bought Another Hat Is Here Explained

ABOUT the last word in authorities is supposed to be "The Printing Art," which has passed even "The Inland Printer" as authority in the niceties of the art, and the March issue takes over the four-page four-color display for Realart recently run in this paper and which was planned by Jay A. Gove. That is the reason Gove had to slip out and buy a larger brim for his head, for it is the first recognition the publication has given motion picture advertising. And it was not only that the pages were reproduced, but they were among the six displays to come in for semi-editorial mention out of the many examples the issue contains.

with the advertising value of what he has done. It's a pretty lighthouse and a special wrestling film gets a nice little panel, and there is a good underline for "In Old Kentucky," but Miss Thomas, who for the moment is the most important figure, gets left out in the cold. Anyone who is keenly desirous of learning all about the Olympic's attraction can get the facts through close study, but it does take time and study and this is from a Pittsburgh paper, which suggests that the city reader has not the time to waste.

In laying out the sketch the idea should be to get the star and title over as clearly as the house, and then, if there is room, let in the rest, but the star should show clearly—that is what stars are for, and if their twinkles are dimmed they lose their value to that particular management. We think that Miss Thomas' name will sell better than the very best lighthouse ever drawn, but here the lighthouse has by far the best of it.

Which of These Displays Will Get Your Attention?

THESE two displays from Baltimore are both tens, one a two and the other a three column space. But entirely apart from the matter of width we think that the showing for the New Theatre will get ten times as much attention as the

Condensed Ideas for Busy Men to Read

Had Only Eighteen Seats for Sale for Each Performance of "The Miracle Man"

HOW would you like to start your run with only eighteen seats for sale for each performance of a feature which was costing you big money? Wouldn't it be a grand and g-g-glorious feeling? J. D. Smith, of the Princess, Rockford, Ohio, knows the feeling and he'll say it is. Smith runs a 168 house in a 1,200 town, and he doesn't feel a bit reckless about hiring big films, but he has his nerve with him and he also uses the stuff inside the top of his head to good advantage.

He wanted to run "The Miracle Man," but it was a pretty big rental for a small house and had there been any yellow along his spine he might have figured that perhaps it would rain and spoil business. A rainy night and a big rental bill don't get along well together in a 1,200 town, but Smith thought he knew of a way out, and he went to work.

Teasers First.

First of all he had teasers printed reading "He's Coming. Who? 'The Miracle Man'." These were 14 by 4 inch strips and he got them all over town. It doesn't take long to paste a 1,200 town, but he stayed out an extra ten minutes and made a thorough job of it.

Then he went to the business men and told them what a fine thing it would be to play a big picture occasionally. It would get people out and it would bring them in from the farms, and it would make people think that Rockford was a regular town to be able to show pictures like that. He put it to them on a basis of civic appeal plus the trade advantage they would personally derive.

On one angle or another he sold the merchants 600 seats; at least they guaranteed that much of a sale. As he had four performances and 168 seats, that left eighteen tickets to be sold for each show. That didn't look like a lot, but he didn't want to sting the merchants.

Then He Hustled.

He started in to tell the world. He told it on the front page of the local paper, and he told it on the suburban and the rural chicken coops with posters. He could not afford a lot of posters, but he spread them thin and wide within the fordcars radius of Rockford. The newspaper was not stingy with space because Smith promised to go out and get a double deck hook-up when he had the time, so they told all about "The Miracle Man" until one old woman even came down to see if Smith wanted her to take the miracle man to board when he played the date.

Then Smith got after that double deck. He got after the merchants and sold them space, he wrote their advertisements and read the proof and laid out the dummy and the only reason he did not help on the press work and distribute the papers was because he was busy on other stunts.

A Book Hook-up.

And of course Smith had read "Hook-up with your local bookseller" so he felt that it was up to him to do that little thing and he did. Got the drug store to put in all of six copies and he bought the first copy himself for presentation to the library, where it could be borrowed. Six copies doesn't sound like much of a hook-up, but it was a big thing for the town and it gave him the drug store window.

Then he dressed up the front of the house with a banner and some paper and after that all he had to do was to sell tickets and take them back again and play the piano and pack in the standing room and count up, and rub arnica on his shins where people walked all over him trying to get the last of the standing room.

The Law and the Prophets.

There is a certain size newspaper ad which brings maximum results, any increase in the size of which means a loss to the advertiser in too great expenditures for space, while a decrease in size means a loss through a decrease in patronage.

The efficient advertiser is the one who knows his condition, who knows when to use big space or small space. He is the one who varies his expenditures along with varying conditions—the man who knows how to get good sales arguments in the minimum amount of space with consideration to copy and layout.

—Lem. L. Stewart, Lynch Enterprise.

He wanted a photograph of the crowd, but there was no photographer and the local amateurs could not work a big flash light picture, so the stunt will go down into history unpictured if not unsung, but there is time yet to get a picture of a Rockford crowd for Smith likes the idea and is getting ready to play the rest of the big ones as they come along. He figures out that there is more money in an occasional big one at fifty cents top than in smaller stuff at fifteen cents, and he got the fifty where the nearest large town asked only thirty.

And he did all this in precisely the same way the big town men do it. He worked every possible advertising angle. It's the only way. Smith is just as much "there" as the big town man—perhaps even more so.

Damaged Suitcase Worked as Frame for Enid Bennett

MANAGER HANNON, of the Lynch house in Spartanburg, recently worked a good lobby stunt for Enid Bennett in "The Woman in the Suitcase." He got hold of a damaged suitcase, cut out the side in irregular shape, ran an electric light into the top where it was screened and mounted pictures of Miss Bennett on the back with a dated card. It was simple, but enough out of the ordinary to make much comment.

Six-Sheet Made the Basis for Stunning Lobby Show

NEW ideas for lobby displays are infrequent, but the Strand, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., seems to have dug up something new in an adaptation of a six-sheet to a lobby display, working the lobby stills onto the sheet and getting a compelling attractor which is showy and yet more in harmony with a good lobby than a straight six-sheet would be. This is displayed on an easel frame in front of the house and serves as a combined billboard and lobby frame. The figures and lettering desired are cut out and pasted on the frame, other details are lettered in as may be required and the stills tacked on.

Making Big Ones Out of Little Ones.

Reversing the time-honored practice, the Strand, Wilkes-Barre, makes its lobby displays into six sheets with cut outs from the six sheet lithographs.

It's the IDEA the Words Tell Which Counts

Vitagraph Exhibitors Specialize in Stores to Boom "Big V" Productions

HITTING upon the same publicity idea, two theatres, remote from each other, recently put over Vitagraph plays to good business. One was a comedy and the other a drama, but the idea worked equally well.

The Princess Theatre, St. Paul, played Earle Williams in "The Fortune Hunter," booking for a day and keeping the attraction for a week on the strength of the business they gained with a fake drug store. This was an unusually elaborate display. The Princess has a wide front, but across the entire top was carried the idea of the shelving of a drug store with patent medicines, stock bottles and jars and all of the other things which pharmacies used to have before they were turned into department stores. The display was run down on either side, terminating in a set of drawers.

A small soda fountain with its syrup bottles was placed in the centre, where the box office should be. This was a real fountain, obtained from a dealer in second hand supplies, and a cut-out picture was placed behind to suggest the dispenser.

The whole idea was based on the fact that the star was supposed to get a job in a drug store, and this slight hint led to a business making stunt which stretched a day into a week.

Grocery for Semon.

A more obvious suggestion was a grocery counter for Larry Semon in "The Grocery Clerk." The boxes before the counter were painted in to prevent them from getting in the way, but the packages at the rear of the counter were all real and were supplied by a local agency for the goods shown.

This stunt was pulled by the Rialto Theatre, San Francisco, and was backed up by a large display of paper. Here, too, a cut-out of the star was used for the clerk. The idea is not as extensively carried out as that of the Princess, but it was a corking good stunt and shows that they followed Ruffner with another live wire.

Store fit-ups, where they can be used, are good because they offer an appeal through their unusual placement. You do not look for a drug store or grocery in a picture theatre lobby. When you find one it is sufficiently out of the ordinary to attract more attention than some less familiar window perhaps more curious display.

They are easy to make if you can get the shelving, particularly a grocery or dry goods store, for you can borrow the filling for the shelves. In the cities the agencies handling package groceries can supply the cartons and empty packages used for building window displays. By going to several concerns you can get a wide variety of goods. In the same way the promoters of staple and patent dry goods will be glad to loan sample displays.

Small Town Too.

In the small towns you can make a hook-up with some local store and very possibly get a window to boot by making an identical display in your lobby and in the store window, giving a credit card to the grocer in your lobby in return for a theatre card in the window, plus a few stills or cut-outs.

Very often you can arrange for a sample or a demonstration outfit to work the lobby and make an appeal through the "free samples" angle, which is a never failing drag.

Used Ticket Distribution to Break Ice on Newspaper

DOWN on the Rio Grande, or thereabouts, some of the newspapers are as cordial to the picture theatres as are the wets to the dries. Instead of working in with the theatres, the editors sit up nights until after the paper is off the press to make certain that no free publicity is slipped in after they have passed the forms. Some time ago James C. Quinn, better known as "Jimquin," opened the Rialto there, inventing the "park your —" stunt to get them coming. Then Jimquin got the writer's cramp for a long, long time, but he has come to life again.

He determined to break into the hard-boiled sheets and being ever a modest sort of cuss, he thought the front door would be better than the back, so he got after the front page. He went over to the editor of the Herald, told him what a wonderful picture "The Miracle Man" was and what a hardship it would be did it happen that any man, woman or child in El Paso be denied the chance to see it.

He was so anxious that he was willing to donate his Tuesday afternoon performances to the good cause, and the Herald took a double column box on the front page Saturday and Monday to tell all about it. It was just the old Frank Montgomery stunt, which has been worked time and again. All you had to do was go to the Herald and ask for a ticket, the presumption being that you could not afford the price, and the ticket was handed out. The essence of the idea is contained in this clipping from the box:

Because there are always some who for obvious reasons are temporarily unable to enjoy an event of this kind, and because "The Miracle Man" will not be back here again, and so must be seen now or never, The Herald has secured a block of seats for the performances of Tuesday afternoon at 1 and 3 o'clock, which will be reserved for all those who have wished to see this great cinema production, but have not been able to do so.

So if you are one of this number who cannot afford the price of admission, just drop into The Herald office any time Monday, and up to 3 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, and tell them you want to see "The Miracle Man" at the Rialto. That will be enough. Without any questions or hesitation, The Herald will give you a ticket that will admit you to the performance just as freely as if you paid your money at the box office. Neither The Herald nor Mr. Quinn want it said after "The Miracle Man" has said "Good Bye" to El Paso, that any person who wished to see this masterpiece of the silent art was unable to do so.

And now, having broken the ice, Jimquin is getting ready to go in swimming, and if he doesn't get writers' cramp again we shall hear from him some more.

What Have YOU Done Lately?

It Won't Pay to Wink Your Eye.

That is a drug store soda fountain in the middle of the display for the Princess Theatre, St. Paul, but it is just an advertising stunt and is not working.

This Telephone Idea Can Be Adapted to General Public

THESE cards, which are adapted to fit around the mouthpiece of telephone sets, were used at the recent Exhibitors' Convention at Utica, one being put over each room telephone in the hotels patronized by the delegates. It was the idea of Henry S. Kahn, of the Metro exchange, Buffalo, in whose district Utica lies.

The Telephone Card Used by Metro at a State Exhibitors' Convention.

The text of this card appeals only to film men, but with a change of copy it would be possible to place these on all public phones and in the hotels, as well, although there is a chance that the card will be torn off by the first person to use the instrument. It will at least serve to get the idea over to one possible patron.

Prologue Dancer Doubled with Lecture on Beauty

WILL D. HARRIS, of the Grand, Columbus, O., was one of the many to put on a dancing prologue with "On With the Dance," but Mr. Harris did better than this. He used a professional dancer for the work and on one morning the dancer gave a special lecture on health and beauty to women only. To get all he could out of the stunt, Mr. Harris hooked up the lecture to the Citizen, and the newspaper fathered the scheme and printed coupons which were accepted as tickets of admission. In other words his advertising cost him nothing and he earned the good will of the circulation manager to boot. He also made friends of several hundred women who took in the lecture and went out talking about it.

He Scared the Farmers and Made Them Hustle to Town

BECAUSE he knew that the farmers would hustle their Fords into town if they knew about "Everywoman," G. A. Smith got into conference with Oscar Doob, of the Cincinnati Paramount office, and as a result he sent out envelopes with the face printed in red, "Stop Work Monday." This sounded as though the Grange had called a strike, so every tiller of the soil didn't wait to get away from the mailbox to read all about it. Inside the heralds were printed up, "Stop Work Monday or come after Church Sunday. Here's a picture that will give you something to talk about. Bring the whole family."

And a large percentage of them did.

Lavishly Billed Flooded District to Advertise "Water, Water Everywhere"

BILL posters in boats are not common, but the Goldwyn campaign for the newest Will Rogers picture was inaugurated in the Philadelphia district in Manayunk, and the advertising men just paddled up and down the residential districts bargaining for third-story locations because they were not certain about the second story sites.

"Water, Water Everywhere" was billed to open at the Victoria, Philadelphia, April 12. Last week the usually placid Schuylkill went over the top to the extent of five feet and flooded the residential portions of the town of Manayunk, one of the home suburbs, and hardly had word gotten into the city before the Goldwyn office started men out with a pile of banners.

Rubbing It In.

There were a lot of these in readiness for exhibitor needs, and the office set them all out to the new Venice with instructions to get as many of them up as possible, and it was not long before the town was pretty well plastered with the streamers reading only the three words. With five feet of water in the streets and more in the cellars, the signs very naturally attracted attention, and it was not long before the curious began to call up the local authorities.

They didn't know, either, so they referred the inquirers to the Philadelphia City Hall, and someone there recalled Will Rogers was announced in a Goldwyn play of that title, so the word was sent back, and the town settled down again.

But of course the story got into the Philadelphia papers as live news, and most of the pictures of the flooded district published the following morning included one or more of the signs. It would not have paid to bill Manayunk merely for the benefit of the local residents, but to get played up in two column cuts and layouts in all of the Philadelphia papers in the most important local story of the issue was something real and it got over big.

Forced Itself.

It was scarcely possible to get a good shot at the flood without at least one sign and the appropriateness of the legend brought a laugh which stamped the title on the mind of every reader, not alone in Philadelphia but in every town in the eastern section of the state, for the papers went everywhere and the readers were interested in the news.

It was just a bit of quick thinking which brought rich rewards in the best sort of advertising. We do not know who does the Goldwyn publicity for Philadelphia, but he is certainly on the job right from the jump, for it took quick thinking and quicker action.

Typewriter Hook-Up Window Promotion for "Empty Arms"

SOMETHING new in window dressing has been designed by Martin Jenter, an "ideas" man, for "Empty Arms" in conjunction with the Corona typewriter. The typewriter people have their main office on West Forty-second street, New York, one of the most traveled cross streets in the city, and for four weeks they will give the window to the attraction. The main scheme will be the suggestion of a picture screen with an orchestra in front. On the screen will be shown one of the scenes from the play in photographic enlargement, while at one side will be shown a cut-out of the author, presumably at work on this play, and on the other the script of the production, done on a Corona. Something of this sort can probably be worked with Corona agencies wherever the play may be booked, using stills for the display instead of an enlargement.

You Can Bet They Have Something in Their Cellars.

Do Hook-ups or Scatter Advertisements Give Showmen the Greater Publicity?

MARY R. CANNON, of the Lynch Enterprises, Montgomery, Ala., will probably jolt the hardened hook-up advocates when she comes out flat-footed for scatter advertisements in preference to a double-decker or better, but Miss Cannon says that it worked for her, so she has the proof to show. Of course, there may be testimony in rebuttal, but Miss Cannon at least raises an interesting question and one which it will pay to study from the purely local angle.

And therein lies the rub. The local angle differs. No one may set forth a list of definite rules for advertisers which may not be broken to the profit of some. Perhaps one reason for Miss Cannon's success with the scatters is to be found in the fact that when she sought to get a hook-up she was following an earlier hook-up of a few weeks before. Merchants did not seem inclined to come in, and so she took another approach and suggested a scatter campaign, each advertiser hooking in with a catchline and a cut, if the latter was desired, but selecting his own position.

Lends Variety.

Where a hook-up follows a similar campaign too closely, there is a possibility that the second will lack pulling force for advertiser and theatre alike because of the similarity. The first one was a novelty, the second an old stunt. Generally, a contest will give fresh life to the second hook-up, but contests are bothersome. In such a case the scatter should prove the better appeal.

Miss Cannon found this true, at any rate, as told in the Enterprise Square Dealer, the valuable little house organ edited by Lem L. Stewart, who was formerly publicity man for Triangle. Miss Cannon found the local merchants disinclined to come in on a new hook-up campaign. They had just had one. It worked well, but they were doubtful of the success of another.

She suggested an independent hook-up. The ads ran as they fell, but each carried the "Everywoman" line. As a result she put over the title on the second page, the seventh, twice on the eighth, one on the ninth and another on the back page along with the theatre's own display.

An Appreciable Total.

The house took a three six and a half, with the other advertisers running from three nines to four tens. The total was 205 column inches, on five different pages, and it may be argued that the cumulative effect was as good as the mass effect of a double page. To help along each advertiser was given tickets for prizes for contests, each being framed to suit the individual advertiser and not forming a complete whole. In all, fifty-five tickets were required.

Personally we believe that the mass effect is best where it is comparatively new, but at least Miss Cannon's stunt gives something different for a quick playback, and can also be used for an overflow, as has been in other sections.

And Outside, Too.

Miss Cannon did not limit her hook-up campaign to the newspapers. She also made a canvass of those who did not care to come into the paper and persuaded them to try window hook-ups to run with the newspaper displays, a florist, for example, using a window card which read "When you say it with flowers you speak the language of Everywoman." Dry goods and department stores also came in and the window hook-up was even more valuable than the newspaper space because it was more general.

Merchants Expected Advance in Price for Special Sheet

WITH many managers assuring themselves that their town is too small for a special advertising section or that their merchants will not come in on such a display, it is refreshing to hear from Mrs. B. Koch, who conducts the Novelty at Anthony, Kansas. Anthony is a town of 2,500 and she has a 300 seat house, but she put over a seven page section of a sixteen page special issue of the local weekly and got mention for "Everywoman" in sixty different places, of which twenty-three were special hook-up advertisements of tradespeople, not to mention an "Everyman Week" at the men's clothing store.

And Mrs. Koch writes that she was surprised to find the merchants so interested. She did not fail to land a single man she went after, and so many supposed they would be charged extra rates for this hook-up that she is convinced that she could have bought the space in bulk to sell at a profit. The whole town came in on the display, and Edmund C. Bechtold, the editor of the Republican, took especial pains to see that every advertiser got the best display his force could give it. The ad composition is exceptionally well done for a country paper and compares well with the big city displays.

If Mrs. Koch can put it over in a 2,500 town, what are some of you men kicking about?

Boomed a Film Production Through Clever News Story

TESTING the theory that stories in the news columns of local newspapers can be used for exploitation purposes providing the angle from which the story is written is of broad appeal through its novelty, the Empire Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., has some interesting conclusions.

It was during the showing of Katherine MacDonald in "The Beauty Market," her second production under her contract with First National Exhibitors' Circuit, that the Empire conceived a novel idea for a news story which was worked into all editions of the Montgomery Advertiser.

The story was captioned "Society Scandal Mongers Shatter Beauty's Plans for Winning Rich Wife Seeker." The story was written in a rather clever and bold manner suggesting such events as "lingerie parties in dry times," and "love via the check book route." According to the Empire this account of what might be expected of "The Beauty Market," interested a larger percentage of newspaper readers than could have been aroused through the use of a full-page display ad.

Portala Makes 24-Sheets with Threes and Block Type

GETTING around the handicap of the fact that the 24-sheets supplied by the producers gives only one title, the Portala Theatre, San Francisco, makes its own 28-sheets with a 20-sheet block letter and a pair of threes. This is cheap only where a number may be used, but it is a simple enough matter to make up two or three of these with hand lettering and the threes for smaller houses. The idea is capable of infinite variation.

And here's a little tip. If you want to get paper cheap and your local newspaper runs a web press, you can buy the ends of the rolls very cheaply, and it will serve if you use ink which will not spread too freely.

Twice Three Are Twenty-four.

This may be poor arithmetic, but it is good practice as followed by the Portala, San Francisco, which builds up three sheets with a sixteen sheet block letter bill. It can be done with brush as well as type.

Negro Jazz Band Goes in the Cans with "In Old Kentucky" on the Nebraska Route

YEARS and years and years ago the circus men discovered that the street parade and a ballyhoo on the lot meant business. Then the minstrels profited by the discovery and Al G. Fields 40-count 'em—40 must have hoofed it a million miles. Now the pictures have utilized the discovery and bands of various sorts have been helping to clean up with "In Old Kentucky."

One office books the "original" Whangdoodle Band, and other exchanges have copied the idea, but C. E. Holah, manager of the A. H. Blank enterprises, which holds the First National franchise for Nebraska, is more up to date, and he uses a negro jazz band of five pieces, of whom only three are soloists; perhaps the only negro band in existence in which there are two men who do not want to be soloists, too.

These men are booked with the print as a unit and they have been listed solid until the end of June; which is pretty good booking for a film show.

Breaking the Ice.

The band was broken in at Fremont, Neb., where Bob Wall divides his time between Wall's Theatre and a racing string. He had booked the film before the band idea was developed, but they threw in the darkies to see how the scheme would work.

The opening day there was a parade consisting of the band and six of Mr. Wall's blooded stock: two of them ridden by jockeys in Mr. Wall's own colors. The parade wound up in front of the theatre at two o'clock, with the first performance at a quarter past. The boys played for ten minutes and then went inside. So did most of the crowd. The prices had been run up to seventy-five cents top, but it was announced that there would be a concert in addition to the films, and no one kicked at the price.

Just before the second show the band got out front again and once more played them in again and it worked just as well as it did the first time.

Breaking the Record.

With a new top price it was easy to break a cash record, but the attendance record afforded a better test and this stood comparison with the best. Five performances were given each day, two matinee and three evening showings, and many came a second and third time, because the program was changed if the film was not, and they wanted to hear the new musical selections.

Mr. Wall had gone into the country with his billing, to get all the territory interested, and he needed them, for he was in a 10,000 town and was using the local patrons up too fast to keep up the pace.

Press Work.

Do things that will give your newspapers a chance to talk about your picture. They can't talk unless you give them something to say.

Don't be afraid to spend extra money on a big story. A story has a mass and a class appeal and to eliminate either may prove a costly error.

Keep friendly with the editorial end of your newspapers. Don't trust the advertising department to force stories through the editor. It's a losing game.

Don't fail to play up the story as well as the star, if the story is good, and start early enough to tell your people all about the coming treat.

—Lawrence Beatus, of the Loew theatres, Washington.

Since then the colored performers have been seeing a lot of the scenery and have been blowing themselves black in the face all day and most of the night, and they have been making money for the managers all over that section.

Of course only a few films lend themselves to this form of exploitation, but it works so well that managers now regret that they did not remember the Rising Sun Silver Cornet Band when "Blue Jeans" was put out. That is where the melodramatic-musical hook-up started.

Sayre Paid for Only Seven; Made It Look Like an Eight

GETTING a seven column space instead of an eight is a common stunt in towns where anything goes that has a space bill tied to it, but in cities they are more particular, and J. W. Sayre, of the Jensen and Von Herberg houses in Seattle, put one over lately. He had an idea for an advertisement in four alternate columns and he went down to the advertising manager and asked what it would cost. He did not expect to get it, but he figured that if the ad manager said "yes" he would have it and if the reply was unfavorable it at least paved the way to what he really expected to get. Pretending a disappointment he did not feel, Sayre then asked if he could take seven columns and make three of them look like readers. This was possible, and so the page was set with one column of news, three columns of readers, set in precisely the same news style, and four columns of advertisement as shown.

The Sayre Alternating Advertisement.

It had all of the effect of a full page advertisement, gave the house three columns of readers for some coming attractions and put over the current feature in a way no full page could possibly have done, and the cost was seven columns of space. Mr. Sayre admits that this is a "just once" advertisement, but it is a powerful worker for that once. Used habitually it would be a waste of space, but anything novel is good for one time. Mr. Sayre seems to be looming quite large lately.

Fan Parades Helped to Get Publicity for Two Theatres

BOOKING "In Old Kentucky" at the Strand and Tivoli, San Francisco, for the same date turned up a novel and unexpected form of publicity. Both houses exploited the film heavily and both drew such crowds that those disappointed in gaining admission to the Strand sought the Tivoli, passing the crowds going from the Tivoli to the Strand. The situation was so odd that the newspapers played it up in humorous stories and helped to increase the crowds at both theatres, for nothing succeeds like success and a crowd will breed a crowd. After a time the crowds saw the light and held their places in line at whatever house they visited first, but it was fine press work while it lasted.

Five, and Only Three Are Soloists.

The Nebraska First National Exchange has the only negro jazz band in captivity, of which only sixty per cent. are soloists. They travel in the cans with "In Old Kentucky."

Weinberg Hooks-up with News Features to Get Valuable Free Exploitation

E. W. WEINBERG, of the Strand, Buffalo, follows a new lead in watching business, and particularly the publishing business, to get free publicity, and he carries this system to the point of sometimes booking in a picture which will work in with a newspaper feature.

The large papers plan much of their feature stuff weeks in advance and Mr. Weinberg makes it his business to find out what they plan to do so that he can hook his current offering to the feature and exchange publicity or switch his bookings to let in a subject which will work better.

To give an example of how the scheme works, he recently learned that the Truth, a snappy local paper, was planning to use a picture of Constance Talmadge shortly. He ascertained the precise date, booked in a Constance Talmadge feature for the following week and exchanged publicity. He announced on the screen all of the preceding week that Truth would have a picture of Miss Talmadge in the next issue, and advised his patrons to buy it. In return the paper ran a caption which announced that she would be seen in "The Virtuous Vamp," her newest play, all of the following week at the Strand.

Followed It Up.

But Mr. Weinberg did not stop there. He took a pocket full of passes and went down the line interviewing the news-stands, explaining that the next issue of Truth was being advertised in his theatre on the screen and suggesting an extra display. Between the business appeal and the passes, the stands blossomed out with Truths on the Friday before the film opened, and as the picture was on the front page it served as a series of billboards for the star. All it cost was some passes, a slide and thought, but the thought counted.

Even where a newspaper will not exchange publicity Mr. Weinberg finds it pays him to hook up with a feature and ride in on the interest created, but it is generally possible to make the editors see that a hook-up will be to mutual advantage and a semi-credit line on a Sunday feature often pulls better than a display advertisement.

Of course, tact must be used. Sunday editors are not going to expose their schedules to every man who comes bustling in with the demand. An approach must be gained and pleasant relations established, but diplomacy will do this, and Mr. Weinberg has built up his connections until now the editors often anticipate his inquiry and suggest that he can come in on a certain story they plan using in a few weeks.

Has the News Angle.

Any story which has a news angle is apt to attract more attention than one offered merely as a play, and, on the other hand, a Sunday feature which can hook in on a photoplay will appeal more strongly to the vast body of fans.

But Mr. Weinberg does not confine himself entirely to the Sunday features. He watches local news events with the same care a city editor uses, and knows what is coming off and often can work in on a big event merely through seeing it coming. Local or even neighborhood celebrations can be hooked in and, as in the case of the Truth hook-up, a story may run for a week on the extra publicity instead of the usual three or four days. "A Virtuous Vamp" ran for an entire week and could have gone to a ten-day run had bookings permitted a further switch to be made.

Keep a Calendar.

Many managers keep a calendar on which they note important holidays. It is possible to amplify this scheme, as Mr. Weinberg has done, and instead of waiting for holidays to occur, to manufacture their equivalents.

Manager Used 75 Press Agents

SOME managers feel they cannot afford even one press agent but J. W. Bowser, of the Strand, Tusculumbia, Ala., recently advertised for 75 and hired them all. As a matter of fact he only advertised for fifty, but the higher number showed up and he set them all to work.

Using the classified columns, he inserted an advertisement for 50 girls between the ages of ten and fifteen for about two hours work after school. This was repeated upon the screen. Some seventy-five showed up at the time appointed and each one was given a card which read:

This is to Certify That—

"THE MIRACLE OF LOVE"

Cosmo Hamilton's Famous Cosmopolitan Magazine Story Visualized will be shown at the PASTIME THEATRE

Friday, Jan. 16th, 1920.

This is a beautiful picture. That I will feel better for having witnessed its presentation, and that if I go to see this picture I will be glad I am living in this beautiful world, where LOVE is better than anything else.

The above consumed about one-half of the card the space below being reserved for spaces for ten signatures.

Each girl was told where to go and was told that the card signed by ten people would entitle her to a pass for a matinee. Not a single girl refused the offered job and so 750 people in Tusculumbia knew all about the play—and told others. It was direct publicity at a cost of one cent a head. That's going some.

Used Ten 24-Sheet Cutouts Instead of the Billboards

ANSWERING the perplexing question of "When is a twenty-four sheet not a twenty-four sheet?" George Schade, of Sandusky, made them into cut-outs instead of pasting them up.

He had booked the Elsie Janis picture, "The Imp," and wanted something original. He called on C. E. Carrier, Select exploitation representative in Cleveland, and together they developed a new idea.

The accompanying cut shows what they did to a few twenty-four sheet posters. They simply used the figure as a cut-out and with a heavy corrugated board backing and props, succeeded in using them as sidewalk bill boards. Ten of these were used during the campaign at a cost of little more than three dollars each. After the paper had been mounted it was given a coating of varnish. The result was a nifty, punchy, and practical ad. The cut-outs were placed on several prominent corners of Sandusky.

The baby tie-up campaign with department stores in connection with this production is said to have been one of the most successful for many months. Twelve windows were obtained and the merchants of the town fairly jumped at the baby clothes idea. Each of the windows of course carried notices of the showing of "The Imp" and Manager Schade was not the only one to profit by the showing of the picture.

The results of this good-sense exploitation was that the theatre records for sixteen weeks was broken in a two-day run. Manager Schade is convinced that exploitation pays.

Because of the color values, the title does not show as clearly in the cut as it did on the boards.

Putting Elsie Janis in the Schade.

Sandusky exhibitor cut out ten twenty-four sheets and sprinkled them around town instead of on the boards, and made more business than the regular displays would have brought in.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Work of Men Discredited

RECENTLY the Minneapolis projectionist union requested that we interview a producer and try to secure the abatement of certain abuses by which the work of the members of the local, so the correspondent said, was rendered dangerous (fire danger) and the men discredited with the public because of the continual breakage of splices in first run film.

"The audience," said the writer, "does not know or understand that the fault is in the film itself and beyond the control of the projectionist. The splices break, sometimes as many as three in a single reel, and we must violate underwriters' rules, law and good sense by opening the lower magazine and taking chances of further damage to the film while it is re-engaged with the film roll, or we must stop the show.

"If the latter alternative is taken both the manager and the audience blame our men."

Union Is Right.

The union is right. The fault lies, we think, primarily in a certain film splicer used by certain studios, which makes a very narrow splice and one which is entirely unreliable. The studios are to blame for having installed such a machine without first thoroughly trying it out under all conditions.

The fault does not lie in the machine itself so much as in the fact that those who operate it never yet have and probably never will operate it exactly as it must be operated in order to make a perfect splice, and such a splice must be perfect, because it has practically no width at all; hence any imperfection, no matter how slight, is a very serious matter indeed.

No Need for Narrow Splice.

But, after all, what is to be gained by such an extremely narrow splice? Certainly nothing at all from the projection viewpoint. In so far as has to do with the projection end of things, there is absolutely no advantage at all in a splice less than one-eighth ($\frac{1}{8}$) of an inch wide. A splice of that width, if properly made, goes through the projector perfectly. There is no objection to it at all on that score, and there is some room for leeway in the matter of imperfection in the splice itself.

But with regard to the complaint itself. We took the matter up with a representative of the producer and what satisfaction we received could have easily passed through the eye of a cambric needle, with ample room to spare. The man we talked with just simply could not see where the projectionist had any rights in the matter at all, and even if, for the sake of argument, the matter of his rights be granted, it was his place to take up his grievance with the exchange manager. That was the sum and substance of the arguments presented by the representative of the producer.

We are unable to understand such a viewpoint at all. First and foremost, two things seem to answer the exchange end of it fully, viz.: It is a well known, well recognized fact among projectionists that, save in the case of an occasional exceptional exchange manager, it is one of the most useless things imaginable for the projectionist to take up matters pertaining to poor condition of film with an exchange.

In fact, it is likely to cause the exchange

QUESTION BOOKLETS.

We have two paper covered booklets containing 150 questions designed as a guide to study. They indicate what the projectionist should know.

Either booklet, postpaid, twenty-five cents; both, forty cents. United States stamps accepted; cannot use Canadian stamps.

THE LENS CHARTS.

Are You Working by "Guess," or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens charts (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) are in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

manager to make a more or less strenuous attempt to get the projectionist in wrong with his employer or even have him discharged. Such instances are not at all uncommon.

It may well be understood that the exchange manager who is poor enough business man, or dishonest enough to send out "service" which has been paid for as service, but which cannot be used until it has been constructed into service by repairs, will not welcome criticism or fault-finding by a projectionist. In the second place, these narrow, machine-made splices are not the fault of the exchange, but of the producer himself, hence the complaint logically should be made to him.

The Queer Thing.

But the queer thing of it all to us is the fact that a producer does not cordially welcome information, protests, kicks or anything else which shows that his films are unsatisfactory. It would seem to us that the producer would understand so plain a proposition as the one that service which is unsatisfactory to the projectionist must, in the very nature of things, be unsatisfactory to the exhibitor and, in the end, to the public.

This is true because logically the projectionist is not going to give that careful projection of films which give him constant trouble; he is not going to take such pride in the artistic presentation of photographs when he knows that the condition of the films is such that perfect presentation and artistic work is impossible—when he knows that with all the care he can exercise the show is apt to be stopped anywhere from one to three or four times because of conditions inherent in the films and beyond his control. It is but human nature to not feel much interested in the perfect presentation of a thing which the maker thereof has not shown sufficient interest in to put forward in good condition, or rather which the owner persistently presents in poor condition.

Encourage Good Work

In conversation with projectionists of high class theatres I have often found the men more or less discouraged through and by reason of the fact that, no matter how hard they try to give high class service, the union scale is the limit, with no reasonable probability of advancement to higher, better paid positions.

Their complaint centers on the fact that the "union scale" is paid alike to those who strive to excel and to those who expand half their energy watching the clock and counting the hours until quitting time. It is just complaint.

Exhibitors in plenty there are who will tell you, in tones of woe, of their enormous overhead expense. To speak to them of film rental prices is akin to touching a match to powder.

To suggest the raising of projectionist salaries above the union scale brings forth protestations that they are paying too much already; that the men do not strive to excel and are not worth what they already receive.

Often True, But—

Unfortunately this is very often true, but we venture the assertion that it largely is true because of the before-named fact that the ambitious, energetic man who takes pride in his profession and is willing to work hard and study to produce the best possible results for the least possible money is not only paid exactly the same as the sluggard who cares not one single tinker's dam for anything except quitting time and payday, but in addition receives no kindly encouragement from the "boss."

Often and often have I known of men taking a position in charge of projection in a large house, with every ambition to make good and get ahead, only to find that so long as there was a brilliant, constantly running picture on the screen nothing else counted with the manager. If the projectionist proposed improvements in methods, he met only rebuff and the suggestion that all he had to do was keep a picture on the screen.

A few such slaps in the face of ambition and it dies, usually being replaced by a rather pardonable, sulky indifference, apathy and discontent.

Reversing Suggested.

In place of such an insane attitude may I suggest that theatre managers of this type try reversing themselves and encouraging that initiative which makes for ambition, improvement and economical projection room management. This may, in my opinion, best be done by adopting the union scale as a minimum basis, adding to it a bonus system which shall gradually increase with length of satisfactory service.

In making this suggestion let it very clearly be understood that in the matter of wages I heartily approve of two things, viz.: First, adequate payment for service performed. That is the right of the man. Second, the very best there is in a man in return for the pay he agrees to accept.

I have absolutely no patience or sympathy with the man who makes inadequate pay an excuse for slipshod work. If the pay does not suit—is not fair, force the man to be fair if you can, otherwise quit.

Don't try to "get even" with him by slipshod work and shirking, because in so doing you must inevitably injure too many innocent people, such as the audiences, the producer and the artists.

On the Other Hand—

On the other hand the man who offers no incentive to men to excel has small conception of how to get the best value for his money. He has no business in an executive position where he governs the labor of other men in positions of responsibility.

If he does not know that men strive to excel chiefly for three reasons, viz., for greater financial reward, for possible advancement and for appreciation, then he is not the right man in the right place, but a very square peg trying to fit into a round hole, a thing which cannot be done.

I can name theatres which do a business totalling thousands of dollars a day the year round, which balk at offering their projection room force, upon which so very much depends, one single bit of encouragement to excel, either in money or anything else.

They "pay the union scale" for a house of their class, because they have to, and right there they stop. The result is that the men are lukewarm, discouraged and just simply don't do any more than barely sufficient to keep themselves out of actual trouble and hold their jobs.

Nor am I able to find it in my heart to blame them over much.

The management is the party at fault, and very much at fault. It is pursuing a wretched business policy and losing every day ten times enough in waste and patronage because of lack of pep in screen results to slam their projection room force up into the collar with a pull which would eventually bring splendid results. They might even accomplish considerable by a few words of appreciation and encouragement.

Think It Over.

Think it over, Mr. Theatre Manager. The "glory" of working in a big house has long since palled. It never bought much bread and butter anyhow. It is quite possible to "save" a dollar and lose ten in the process, and penuriousness and damp cloth methods with the projection room force is one of the surest ways of doing that very thing.

Give your men encouragement, financial and otherwise, then if any of them fail to respond, tie the biggest you can find to them and do it quick, for be they union or non-union, they are not fit to be in your employ.

This is a refugee camp for orphaned Greek, Armenian and Turkish boys, located about ninety miles from Constantinople, on the gulf of Ismid.

The camp is on a plateau, overlooking one of the beauty spots of the world. At the time it was home to 600 boys from five to sixteen years of age. Reverend F. H. fore just shucks his coat (and shirt too, for the thermometer often reaches the trifling temperature of 120 in the shade), installs his generator, runs his wires, puts up his Power Six, sans motor, etc., all by one's little lone self.

"But let me say that our compensation is far and away above the 'scale,' because no high brow Broadway audience ever gave voice to the genuine, enthusiastic appreciation voiced by those kids, and we feel pretty well repaid when they crowd around after the show, kiss our hands and repeat the only two words of English they know, viz: 'Thanks Papa!' Every United States man is 'Papa' to them.

Projector Manufacturers Take Note.

"I had had considerable road experience before the war, but it took France and this work to convince me, even as an 'Ingersol' convinces one, on the watch question, that most of the parts of a moving picture outfit are, in the last analysis, non-essentials. Proof lies in the fact that we manage to put on a show with very little except the boxes the outfit came in. You may tell Frank Cannock and Nick Power that their respective machines have altogether too many parts.

"And right here let me say that while I was with our army in France I saw reels made of roofing paper, cranks made of discarded horse shoes, takeup belts made of braided shoe strings and on one projector in Bordeaux a lead grocers scale weight for a fly wheel. Man, we grew to be able to make almost any desired thing at the moment's notice, with or without material.

"I wish you might be here, Richardson.

An Attentive Audience.

A portion of the six hundred interested spectators of the screening.

and watch the faces of these kids during a show. You would more than ever realize the fact that in the moving picture we have the greatest agent of civilization the ingenuity of man has yet produced. It is the one thing which overcomes the barrier of difference in languages. Most of these boys can neither read or write.

"The majority speak only Turkish, but the cinema speaks a language they can all understand. They love comedies and the interpreter tells me nothing can convince them that Jane and Katherine Lee actually exist. To them they are angels, or fairies who have been conjured into the pictures.

"When I return I will drop in and show you some photos taken off the beaten tracks of travel. They will interest and stir up the wanderlust which always exists in Old Timers, so take warning.

"Right now I would give my right optic for two things which mean next to nothing to you. One is a nice, juicy, succulent, honest-to-God, porterhouse steak, about two inches thick and just b-u-r-i-e-d in the smelliest kind of smelly onions. The second is this week's issue of the Moving Picture World. Maybe I should reverse the order, but I sure do need 'em both.

"Well, Old Timer, as they say in French, 'Soyez Sage.' If there is anything you want in this end of the world just say so. With all good wishes to your honorable self and to the gang who have paid their dues I am etcetra."

Necessary Unnecessaries.

Man, man, man, what d'ye mean by whetting my desire? Don't I burn up enough gasoline and rubber in this my own my native land every summer, without trying to incite me to wider wanderings?

Yes, I agree that most parts of the modern projector are unnecessary, but they are necessary unnecessaries allee samee. Sure we could get along without them all-right, but so could we get along without 'lectric light, 'n telephones, 'n steamboats, 'n even theatres, but we're everlastingly danged if we think we care to do it.

Nope, brother Southard, simply because we can get along without a thing in emergency is no evidence that it really is non-essential.

Your letter is most interesting and I'll be glad to see you, examine the pictures you bring and have a talkfest with you when you get back to God's country.

Better Service Since Unionization

From Roanoke, Va., comes the following: Roanoke is one hundred per cent. union and E. D. Hiens, owner of several show houses, says the men give better service since organization of Local 55, I. A.

There was quite a fire in Salem recently. seven reels went up in black smoke. The projectors were damaged, but the A. Luther Chocklett Company got on the job and the Grand was open for business next day.

Many new projectors have been installed in this territory recently. A new house is expected to come into existence in Roanoke before long. Roanoke theatre managers are wakening to the fact that they need better projection. H. L. Rockhill has ordered a new screen for his Virginia theatre. The Bijou also recently installed a new screen. Walter Owens manages the house.

Glad to know that Roanoke is still on the map and making progress. Seems to me it is but right that the men should show improvement after organization. Before, when they were non-progressive they only injured themselves individually. Now they do more than that when they fail to deliver the best possible service, for they bring discredit upon the union as well as upon themselves.

And, by the way, what's the matter with Virginia? Are all you chaps sleeping? We haven't heard from Virginia before in Heaven knows how long. Might also add that nearly all the Southern brothers seem to be taking a rest. Wake up and let us hear from you occasionally!

Lens Charts with Simplex

The Precision Machine Company, makers of the Simplex projector, have for some time included the lens charts as a part of the regular Simplex equipment.

This move is progressive. It is evidence that the company proposes to keep its projector right up in the front rank by adopting and including in the equipment such things as are of proven worth.

In future if you receive a new Simplex without a lens chart, immediately demand one. Some inquisitive person probably has removed it to look at it and carefully forgotten to put it back.

You are entitled to a lens chart with your Simplex. See to it that you get it.

Makes His Own Projector

R. A. Brown, St. Louis, Mo., has constructed a home-made projector which he describes as follows:

Some time in the past you published description of a home-made projection machine, which is exactly what I have to offer. Picture shows its appearance.

Made it quite some time ago, but recently I remodeled it into a portable outfit which fits into a case two feet square by one in width.

You will most likely notice the Power Six crank and shutter and the Balopticon lamp-house. It has an Edison intermittent movement, Power Six flywheel, and upper and lower idler brackets and Edison tension springs.

It has the old intermittent idler framing device, with slides cut from 1/8 inch brass, put together with stove bolts. It was made entirely by hand and gives a very good picture. Am now making a camera. Will send photo of it when done, if you care for it.

You are very clever. It is no small task to take a miscellaneous lot of old machine parts and construct an honest-to-gosh projector which will give even a fair screen result. Those open reels look like old times. Glad to give the camera the once over when you have it ready.

Brown and His Projector.

The machine was constructed from a lot of old parts.

From Duluth

From that distinctly live wire, Duluth Local Union No. 509, comes the following, written by Ray L. Brainerd, secretary:

Dear Brother Richardson—In the press of other matters we neglected to send you our sincere good wishes for a continuance of health, prosperity and strength sufficient to continue to wield the pen for the greatest good of the greatest number when new year came around. It is, however, better late than never. It is said that "the mills of the gods grind slowly, but they grind exceeding small," and we are prompted to say that your unceasing efforts are bringing real results, both for projectionists and theatre managers.

There is now a marked tendency toward the things you have so long and so strenuously advocated in the way of equipment and facilities for better work on the part of theatre owners, and, praise be, even a more marked tendency on the part of projectionists to deliver the goods on the screen.

The men of 509 have always been a pretty studious, conscientious bunch and have always recognized the fact that they, like countless others, have oodles to learn and a helluva lot to do before they would be entitled to wear the smile of satisfaction concerning things which altogether too many of the craft are treating as more or less of a joke.

Believe me, F. H., we now have our school, and you had best look to your laurels in a year or so.

False Pretenses.

In a recent issue of the department appeared a letter from Cloquet, Minn., which struck me as being rather funny. Cloquet is twenty-six miles from Duluth. The writer of the letter wanted to know how to hook up a Compensarc to supply two arcs alternately.

While any one of our apprentices should be able to do that stunt after the first period of tutoring, it was not the question itself which struck me as funny, but the fact that the man is sailing under false colors in claiming to have been a member of this local and to have held down the chief's berth in one of our leading houses. Were he what he claims to be surely he would not have needed to appeal to you on so simple a problem.

Cloquet is within the jurisdiction of our local. It has two theatres, modern in every respect, the entire town having been wiped out by the big forest fire. These theatres were built, from the ground up, for the business.

One, the Leb, is owned and managed by L. E. Blessner, who employs Joseph A. Caron as projectionist. Caron's application is now in our hands, enthusiastically indorsed by his manager. The manager of the other house prefers a non-union man because he can get him cheaper.

It was his man who wrote the letter.

No Effort to Unionize.

We have made no effort to unionize the Cloquet theatres, because we well knew that as soon as the effects of the terrible disaster wore off Mr. Blessner would approve of his projectionist, who is himself all right, joining the organization, and the other man will, we think, eventually discover his error.

Anyhow, we intend to see to it that the projection in the Leb is as near perfect as we can make it, in this way proving to all that the M. P. M. O. stands for something worthy of consideration by exhibitors and theatre managers as well as projectionists.

In closing allow me to express best wishes from the membership of 509, and the hope that we may again be honored by your presence in the not distant future.

The Right Sort of Letter.

Now, there is the sort of letter I would like to receive from every local in the I. A.

A man makes false claims affecting their local. They do not abuse him. They treat the matter in a dignified, self-respecting way.

A theatre objects to its projectionist joining the local. Do they get abusive? Do they proceed to violent means? They do not, but instead propose to show the man the error of his ways by causing the competing union projectionist to put on a show that will make the "other fellow" want a union man!

Now, mind you, I do not say this would work under all circumstances. As a matter of fact, it would not. But the fact remains that theatre managers would have a very much greater natural leaning toward union projectionists if union stood for excellence in screen results and high class work in general, as well as more money, which, I am genuinely sorry to say, is by no manner of means always the case.

As to the letter referred to, and its writer, it did no one any harm, and sooner or later such tactics will inevitably react to his undoing.

My compliments to Local Union 509 and to its membership. I have faith in you, gentlemen. You are on the right track and anything I can do to aid you will be a real pleasure.

Don't know when, if ever, I will be able to again visit Duluth, but you may wager your last penny that if I am ever within reasonable distance I'll not pass Duluth up. No, sir, not on your life!

Most Excellent

Art J. Walden, Projectionist, Blytheville, Ark., says:

Dear Friend and Brother—It has been some time since I've written to our department. Just received the Handbook. It surely is some book. I would not accept $25.00 for it if it could not be replaced. I also have the lens chart.

The company by whom I am employed is building a new $75,000 show shop. An expensive pipe organ will be installed and projection equipment to match—in quality, I mean. House will seat 1,400 and will be the finest of its size in the sovereign state of Arkansas.

Black and White Shows.

We have two shows for whites and one, in a small building, for folks of the colored persuasion. When the new theatre gets far enough advanced in construction I will advise the department as to details of the projection end of things.

I noticed some time ago that projectionists were using film instead of slides for union insignia, etc. Am inclosing a frame I use to excellent advantage here. This town is like an oil town when on the boom. Its hotels are jammed with people and rooms at a premium. Population has doubled within the year.

All right, send on your description, with photos, if possible. Mighty glad to know that Arkansas men, or some of them, at least, are keeping up with the procession. Congratulations on the new house and new equipment.

Take my advice and have them make the observation ports twenty-four inches square, covered with plate glass, set at sufficient angle to kill the reflection and with a circular hole twelve inches in diameter in its center. This may seem unimportant to you, but you will be amazed at how much easier your work will be and how much it will improve your screen results. Place this port so that its center will be on a line with your eyes and the center of the screen when you are standing opposite front side of lamphouse door.

Walden's Frame.
Showing Union insignia.

Among Busy Exchangemen

Canadians Taking Kindly to the Idea of Trade Showings

TRADE screenings are becoming the popular feature in moving picture circles throughout the Dominion of Canada. Of late the tendency has been to specialize with a series of trade or private screenings—particularly with "features."

An example of this was seen in the trade showings which were arranged in Montreal, Toronto, St. John, Halifax, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver by the Exhibitors' Distributing Corporation, Toronto, for Brenon's "12:10." These exhibitions occurred practically simultaneously in the cities mentioned, the five Canadian prints of the release being used for the purpose.

Universal Showing "Stamboul."

Announcement is now made by the Canadian Universal Film Company, Ltd., that it has adopted a new policy with regard to trade shows, this plan being started with the introduction of "The Virgin of Stamboul," in which Priscilla Dean is the star. In each of the six Canadian cities where Universal exchanges are established, trade shows have been arranged, these cities being Toronto, Montreal, St. John, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver.

The Specialty Film Import, Ltd., Montreal, has also been making a special drive with trade shows for the Jack Dempsey serial, "Daredevil Jack," released by Pathe. From three to five of the fifteen episodes of the story have been revealed to exhibitors in all important cities of the Dominion and it is announced that double the usual number of prints are being released in Canada so that the serial will get to the people quickly.

Vitagraph's Exhibitor Showing.

That trade shows are becoming more popular among Canadian exhibitors, particularly the independent theatre owners and managers, is evidenced by the increased turnout of trade men at the private screenings in various cities. One of the largest trade gatherings was seen in the Family Theatre, Ottawa, on March 16 for a private presentation of the Vitagraph feature, "The Sporting Duchess," starring Alice Joyce.

Baltimore Exchange Activities

Herman Phillips, exploitation and publicity man for Famous Players-Lasky Company, who has been in Cleveland; where he had a severe attack of the influenza, has succeeded F. W. McClellan to handle the work in the Baltimore territory out of the Washington office. Mr. Phillips has been in the amusement business for ten years and for some time worked in the Keith office in New York City.

H. D. Goldberg Visits Baltimore.

H. D. Goldberg, of New York City, who is acting as special representative for the Selznick News, was introduced to several of the Baltimore exhibitors March 16, by J. U. McCormick, manager of the Select Washington office when the latter accompanied Mr. Goldberg to Baltimore.

Exhibitor Becomes Salesman.

W. F. Harris, who has been in the film business for twelve years and owns the Broadway Theatre in Hopewell, Va., has moved to Baltimore as the representative of the United Picture Theatres, Inc. Mr. Harris also owned the Superior Theatre in Richmond, Va., which was recently sold to the Jake Wells interests in that city. The name of the Superior has been changed to the Odeon.

From Baltimore to Washington.

Clarence Eiseman, well known to the film men of Baltimore, who has represented the Famous Players Lasky Company in Baltimore for several months, has been transferred to the Washington, D. C., office of the company and will be succeeded by Herndon Edmonds, who is also well known in Baltimore.

Mrs. H. M. Williams, wife of H. M. Williams, Universal salesman, and their two children have returned to the home town of Mr. Williams, Bristol, Tenn. For the present Mr. Williams will remain in the Baltimore office of the Universal.

Carl Robinson in Monumental City.

Stopping over in Baltimore on Wednesday, March 17, on his way back to Los Angeles, Cal., Carlyle R. Robinson, personal representative of Douglas Fairbanks, met several of the exhibitors in the Monumental city. Mr. Robinson has been touring the country in the interests of his company. He has been in the film business for a number of years and accompanied J. Warren Kerrigan when the latter made his tour of the United States. Prior to his becoming associated with Mr. Fairbanks, Mr. Robinson was associated with Charlie Chaplin.

Goldwyn Promoting Jack Weil.

Jack Weil, for the past nine months manager of the Seattle World and Republic office, has word of a promotion in store for him. He leaves Seattle for New York on March 25, when he will receive his new assignment. The new Seattle manager is Herbert A. Meyer, formerly of the sales force in San Francisco.

Floyd Lewis Is Appointed

Realart's St. Louis Manager

FLOYD LEWIS, prominently identified with the motion picture industry for more than sixteen years, has been appointed St. Louis manager of Realart Pictures Corporation.

Mr. Lewis is thirty-five years old, having been born in Chillicothe, Ohio, in 1885. His first business experience came early in life when he managed Edwin S. Porter's "Great Edison Train Robbery," a dramatic troupe, on tour through Ohio and neighboring states.

In 1904 he opened the Edisona Theatre in Jackson, Ohio, the first motion picture house in that section of the country. He managed this for several years, when he sold out and started the Dreamland Theatre in Chillicothe. Later he built the Apollo Theatre in the same city.

After operating both these houses for several years he sold out his interest upon receiving an offer from the old General Film Company. He left this company to handle the sales end of Mutual's "Million Dollar Mystery," acting as special representative in the Cincinnati office.

At about this time he met Max Stern, of Columbus, Ohio; Frank Quimby, of Zanesville, and Henry Ham at the Neal House in Columbus, Ohio, and perfected plans for the organization of an exhibitor's league. This was in 1908.

In 1909 Mr. Lewis handled state rights on the first production made by Adolph Zukor for Famous Players. This was "The Prisoner of Zenda." In 1915 he opened the Triangle office in St. Louis.

He was connected with the Triangle company for three years and then formed the Arrow Film Company of St. Louis, an independent booking and state rights concern. He relinquishes active participation in this to accept the office with Realart in St. Louis, succeeding Joseph Desberger, resigned.

Cleveland Exchange Men Active.

Manager E. J. Smith, of the Cleveland Universal exchange, is making elaborate preparations for a screening in the Hotel Winton ballroom of "The Virgin of Stamboul." A special orchestra under the direction of Phillip Spitalny will render the music.

M. H. Hoffman, general manager of the Pioneer Film Corporation, is expected in Cleveland about March 27. He is making a tour of Pioneer exchanges.

Masterpiece Changes to "B. & B."

R. C. Buttolph has announced that, owing to the fact that there is a Masterpiece Film Attractions in Cleveland, he has changed the name of his concern from the New York Masterpiece Company to the B. & B. Film Distributing Corporation.

A new face at the Hy-Art Attractions office, Cleveland, is Harry Kline, who came here from Atlanta.

M. A. Levy, Cleveland manager for Robertson-Cole, has returned from attending a convention of R.-C. managers in New York. He says many important plans were formulated at the meeting and that a series of big announcements would be made soon.

in Big Distributing Centers

Universal Sends J. V. Bryson on Australian Branch Mission

JAMES V. BRYSON, personal representative of Carl Laemmle, was a recent visitor here on his way to Australia where film exchanges will be opened at Sydney, Melbourne and Perth. He expects to be away for about three years and before returning will visit Universal branches in China, Japan, and the Philippine Islands. He is accompanied by H. A. Guerny, an auditor of the company.

E. T. Wakefield, formerly head booker at the Universal Exchange, has gone to Seattle, Wash., to become manager for the Special Pictures Corporation.

Banner Record for Exchangemen.

H. L. Knappen, manager of the San Francisco branch of Select, and E. C. Mix, the newly appointed manager of the Republic exchange, will go to New York shortly to attend the annual Selznick convention. At the end of a recent drive on Selznick stars San Francisco led the twenty-five exchanges in the United States, placing the service in all but three active towns in this territory, of which there are almost three hundred. The new Selznick news has been booked into the California and Imperial theatres.

Murray Hawkins, recently with the Consolidated Film Corporation, is now with the Select office at San Francisco. He was with the Select office at Denver at one time, leaving to join the navy.

H. H. Hicks, until recently with the Vitagraph Company at Los Angeles in the capacity of manager, is now with the American Photo Player Company at San Francisco.

Ray Florine, formerly with Pathe at Chicago, and at one time with Robertson-Cole at New Orleans, is now San Francisco city salesman for the Pathe Exchange.

The Marion H. Kohn Productions has been incorporated at San Francisco with a capital stock of $200,000. The directors are C. J. Lawler, B. E. Smart, G. E. Rose and J. D. Lederman.

Goldwyn's Exploitationist Makes a Hit.

Publicity Manager Rutter, of the Pittsburgh Goldwyn exchange, has succeeded in getting up nifty lobby displays on "The Street Called Straight," which showed recently at the East Liberty Cameraphone and the Blackstone theatres, Pittsburgh. Conspicuous in the displays are some novel cut-outs, arranged in an entirely original manner, which immediately attract the attention of the passerby. Rutter is a stickler for variety in lobby display and he is making himself valuable for Goldwyn exhibitors in the Pittsburgh territory.

Crandall Exchange Prosperous.

The Crandall Film Company has secured the State of Ohio rights for another big production, "Husbands and Wives," featuring Vivian Martin. Announcement will shortly be made of interest to exhibitors of Western Pennsylvania as the Crandall Film Company has secured two more productions for this territory. Manager Finkel reports the outlook for his exchange is indeed very promising.

E. H. Goldstein, general sales manager of the Universal, spent two days in his home town, Pittsburgh, recently. While here he addressed the sales force of the Pittsburgh Universal.

Boosting Selznick News Reel.

Harry Goldberg, special representative for the Selznick News, was a visitor in Pittsburgh recently. He was a guest of Manager Leo. F. Levison, of the local office of the Select Pictures Corporation.

John F. Burhorn, formerly manager of the Pittsburgh General Exchange, was in Pittsburgh several days recently on a state right mission for George Kleine.

W. R. Johnson, assistant manager at the Pittsburgh Pathe, is confined to a hospital with a severe attack of rheumatism.

Penn Service Adds Attractions.

Matthew Teplitz, of the Penn Film Service, Pittsburgh, has added a serial and a D. W. Griffith seven-reel production to his list of releases. The serial, "The Fatal Sign," was directed by Stuart Paton, a master producer of this type of films, and for real action, is said to be second to none. The Griffith production, "The Escape," is practically a new one in the Pittsburgh territory, as it has played only a half dozen theatres here, more or less.

Seattle Exchanges on the Jump.

A branch office for Comedyart has been opened at 2014 Third Avenue, Seattle, by H. L. Wakefield.

Bryan Park, of Park and Whiteside, state righters, is in Seattle to place "Empty Arms."

H. L. Percy, formerly of Moran-Percy Company of Medford, Oregon, is in Seattle where he expects to make some connections soon.

Chehalis Showman "Joins Out."

W. L. Doudlah, who recently sold the Liberty Theatre, Chehalis, is now a salesman for Greater Features, Seattle, and has left on a trip through Oregon and southern Idaho.

Harry Lustig, Western division manager for Metro, is expected in Seattle from San Francisco on his swing around the territory.

A. W. Eden, manager of the Seattle Realart office, is out on a three week's tour of his territory.

Flood Catches "Buck" Taylor.

The annual spring flood in the South Buffalo district this year was so extensive that it took in the home of C. A. Taylor, Pathe manager, with the result that "Buck" played the role of skipper in going to and from his domicile. Donned in hip boots, "Buck" worked all one night in an effort to keep the waters from moving his "domus" into another section of the city.

Colladay Changes from Fox to Realart.

George M. Colladay has left the sales force of the Seattle Fox office to go with Realart. He will have Oregon and southern Idaho as his territory.

Buffalo Exchange Gets Line on the Jack Dempsey Serial

C. A. TAYLOR, Pathe pilot and South Buffalo flood fighter, is in receipt daily of many flattering comments from exhibitors in the territory on the Jack Dempsey serial. One of the recent boosts received by Mr. Taylor was from Samuel Carver, manager of the Family Theatre, Buffalo, who wrote as follows:

"I take this means to thank you for booking me the Jack Dempsey serial, 'Daredevil Jack,' which I started March 4, 5 and 6. Candidly I was somewhat scared by the front page publicity given Dempsey but the crowds that packed the Family more than satisfied me that this really helped the serial.

"I am sorry that I did not book it for a full week. Many thanks for the local cooperation in the form of special exploitation work given by your office. Can conscientiously recommend this big box office attraction to all exhibitors."

Jack Levy.

No wonder "Buck" is happy these days!

Karl J. Sonin has been made sales manager of the local Famous Players-Lasky exchange, according to an announcement by Allan S. Moritz, manager. Mr. Sonin comes to Buffalo from the home office in New York.

Profits by Film Work in War Zone.

Frederick H. Myers, Jr., who has been cashier for over a year at the Fox Film Exchange in Franklin Street, has been promoted by Manager Greenwald to assistant manager. Mr. Myers was in the patent medicine business in Buffalo for several years. He went to France with the Y. M. C. A. where he served eleven months. It was overseas that he got his first film experience, it being his duty with the "Y" to book film for the camps out of Paris. Upon his return from overseas, he entered the Fox office, when T. W. Brady was manager.

Buffalo Exchange Association Switches to Reporting Agency

AT a meeting of the Buffalo Motion Picture Exchange Managers' Association in the Chamber of Commerce it was decided to discontinue the office in the C. of C. building and in the future put all the affairs of the associations into the hands of the Hoy Reporting Agency of New York City. Under this arrangement the local exchange will work in co-operation with New York and Albany, both of which districts are handled by the Hoy Agency.

Warner Bates, who has been executive secretary, will no longer act in that capacity, but will continue as secretary of the Wholesale Merchants and Manufacturers Association. The meeting was presided over by C. A. Taylor in the absence of J. E. Kimberly. It was also decided that the grievance committee of the exchange-men's organization will be glad to co-operate with the same committee of the exhibitors' organization at any and all times in an effort to settle disputes.

Wilkinson Heads Buffalo Association.

Henry E. Wilkinson, manager of the Realart Pictures Corporation Exchange, Buffalo, has succeeded C. A. Taylor, Pathe manager, as secretary of the Buffalo Motion Picture Exchange Managers' Association. Mr. Taylor resigned at a recent meeting of the association in the Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Wilkinson is a former Buffalo exhibitor, having at one time been associated with Joseph A. Schuchert as manager of the Ellen Terry, a neighborhood house on the west side. Mr. Wilkinson took over the management of the local office of Realart when that company was organized last summer.

He opened the Buffalo office at 221 Franklin street, the interior of which he personally planned. Mr. Wilkinson has made many friends in the Western New York territory and Realart contracts are coming in like the Johnstown flood.

Kimberly Leaves Republic, Buffalo.

One of the biggest surprises in Buffalo exchange circles, so far this year, was the news of the resignation of J. E. Kimberly as manager of the local Republic Distributing Corporation Exchange. Mr. Kimberly will leave the Republic employ on April 1. His successor has not yet been named, although several names are mentioned in local film circles as possibilities for the position. Mr. Kimberly was manager of the World Film office here for several years. He has lived in Buffalo most of his life and the World managership was his first venture in the film business. He has not as yet made any plans for the future, he announces.

Realart Week in Salamanca.

J. J. Kingston, manager of the Strand Theatre, Salamanca, N. Y., put on a Realart week, March 15-20, according to Henry E. Wilkinson, Buffalo Realart manager. Mr. Kingston presented Constance Binney in "Erstwhile Susan," and a special three day showing of "Soldiers of Fortune." Quarter page ads were used in the Salamanca papers.

Mr. Wilkinson also announces the signing of a contract with Harold B. Franklin of Shea's Buffalo Hippodrome for the showing of "Erstwhile Susan," for three days, commencing April 8. Unusual interest attaches to the showing of this picture in Buffalo, because it was Marion De Forest, dramatic editor of the Buffalo Express, who dramatized this play for Mrs. Fiske.

Lively Doings at Buffalo Metro.

Henry W. Kahn, genial skipper of the Metro launchings in Buffalo and Western New York, had the great satisfaction of seeing Bert Lytell in "The Right of Way," play both Shea's vaudeville house and Shea's Hippodrome on Sunday, March 21. The picture continued at the Hippodrome Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Mr. Kahn announces the engagement of Roy Smith as a salesman and the promotion of J. C. Rogers from the shipping department to head booker. Al Barnett, formerly with Famous Players-Lasky, has resigned as assistant manager of Metro to take a position with the Famous Sales Company in the Palace Theatre building. Mr. Kahn reports that the new exchange building at 257-261 Franklin Street, will be ready for occupancy in six weeks. Metro, Universal, United, Vitagraph and Republic will have offices in the big exchange.

Florine Joins Buffalo Republic.

O. E. Florine, for the past few years, a member of the Pathe staff in Buffalo, has been engaged by the Republic Distributing Corporation to take charge of the short reel department, according to an announcement by J. E. Kimberly, manager of the office. Mr. Florine is well known in the territory, he having been a Pathe salesman of long standing. He also did publicity work for the local Pathe office.

Exchangemen See Rival's Show.

It was strange coincidence that almost every manager of a big exchange in Buffalo was present at the screening in Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, Tuesday evening, March 16, of Elsie Janis in "A Regular Girl," which was shown the last half of the week at this theatre. Among those present were Allan S. Moritz, George A. Hickey, Henry W. Kahn, Henry E. Wilkinson, P. H. Smith and others. Archie Moses, Select manager, was not there, strange to say.

Getting Ready to Boom "Stamboul."

Frank S. Hopkins, manager of the Buffalo Universal office, journeyed to New York on Sunday, March 21, to attend a meeting of eastern district managers and screenings of Priscilla Dean in "The Virgin of Stamboul," in the Broadway Theatre. Mr. Hopkins is planning a preview trade presentation of this feature in Shea's Hippodrome soon after his return from New York, with the Hippodrome's symphony orchestra accompanying the production.

They're Busy in "Cincy."

Charles Casanave, resident manager of the Robertson-Cole Corporation, Cincinnati, was in New York City attending the convention of the corporation.

Exchange Makes a Move.

The First National Exchange has moved into its new quarters in the Film Building. R. H. Haines, manager, said it will be some time before the office will be completely finished, as poster racks and several partitions will have to be built.

Mark Gates, managing director of Loew's Theatre, Dayton, was a visitor at a majority of the exchanges last week. Before returning to the Gem City he placed several contracts for his chieftain, Marcus Loew.

Going On His Own.

William Honing, exploitation manager of the Cincinnati district of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, has resigned that position to enter the advertising field for himself. Mr. Honing will open an office in a downtown building April 1.

Republic Salesman "Delivering."

The Montana salesman for Republic, W. M. Hughart, is reported sending batches of contracts daily, while the Washington and Oregon salesmen, H. M. Glanfield and Arthur M. Sereth, respectively, are spending a few days in the Seattle office familiarizing themselves with the new releases.

W. C. T. U. Against Sunday Shows.

THE operation of motion picture theatres on Sundays is looked upon with disfavor by members of the Women's Christian Temperance Union at Shelbyville, Ind. Members of the organization are on record as being opposed to the Sunday shows, and discussed plans for starting a movement to bring about the closing of such places. Theatres have been operated on Sundays in Shelbyville for several years.

Indianapolis Will Not Save Daylight.

Motion picture exhibitors of Indianapolis are well pleased over the action of the city council, of which Gustave G. Schmidt, owner of the Crystal and Stratford theatres, is president, in defeating the daylight saving ordinance which was introduced a few weeks ago. The vote against the measure was 6 to 2. Although no organized effort was made by the exhibitors to defeat the measure they felt that its passage would have a tendency to cut down attendance during the summer months, and saw to it that members of the council were fully informed on these facts.

McCormick "An Ace" with the Kids.

About 2,000 boys and girls, carriers of the Indianapolis News, were recent guests of S. Barret McCormick, manager of the Circle Theatre, at a special theatre party. The carriers saw Jack Pickford in "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," and had a lot of fun watching the antics of Harold Lloyd in his newest comedy, "Haunted Spooks." Mr. McCormick is the idol of the city's newswies, and they never leave the theatre without giving several rousing cheers for him. His theatre parties for the carriers of the local papers have become regular monthly events.

Fort Wayne House Remodelling.

For a consideration of $20,000, B. Borkenstein, of Fort Wayne, Ind., has bought the Wells Street Theatre in that city from Edward Hammerle, and has leased it to his son, Alfred Borkenstein, who will assume active management at once. The theatre, which is devoted exclusively to motion pictures, is situated at 1435 Wells street.

Following the purchase, Mr. Borkenstein announced that the building will be extensively remodeled. The complete interior of the theatre will be redecorated, a new fire-proof operating booth will be constructed, and a modern ventilating system will be installed. The remodeling work will not be started for several weeks.

San Francisco Siftings

Strand and Tivoli Exact Opposition.

SOMETHING new in the presentation of moving pictures was offered San Francisco theatregoers during the week of March 14, when both the T. & D. Tivoli Theatre and the Strand Theatre (first run houses) presented Marshall Nielan's production, "In Old Kentucky," featuring Anita Stewart. This idea was originated by L. R. Crook, manager of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, franchise holder for First National pictures, and he arranged with Manager Guy Smith of the Strand to have the picture shown at that house, the exploitation being combined.

Aaron Goldberg to Have New Theatre.

A moving picture theatre with a seating capacity of 1,800 is to be erected at Third and Minna streets at an estimated cost of $85,000, from plans prepared by Architect Albert W. Burgren. This theatre has been leased to Aaron Goldberg, who now conducts a small house on the site.

Contracts for Big Theatre Awarded.

Contracts have been awarded by Loew, Ackerman & Harris for the construction of the Metropolitan Theatre at Market and Taylor streets and work on clearing the site will be commenced at once. Plans for this theatre have been prepared by G. Albert Landsburgh, 709 Mission street.

Powell Street to Have Theatre Again.

W. J. Hughes and H. J. Gosliner have awarded contracts for work in connection with the remodeling of a building on Powell street, near Eddy, which will be transformed into a moving picture theatre. This will replace the Edison Theatre, recently closed.

Theatres Change Hands.

The United Theatre Exchange reports the following recent transfers in theatres: The Washington Square Theatre on Stockton street, San Francisco, to E. Rosenthal and San Francisco from O. Attkisson to L. B. Lahm Bros.; the Cory Theatre on Union street, Archibald, Jr.; the Majestic Theatre on Third street, San Francisco, from J. W. Morris to M. Klein and J. Richards; the Regent Theatre at Fillmore and Clay streets, San Francisco, from J. Shaw to Wm. Berlin, and the Garden Theatre, Burlingame, from Mr. Archibald to Ellis Arkush.

Theatre Orchestras Attract Attention.

The California Theatre orchestra has been enlarged to fifty men and these have received a contract for a full year, with no cancellation clause. This theatre will expend almost $3,000 a week for music during the coming year, not counting the additional cost of Sunday morning concerts, which are to be resumed.

Dr. Carlos De Mandil and his orchestra featured at the T. & D. Tivoli Theatre for the past two years, and was transferred shortly to the Oakland T. & D. Theatre, and U. Marcelli and his organization will be brought from Oakland to the Tivoli. Plans are being considered for sending Dr. De Mandil and his organization over the T. & D. Circuit later in the year.

Crook Takes Step Up.

L. R. Crook, who has been acting as manager of the Turner & Dahnken interests since E. Bruce Johnson went to New York for the First National, was chosen secretary of the corporation at a recent meeting of the board of directors of the corporation.

Tam Film Gets Appointment.

The Tam Film Company has been appointed official photographers for the "Save the Redwoods League," an organization of which Franklin K. Lane former Secretary of the Interior, is a leader.

Prices Go Up at Chico.

Moving picture theatres at Chico, Cal., have made a straight advance of ten cents in the price of admission, having decided that the former prices were ridiculously low.

New House for Colusa.

Work will be commenced before the end of March on the erection of a moving picture house having a seating capacity of 1,200. Edward Miller is the owner.

Northern California Producing Activities.

Annette Kellerman and a company of forty-eight arrived at San Francisco from Los Angeles recently to make water scenes outside the Golden Gate.

Tom Mix and company are spending a few days in the Yosemite Valley, east of San Francisco, securing winter scenes.

William S. Hart and a company of fifty arrived at Fenton, near Santa Cruz, recently for a stay of a week or more.

The Mayflower Film Company has a company working at Truckee on "Athalia," of picturization of Robert W. Chamber's novel of that name. The company is in charge of Sydney A. Franklin and includes Sylvia Breamer, Rosemary Theby, Conrad Nagle, Sam de Grasse and Robert Cain.

Detroit Doings

G. W. Trendle Out of Hospital.

GEORGE W. TRENDLE, general manager of the John H. Kunsky Enterprises, is out of the hospital, and expects to leave soon for several weeks at some resort. He recently underwent an operation for appendicitis.

Butterfield Enjoying Life.

W. S. Butterfield, president and general manager of the Butterfield circuit of houses in Michigan, is spending a few weeks at Pinehurst, S. C.

Lansing's New Regent.

Ground has already been broken for the New Regent Theatre in Lansing, which W. S. Butterfield and associates will erect, seating 2,200 people.

Bunch of Flint Theatres.

Flint is to have a bunch of new houses. The New Regent opened March 10; Lester Matt, who has the Strand, promises two new houses in the residential section; Charlie Garfield, who has the Orpheum, is just completing an outskirt house, and a 1,200-seat house called the Globe is now being completed on Saginaw street, a few block from the New Regent.

"Eyes of Youth" Dedicating Theatre.

Burrell Tripp, who is financially interested in several theatres in Ionia, Mich., is building a new theatre in South Haven which will open this month with "Eyes of Youth."

Profiting on Port Huron's Boom.

Herbert L. Weil, of Port Huron, and his associates are building a new theatre in St. Clair, Mich., which opens before April 1. Harry A. Gosline will manage same. Mr. Weil reports that he contemplates building a new theatre in Marysville, Mich., a new city built just five miles south of Port Huron, and which is destined to be not less than 50,000 population within two years owing to the new industrial plants now in course of erection there.

Details of Flint's Regent.

One of the prettiest houses in the state is the New Regent, in Flint, which opened March 10. The opening bill was "Double Speed" and a Larry Semon comedy. The house was crowded for both evening shows and as many people turned away. The architect was John Eberson, of Chicago, who builds all of the theatres on the Butterfield Circuit, and the style is Spanish. All seats are on one floor, a small mezzanine being for boxes. Altogether there are 1,800 seats. The policy of the house will be pictures exclusively, changed twice a week. Jack Prescott, former manager of the Liberty at Camp Taylor, is manager of the New Regent.

Colorado Cuttings

C. A. PIERCE has sold the Cover Theatre, Fort Morgan, Colo., to Foss Yenne, of that town. Pictures will continue.

C. D. Haupt and James A. Brobeck have purchased property in Steamboat Springs, on which they are planning to erect a modern two-story theatre building, with a seating capacity of 500.

Thomas Bucy has sold the Lyric Theatre, Sterling, Colo., to C. C. Perry and N. G. Brewer.

Theatre Shows Its Real Colors.

J. Ernest Tompkins, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Colorado Springs, is mighty chesty over the fact that he has installed a new red, white and blue electric sign, at a cost of $1,000, over the entrance of the lobby. The sign is a pippin and attracts lots of attention.

Kansas City Kullings

Five Weeks' Advance Work.

GEORGE CURTIS, of the Doric, will introduce "Birth of a Race" to Kansas City on Easter Sunday. No period has been set on the run, and, if present signs reach fruition, it will be some run! Mr. Curtis and his managers know how to get behind a picture, and they are not afraid to go the limit.

Gives Gollos Credit.

George N. Gollos is handling the preliminary exploitation, which is somewhat of a record in its time extent, starting five weeks before the first showing of the picture. Mr. Gollos has headquarters here, representing E. C. Peto Enterprises, and has been assisted by his brother, Aaron. They handled the very successful exploitation of the picture in St. Louis.

"Business as Usual."

L. B. Douglas, well known in exchange circles, is temporarily attending to his private business. This is now chiefly that of remodeling the Empire Theatre, which he owns. He is spending time there in order to help keep the theatre operating during remodeling, to make the task easier for Manager Bennett. The Empire, which is on East Fifteenth street, will be considerably larger, and will be fitted up so that the patrons will be proud of it.

Luncheon and Special Showing.

An innovation in special showings to exhibitors was made in Kansas City, March 13, when the Crescent Film Company invited exhibitors to a luncheon to be followed by the running of the film. A. L. Kahn, president of the company, was host to about thirty exhibitors.

They Liked the "Eats."

The luncheon itself was an extremely pleasant affair, with exhibitors sitting around tables renewing acquaintances and "talking shop," and enjoying the kind of food which Joseph Reichl, general manager of both Baltimore and Muehlebach, is providing now.

"The Lost City" Found.

The picture shown was the first two episodes of "The Lost City," a Warner Brothers production, which seems likely to "knock 'em cold." These two episodes were so full of thrills and picturesqueness and novelty that the exhibitors evidently forgot that they were looking at them as judges. The jungles, with elephants and savages and alligators and wild beasts, the airship—and all—make up features which can be exploited to "beat the band."

"Oh, Mamma!" Said Showman.

As one exhibitor exclaimed: "O, mamma! How we can advertise that!"

The Crescent Film Company got the prints from Chicago by special arrangement, and "special" is right, since a lot of telegraphing was necessary to bring them here by Saturday in view of the upset in express service in Chicago. The Kansas City company has distribution of the serial in Kansas and western Missouri.

Newman Remodels the Royal.

The Royal Theatre has received a remodeling and refurbishing, at a cost said to be $125,000. Many of the features which have proved especially popular or useful at the Newman, have been installed. The theatre is blossoming out with a new name, too, to mark the transition from the former house—it is to be known as the "New Royal." Many costly art features have been added, including panels in the ceiling. Much marble has been added, too, for wainscoting and steps. An adaptation of the cycloramic stage used in the Newman has been installed.

Revival Closes a Theatre.

Herman Printz, proprietor of the Bell Theatre, accepted a situation gracefully recently, and closed his house for a month while a revival was in progress. The large tabernacle erected for the religious meetings, was within two blocks of his theatre. It seemed that the entire neighborhood attended the week-night meetings without missing one of them; and crowds were drawn from the entire city. After a month of the meetings, Mr. Printz reopened for Saturday night, and Sunday afternoon and night, and had fair patronage. Other theatres half a mile from the tabernacle continued open, but attendance suffered.

Cincinnati Contributes

Cincinnatians See Screen Stars.

Cincinnatians, some for the first time, got a personal look at a group of screen stars known here previously only on the celluloid. A special car bringing Marcus Loew and eight headliners of the screen stopped off in Cincinnati for several hours last week to dine at the Hotel Sinton.

Bound for Nashville.

The group is to make a personal appearance at the opening of a new Loew theatre at Nashville, Tenn. The visitors included Mae Murray, Conway Tearle, Carlyle Blackwell, Taylor Holmes, Claire Whitney, June Elvidge, Rubye de Remer, Lillian Walker and Anne Luther. At the Hotel Sinton the movie stars were surrounded by a crowd of film fans all eager to get a look at the people they have seen so often on the screen.

Cashes in on Real Showmanship.

When it comes to being a live-wire manager of a motion picture house, Fred Meyer, of the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, deserves all the credit that can be given him. Meyer was in the office of R. H. Haines, resident manager of the First National Exchange, talking over business, when a newspaper representative called Mr. Haines to the phone and told him that Mary Pickford had been granted a divorce from Owen Moore.

Profits on Quick Thinking.

Without hesitation Meyer got the Standard Exchange manager on the phone and booked a one-reel film that he had in stock on Mary Pickford's home life. Meyer then called the Hamilton Evening Journal over long-distance and had an advertisement inserted featuring the one-reel for that night.

With the reel under his arm, Meyer boarded a train for Hamilton, which is only a two hours' ride from Cincinnati. When the populace of Hamilton read the newspaper account of Mary's divorce and Meyer's "ad" that she would appear that night at the theatre they flocked there in bunches.

Stood 'Em Out Twice.

Meyer said his quick action rewarded him handsomely. Since the opening of his theatre some months ago Meyer said he never saw so many people there as that night. Two extra performances were given, with many turned away.

"Hold It"—Till Next August!

Pittsburgh Paragraphs

John Guthrie, owner of the Majestic theatre, Grove City, Pa., has purchased an ideal building site in the town and is preparing to erect a new theatre, the plans of which are now being prepared. The site is an unusually good one on account of its size, and also on account of its fine location on Broad street, adjacent to the College buildings.

This is an important matter in Grove City, because the college auditoriums and halls are the centre of all the social and entertainment functions. The new theatre will be located right in the midst of whatever night life exists in the town.

New House for Grove City.

Mr. Guthrie has operated a motion picture theatre in Grove City ever since the days of the old Pittsburgh Calcium Light & Film Co. His first theatre was a small store room, with the usual big horn phonograph ballyhoo considered necessary in those days and a seating capacity of less than 100. His present Majestic Theatre was built seven years ago and is one of the best equipped small town theatres in the country.

Just as his present Majestic Theatre has always kept ahead of the town, he expects the new one to keep ahead. The new house will have some innovations in the way of seating arrangements, ventilation, projection and music.

Makes Trip Seeking Health.

Harry Levine, formerly projectionist at the Blackstone Theatre, Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, has resigned his position and gone on an extended trip through the West in the hope of regaining his health.

Will Enlarge Connellsville Theatre.

Christ Wagner, owner of the Solsson Theatre, Connellsville, is practically the only one who really has made a success out of this house. It was formerly managed by Fred Robbins, now deceased. The Solsson is a 700-seat house, fully equipped for road shows. Wagner has plans already drawn for the remodeling of this theatre. The improved lobby will take in an adjoining store room. Plats on the second and third floors will be done away with, this space being utilized for the extension of the balcony. The interior will be remodeled entirely and will seat 1,500 or more.

Liked "The Beloved Cheater."

"The Beloved Cheater" had a very successful run at the Victor Theatre, McKeesport, Pa., recently. Dave Victor says it is the best picture he has seen for many a day. He says he wants all future Robertson-Cole releases reserved for his house.

Operators' Union Raising Dues.

An announcement has been made by the Moving Picture Operators' Union, Local No. 171, to notify all non-union operators in Pittsburgh and its immediate vicinity of the impending raise in the initiation fee for entrance into Local No. 171. The present initiation fee is $25 and it will remain so until April 1.

After that date it will be raised to $75, and there is a possibility of it reaching the century mark. It was the intention of this body to make the increase effective March 1, but owing to the illness of the press secretary, sufficient notice could not be given the operators. However, this is considered to be sufficient notice to all operators, and no further notice will be given of the increase in initiation fee.

Theatre Installs Pipe Organ.

The Richmond Brothers, of the Century Family Theatre, North Side Pittsburgh, have purchased a large pipe organ, which they intend to install in this house about the first of June. They have also booked a number of special productions for two-day showings, and the Century Family is rapidly becoming one of the bright spots of the North Side.

Cleveland Cullings

Fire Exits Stand the Test.

The Main Theatre, a house situated in a thickly populated section of Cleveland at East Twenty-fifth street and Scoville avenue, was put out of business March 11, when a fire broke out in the building in which the entrance to the theatre was situated. Although the blaze started about 8:30 in the evening, and the theatre was well filled, there was no panic whatever. As soon as the smoke commenced to come into the auditorium, the fire exits were opened and in a short time the theatre was emptied.

The building in front of the theatre, a four-story structure, was very badly damaged, the loss being about $100,000. Several firemen were injured when a roof fell. The fire did not start in the theatre, but in the loft of the building where a laundry is located.

The theatre was leased and operated by O. E. Belles, of Cleveland, and F. G. Stevens, of Newark, O. They also operated a candy shop in the burned building. As soon as possible, the damage will be repaired and a new entrance made for the house so that it can resume business.

Loew Enlarging Theatre Chain.

With the coming to Cleveland last week of N. M. Schenck, general manager of the Loew circuit, there were additional reports of plans which Mr. Loew has for several theatres in the neighborhood districts of that city. Incorporation papers were filed the same week for a Loew theatre in Akron. At the Loew headquarters in Cleveland it was said that a statement would be given out in a week or so relative to both Cleveland and Akron plans.

Cleveland Rialto Changes.

Essick & Reif, owners of the Rialto and other Cleveland theatres, have purchased the Jennings theatre on the South Side of the city and will operate it in the future. They immediately closed it for a couple of weeks in order to have the house redecorated and other improvements made.

"Danced On" for Four Weeks.

A new record for long runs was set up in Cleveland the week of March 14, when Loew's Euclid Theatre commenced its fourth week on George Fitzmaurice's "On With the Dance." This is the first time in the history of the city that a moving picture theatre played a picture beyond three continuous weeks.

Business the second week was enough to warrant a third week, and to the surprise of the management the third week's attendance was so big that on Wednesday it was decided to extend the engagement a fourth week. Pictures which had previous long runs were "Male and Female" and "Everywoman," each of which played three weeks.

"Everybody had praise for the production," said Manager E. E. Blair. "The dancing seemed to make a particularly favorable impression. Of course, we had a wonderful musical score and this combination just couldn't help please folks. Mae Murray has made more admirers during these four weeks in Cleveland than she did in four years previous."

St. Louis Sayings

THE question of daylight saving is being brought up again by various civic organizations in St. Louis who are making strong measures to have this subject adopted and put in force. The Advertising Club of this city is strongly in favor of it. The Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of St. Louis are strongly opposed to the measure, and are waiting to be called on to voice their opposition.

Raised Prices Working Well.

Since advancing their admission rates the first-run houses are presenting special attractions in the form of soloists and specialty acts, as well as larger orchestras, in order to convince the public of their desire to satisfy their patrons. As yet attendance continues to be normal, showing no inclination to recede because of the advanced admissions.

Publicist for King and Pershing.

Jay Reeds Espy has been engaged as publicity director for the King and Pershing theatres, controlled by Harry Koplar.

Will Improve Huntingdon House.

Len Blackford anticipates closing his theatre at Huntingdon, Pa., May 1 to make alterations which will make this theatre one of the most beautiful places of amusement in this territory. He is not stating at present the amount of money which will be expended, but from the plans in view it will cost a small fortune.

Showing Fine Lobby Displays.

The Standard Film Exchange of Pittsburgh has received several sets of oil painted lobby display sets. They consist of various scenes from "Tillie's Punctured Romance," beautifully framed, which give one the idea as to the details of the offering. They are on display at the exchange office and exhibitors in the neighborhood should not fail to take a run in and give them the once over.

Northwestern Activities

"Exhibitor Circuit" Becomes Dormant.

The Northwest Exhibitors' Circuit is no longer an active organization. No new manager was appointed following the resignation of H. B. Wright, and the offices in the Alaska Building have been closed. The circuit has not been disorganized, however, it being the wish of the members to hold themselves ready to resume active business as a circuit as soon as circumstances are more favorable.

Merger of Big Montana Interests.

The Missoula Amusement Company, of which Henry Turner is the manager and chief stockholder, has merged with the interests of W. A. Simonds, of Wallace, Idaho, to form the Northwest Theatres Company, Inc. This brings under the control of the latter company the Empress, Liberty, Isis and Bijou in Missoula, and the Liberty in Wallace, the Liberty and Star in Mullan, Idaho, the Liberty and Princess in Kellogg, and the Liberty in Coeur d'Alene, Idaho.

Philadelphia Pointers

Mastbaum Memorial Services.

EXERCISES in memory of the late Stanley V. Mastbaum will be held at the Eagleville Sanatorium, near Norristown, Sunday afternoon, March 28. Judge Patterson is expected to make an address, and there will be vocal and instrumental music. The Stanley V. Mastbaum Memorial Building was erected at Eagleville by subscription of Mr. Mastbaum's friends.

More Theatres for Carr & Shad.

John Cook, general manager of the Carr & Shad enterprises in Reading, Pa., has taken over the San Toy and the Schuylkill Avenue theatres, in Reading, from H. S. Rentz. Mr. Cook announces this as one of his own exclusive little deals.

Carr & Shad's new theatre, The Strand, Reading, had its formal opening February 23. The house is reported to be one of the finest in the east, has a capacity of 1,800 seats and contains all of the modern and up-to-date improvements and conveniences.

Sam Hyman Concentrates.

Sam Hyman has severed all connections with the Star, Bell and Victor theatres and will in the future devote all his time to the Dazzleland Opera House.

Saul Buys Haverford Theatre.

M. Saul has bought the Haverford Theatre, Sixtieth and Haverford avenues, for $38,000 and will take possession at settlement.

More Theatres and Changes.

Harry Davis, owner of the Bijou Dream at Milton, Pa., is planning to enlarge his house to a capacity of 1,200.

J. J. Ryan, of the Hogan Opera House at Susquehanna, Pa., has purchased a location for a new theatre directly opposite the site of the Hogan.

T. P. Thomas, of the Thomas Theatre, at Taylor, Pa., has completed alterations which increases the capacity of his house to 850.

Some "United" Exhibitors.

Herbert Givin, manager of the United Pictures Productions Corp., announces the following new franchise holders up the state: Carr & Shad, New Strand Theatre, Reading; P. Megaro, Regent Theatre, Harrisburg; and Liberty Theatre, Carbondale; Sam Black, Owl Theatre, Philadelphia; Ben Shindler, Auditorium, Camden, N. J., and M. McManus, Opera House, Smyrna, Del.

Wearing Out His Grip.

W. J. Heenan, manager of the Peerless, returned from a trip to Scranton, Pa., last week with his grip full of contracts, being not an unusual occurrence on his frequent trips throughout the state.

Breaks Record on Percentage.

W. Heenan, manager of the First National, played a week's percentage basis at the Family Theatre, Nanticoke, Pa., with "The Unpardonable Sin," "Auction of Souls" and "Daddy Long Legs" two days each during the week of March 15, and reports that Jennings admitted the house broke all previous records.

"Pollyanna" in Grand Opera Surroundings.

Thousands of dollars will be spent by the United Artists' Corporation to change the Metropolitan Opera House into an up-to-date motion picture palace in time for the opening presentation, "Pollyanna," commencing May 8. It is expected to have Mary Pickford here in person providing she does not go abroad before that date.

American Legion as Showmen.

Motion picture performances will be given two nights each week under the auspices of the American Legion at the Auditorium, Burlington, by Capt. James McFarland Post, of that city. The theatre has been donated free of cost.

Buffalo Bulletins

Albert Jones, attorney for the local Loew theatre interests, announces that plans have been completed for the erection of the $1,600,000 vaudeville and motion picture theatre in Buffalo. Work of dismantling buildings in Washington street already has begun and will be rushed as rapidly as possible so that ground may be broken for the new theatre on May 1.

The theatre will have a seating capacity of 3,000 and will be located at Main, Mohawk and Washington streets. Preferred stock amounting to $1,500,000 and common stock to the same amount has been subscribed. Much of it is said to have been sold to Canadian capitalists, due to the success of the Loew theatres in Canada.

Buffalo Times Starts Daily "Column."

The Buffalo Times has started a daily column devoted to motion picture news. The Times has always been a big booster of the film industry and the coming of the daily column is just another proof of how this publication regards the silent drama. The first column of movie news appeared Monday, March 22.

Costly Smoke in Theatre.

John Pawlowski, a youth residing at 768 Smith street, found it a costly bit of recreation when he started to strike matches and smoke in the Plaza Theatre in William street during a show. In the midst of his tobacco fest he was arrested on a charge of disorderly conduct, and when arraigned before Ctiy Judge Peter Maul was fined $5.

Featuring Kiddie Matinees.

Manager Bruce Fowler, of the Elmwood Theatre, is featuring Saturday afternoon "kiddie matinees." Mr. Fowler for the past several weeks has been booking all-comedy bills, and has found the plan a most popular one with the children in the community.

Buffalo Capitol Opens Easter Sunday.

The new Capitol Theatre in South Buffalo will open its doors for the entertainment of South Buffalo film fans on Easter Sunday, according to an announcement by George Hanny, who is associated with George Hall in the new theatre. The Maxine, which is also operated by Messrs. Hall and Hanny, has been enlarged and re-decorated and will have a gala spring opening, also on Easter Sunday.

Planning Easter Festival.

Harold B. Franklin is planning an elaborate film feast for Easter Week at Shea's Hippodrome. The feature, it is announced, will be Clara Kimball Young in "The Forbidden Woman," and the comedy (Mack Sennett's latest) "Gee Whiz!" An attractive advertising campaign is being outlined and some of the posters now being prepared for the lobby are perhaps the most beautiful even seen at this big house. Conductor Alfred Moulton is working in his spare time on a special musical program, which will include a famous soloist from New York.

Michael Buys Home.

J. H. Michael, manager of the Victoria and Regent theatres and chairman of the executive committee of the New York State Exhibitors' League, has purchased a large home in the Central Park district on Parkside and will move in April 1. Mr. Michael recently presented "Male and Female" at the Victoria for a three-day run, during which box office records were smashed.

Theatre Paper Success.

Elmer C. Winegar, manager of the Central Park Theatre, is finding his own theatre news paper, The Central Park News, one of the best stunts he ever put over. The paper is distributed to all the homes in the community. On the front page each week Mr. Winegar uses cuts and stories on his coming attractions. "First Page Stuff" is easy to get when you have your own newspaper.

Jamestown House Being Restored.

Repairs on the Winter Garden, Jamestown, N. Y., which was greatly damaged by fire in January are nearing completion and it is expected that the theatre will re-open at an early date. Decorators from the Lee Lash studios in New York have been in Jamestown for the past three weeks and have practically completed a magnificent interior.

Several experts from the factory have been at work on the big organ, which was nearly demolished by the fire. Their job is about completed. Mrs. Gertrude LaSalle Bachop has been re-engaged as organist. Raymond B. Eldred, conductor of the Winter Garden orchestra is re-arranging his library and has held several rehearsals in preparation for the opening show.

A complete new balcony has been built, with a seating capacity of 250 persons. New projection machines, new carpets and rugs and new stage settings with special lighting effects are being put in. For the past few weeks Peterson & Woods, managers of the theatre, have been arranging bookings and the policy, as always, will be the highest class photoplays.

Buffalo Strand Manager Ill.

E. O. Weinberg, manager of the Strand Theatre, was confined to his home on account of ear trouble for several days the week of March 14. "Eddie" is planning a big Easter week program, consisting of Constance Talmadge in her new First National production, "Two Weeks" and Harold Lloyd in one of his special Pathe comedies. This combination always proves a knockout at the Strand.

Continues Czecho-Slovak Music.

Manager William Graham continued the Czecho-Slovak Tambouriza orchestra at the Empire for the week of March 22, when a double bill consisting of Dustin Farnum in "The Corsican Brothers," and Charles Ray in "The Hick," was presented. The Empire recently changed its policy from burlesque to pictures and the new entertainment has proven popular.

Sisters and Students See Show.

Sisters and students of Saint Elizabeth's Academy, in Alleghany, N. Y., attended a special matinee presentation in the Havens Theatre, Olean, N. Y., on March 18 of "The Victim," which was presented in the oil city for the benefit of Saint Mary of the Angels Church. The sisters and students were the guests of Rev. Father Edward J. Rengel, of Olean.

Buffalo Church Presents Chapin.

Calvary Presbyterian Church on Delaware avenue presented Benjamin Chapin in episodes from "The Son of Democracy" in place of the usual sermon on Sunday evening, March 21. Community singing was another feature of the program. Motion pictures have now become a regular part of the Sunday evening meeting in this church and have been found to be most successful.

Buffalo Going Right Ahead.

The action of George Eastman in Rochester in suspending building operations on his big motion picture academy because of the high cost of building was quite a surprise in local exhibitor circles. None of the big deals in Buffalo are being held up because of high costs, however. In fact, Shea's Metropolitan plans are going ahead merrily; the new Capitol will open Easter Sunday; the steel frames are going up rapidly on the new Hertel Avenue Theatre; the two houses on Broadway will open soon, and George Hanny and George Hall are remodeling and enlarging the Maxine on Seneca street. High prices seem to mean nothing to local exhibitors. Business is booming. Who cares?

Ethel Barrymore.

To be featured in Tri-Star Pictures, organized by Joseph Byron Totten and Joseph W. Smiley.

Baltimore Bulletins

McHenry Changed Hands.

THE McHenry Theatre, Light street near Cross, which was originally built by the men operating the Parkway Theatre and was designed by Oliver B. Wight, has now been taken over by Fred G. Nixon-Nirdlinger and will be continued as a moving picture playhouse under the able management of Bernard Depkin, Jr., who is now also operating Nixon's Pickwick in Baltimore.

Besides his interests in the Academy of Music in Baltimore Mr. Nixon-Nirdlinger now has control of the Pickwick, McHenry and Victoria theatres. The Mastbaum and Stanley interests of Philadelphia are interested with Mr. Nirdlinger in his Baltimore activities. It is understood that they will enter the moving picture field in Washington, D. C., as well as in Baltimore and form a circuit in the near future.

Theatre Lot Is Purchased.

Settlement for the purchase of the Shriner lot, on the northeast corner of North avenue and Charles street, on which a large moving picture and vaudeville theatre is to be built, was made by the Hippodrome Company on Monday, March 15, and the price was approximately $165,000. This lot was bought from the Bouml Temple Company and the title was passed on by the Maryland Title Guarantee Company and the transaction took place in the office of that company with Walter H. Buck and Watson E. Sherwood acting as attorneys in the transaction.

The lot measures 111 by 150 feet and the plans for the building are now under way. It is probable that stores will be located on the first floor. This theatre will be controlled by the Marcus Loew interests, now operating the Hippodrome in Baltimore.

A meeting was held at Nixon's Victoria theatre under the auspices of the Baltimore Branch of the American Committee for Relief of Jews in Europe on Sunday night, March 7. Two addresses were made in Yiddish and then there were auctioned off several pieces of jewelry and the proceeds were added to the amount they now have on hand which amounts to about $3,500. One of the addresses was made by Rabbi Rivkin, chairman of the Baltimore committee.

Film "Maryland" Launching.

The launching of the U. S. S. "Maryland," at Newport News, Va., and the christening of this ship by Mrs. E. Brooke Lee, of Baltimore as well as the activities of the Governor of Maryland and his party who attended the event, was filmed for permanent record by Florenz Ziegfeld and Herman E. Tate, moving picture men of Baltimore, on Saturday, March 20. It is also the plan of Messrs. Ziegfeld and Tate to obtain moving picture views of the ruins of the Hotel Chamberlain at Old Point Comfort, Va., which was recently destroyed by fire, from a seaplane. Commander Weems, of the Baltimore recruiting station, will use the pictures of the launching to obtain recruits from Maryland for the Maryland.

Censors Inspect "Movie Paper."

That the Moving Picture Censor Board of Maryland has an inspector out during the year to see that the advertising paper used by the moving picture theatres throughout Maryland for their lobby displays and billboards has been inspected by the board, came to light recently when someone wrote a letter to a Baltimore paper criticising the advertising displays. Upon inquiry being made it was shown that Section 15, Chapter 309, of the act of 1918 provides that "no banner, poster or other like advertising matter shall contain anything that is immoral or improper."

It is also stated that all scenes eliminated by the board must be eliminated from exhibits, posters, billboards and advertising matter. According to the board the maintaining of a high standard for moving pictures can be helped if the public would report by telephone or mail, direct to their office, any violations against decency which are specific.

To Improve Bristol's Isis.

The Isis Theatre, of Bristol, Va., which is owned and operated by C. A. Goebel, is to be extensively remodeled and improved and the approximate cost for the work will be $10,000. Plans for the improvements have been drawn up by H. Doriot, architect. When completed the seating capacity will be 700.

The plans provide for new entrances to the lobby; a balcony with a seating capacity of about 300 with two stairways and separate exits. This balcony will be arranged for by taking out the second floor of the present building and installing a new ceiling. A large marquee will be placed over the entrance and the lighting, heating and ventilating systems will be entirely renovated.

Jewel Theatre Sold.

The Jewel Theatre, West Baltimore street, which was at one time managed by Miss T. D. Marks, but has not been operated as a moving picture theatre for some time, has been sold by Edwin W. Wilson to the James A. Bealmear & Son Company and this property will be changed into a business establishment. The lot measures 22 by 170 feet.

Lincoln Theatre Robbed.

The office of the Lincoln Theatre (colored), 934 Pennsylvania avenue, was entered by a burglar sometime during the closing time on Saturday night, March 13 and Monday morning. Money amounting to $240 was stolen and the office door was forced in order to gain an entrance. Morris Flack is the manager of this house.

Pictures at Rotary Lunch.

A feature of the weekly luncheon of the Rotary Club of Baltimore at the Hotel Rennett on Monday, March 15, were the motion pictures which were shown to illustrate the lecture of L. O. Armstrong, from the Bureau of Commercial Economics, Department of Public Instruction, Washington, D. C., who spoke on "Virgin Fishing and Hunting Grounds of North America." Sections of the Canadian Northwest and this country were shown in the films.

Seeing New York F. O. B.

Arthur B. Price, manager of the Blue Mouse, Rialto, and Aurora theatres, visited New York City during the week of March 15 and was entertained by officers of the Equity and Famous Players-Lasky Companies.

Showed Uncensored Films.

Charles Nolte, manager of the Greater Baltimore Theatres, Inc., operating the Linwood, Aladdin, New Belvedere and Belnord theatres was fined $30 and costs at the Northern Police Station by Justice Schroeder, on March 12, upon the complaint of Charles E. Harper, chairman of the Maryland Censor Board because two films had been shown at the New Belvedere without being censored. It is understood that Mr. Harper told Mr. Nolte that this was the only way in which the matter could be forcefully brought to the attention of the Washington exchanges.

Out-of-Town Notes.

F. Carle, manager of the Strand Theatre in Hopewell, Va., died suddenly on Saturday, March 13, from leakage of the heart and complication of diseases. Mr. Carle had been in the moving picture business for four years. The Strand will be taken over by W. F. Harris, who operates the Broadway, when he returned to Hopewell.

Charles Decker, manager of the Empire Theatre in Frederick, Md., has been sick in bed for some time.

A modern moving picture theatre is to be built in Chestertown, Md., by a company which is now being organized for that purpose, it is now reported.

Floyd Liminger, of Westernport, Md., who operates the Majestic Theatre in Piedmont, Va., has now under contemplation plans for the remodeling and building an addition to his theatre. The plans were drawn up by W. A. Miller, architect, Keyser, W. Va.

New Theatre Planned.

A moving picture and vaudeville theatre with a seating capacity of 1,800, will be built by Pearce and Scheck on South Broadway in the near future, according to the plans now under way. This playhouse will be located on the site now occupied by properties in the rear of 238, 240, 242 and 244 South Broadway and the property located at 242 South Broadway will be used for the lobby which will be 100 feet deep. The construction will start about June 1. There will be a gold fibre screen and an orchestral organ and Joseph Fields, who now manages the Leader Theatre, owned by the same people, which is located near this new theatre, will manage the new house.

Dominion of Canada

"All-Comedy" Week a Success.

MANAGER K. M. LEACH, of the Regent Theatre, Calgary, Alberta, made a noteworthy booking arrangement for the week of March 8 when he conducted an all-comedy week. The programme for the six days consisted of four new comedies, the stars of which included Charlie Chaplin, Fatty Arbuckle, Harold Lloyd and Al. St. John, the latter appearing in a Mack Sennett release, "Speed." Chaplin's portion of the bill was "A Day's Pleasure," while Fatty Arbuckle appeared in "The Garage." Harold Lloyd was seen in "Young Mr. Jazz." The entire programme was made up of nine reels. The stunt made a big impression and brought out real crowds.

"Mr. Wu" Makes Debut on Screen.

The first American run of "Mr. Wu," the British film version of the London stage success in which Matheson Lang and Lillah McCarthy are starred, at the Allen Theatre, Toronto, created a real sensation. The feature was very favorably received by local reviewers and great crowds turned out to see it, the house being packed practically all day long. Many of those who patronized the theatre included returned soldiers who had witnessed the stage production in London. Judging by the cordial reception, "Mr. Wu" is destined to enjoy a long and successful screen career.

Made-in-Canada Feature.

"The Great Shadow," the made-in-Canada feature starring Tyrone Power, has been booked by the Trans-Canada Theatres, Limited, Montreal, the English-Canadian syndicate, for presentation in its numerous theatres throughout Ontario, opening with a week's presentation at the Grand Opera House, Toronto. Howard Conover, of the Imperial Theatre, one of Montreal's large moving picture houses, has also booked the picture for the week of April 11.

This is the feature that was made by the Adanac Producing Company, Limited, Montreal, at the Trenton, Ontario, studio. The rights for this feature, outside of Canada, have been sold to Lewis J. Selznick.

Would Bar the Children.

The Winnipeg Ministerial Association has asked the Winnipeg civic authorities to prohibit the admittance of young children to local moving picture theatres unless accompanied by adult guardians. The association has asked for the establishment of an age limit for children who should be escorted by adults, in its opinion.

Loew Will Increase His Chain.

Marcus Loew, of New York, has decided to expand his Canadian circuit to a considerable degree, it has been announced at Toronto.

Here's Frank Borzage

Who is directing "Humoresque," with Alma Rubens, for Cosmopolitan.

A Loew theatre is to be erected at Windsor, Ontario, which is across the river from Detroit, Mich., and preliminary details have been arranged already. Windsor is a rapidly growing automobile centre, with a population of about 30,000. Loew theatres are planned for a number of other cities, yet to be announced.

Pictures for the Summer.

The Walker Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, a large legitimate house, and one of the links in the Trans-Canada Theatres, Limited, chain across Canada, will adopt a moving picture policy for the summer months instead of closing down for the hot season as in previous years.

Sent Reviewer to London.

Miss Ray Lewis, personal representative of Messrs. Jule and J. J. Allen, of Toronto, in London, England, is returning to Canada, according to advices just received by an Ottawa, Ontario, friend. Miss Lewis was sent to England to watch producing developments and to make critical reports on all new releases. A number of British features were secured for Canada by the Allens as a result of her recommendations. Previous to her appointment as the representative of the Allens, Miss Lewis was the editor of the Moving Picture Digest, a Toronto trade publication.

Winnipeg House Changes Policy.

An interesting change has just been made in the policy of the Dominion Theatre, Winnipeg, which is one of the large Allen theatres in the Manitoba capital. This has been a straight moving picture house for a number of years, but on March 22 it reopened for the presentation of musical comedy which had been scheduled for the Strand Theatre, a Winnipeg vaudeville house.

B. N. Davies continues as manager of the Dominion, while Ed. Seamans, manager of the Strand, has become the musical supervisor of the Dominion. N. Chambers has been appointed manager of the Strand Theatre, which continues as it was otherwise. Jule and J. J. Allen also control the Province, Gaiety and Bijou theatres there also. All of these are moving picture houses.

From Burlesque to Moving Pictures.

The Savoy Theatre, Hamilton, a former burlesque and stock company house, was reopened on March 22 as a modern moving picture theatre under the control of the Famous Players' Canadian Corporation, with George Stroud, former owner of the theatre, as manager. The opening attraction was "Male and Female." The theatre was remodeled and refurnished throughout, while the twenty-piece orchestra under the direction of Sam Minnes is the largest among local houses. A new pipe organ has also been installed.

Some Data on Censoring.

According to the recent annual report of the Manitoba Board of Moving Picture Censors, the number of complete film releases condemned by the board last year was seventy-one. In addition to these rejected pictures the Manitoba censors, whose bureau is located at Winnipeg, made 488 partial eliminations in other pictures. This report was filed with the Manitoba Provincial Legislature, which has been in session at Winnipeg. It is claimed by Winnipeg exhibitors that a considerable number of rejected pictures consist of comedies.

Censors Condemn Comedies.

One of the latest comedies condemned by the Manitoba censors was Mack Sennett's "The Speak-Easy," which depicts the troubles encountered by the proprietor of a "blind pig." This release had been booked by the National Theatre, Winnipeg, and had been advertised as the coming comedy attraction. The censors rejected the picture on the Saturday prior to the week during which it was to have been shown. The same comedy was readily passed by the Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors at Toronto.

Not long ago the Manitoba censors saw fit to ban "The Eternal Triangle," a two-reel comedy, in which all the characters were portrayed by dogs. This decision on the part of the board aroused wide comment. The Manitoba board also aroused the ire of the exhibitors recently by permitting a considerable number of local preachers and moral reformers to witness the private presentation of rejected portions of numerous pictures.

An Infant Industry Restless in Its Crib

Combining Moving Picture World Ten Years Ago

WITHOUT a "by your leave" or any sort of apology, we'll let the champion "kid" among old-timers start off this week's reflection of "the good old days" when the Infants were in the Industry (paraphrasing Richard A. Rowland's history-making remark). We bring you Hal Hodes, managing editor of Universal's Screen Magazine, adding the personal opinion that a chap who can get so much "pep" into so dry a subject as this sodden record deserves to be editing something more miscellaneous than a weekly reel of "pitchers."

"At that," Hal starts off, "I think I've got the average chap in this here m. p. business looking like a recruit. Ten years ago I was on one of Uncle Sam's battleships, where when I wasn't doing my regular work (which consisted in being shipfitter) I ran the projection machine for our sky pilot. That is, he wasn't ours—he merely loaned himself to us whenever we came to anchor.

When Vitagraph Was a Baby.

"I made a good picture machine skipper, because 'Pop' Rock, of Vitagraph, broke me into the business back in 1904. (Bring on your m. p. veterans!) He let me stay with his organization during the summers of 1904-5, and when not grinding away at Coney Island I was part of the mob in the pictures being produced in the fine new studio located in what was then known as Greenfields. The town has since gone back, having been annexed by Brooklyn.

"It was a fine job I had that first summer. Rock had me work out my apprenticeship at Econopouly's, a basket-party resort on the Island. We began the day at 9:30 A. M. and kept at it as long as there was a nickel on the Bowery.

"Sometimes I was able to get away early when we closed because of exceptionally poor business due to weather. Then I'd quit my machine at 1 A. M. As a rule, we didn't quit until 3. Econopouly's paid $80 a week for service, consisting of 12 reels, semi weekly change. This included the services of two operators.

"Rock didn't like the man who ran the place at all, at all. When I got into a scrap and licked the latter good and proper, Rock was so tickled that after firing me in order to keep the man's business, he hired me right back again and put me to work at Inman's, a combination burlesque and picture emporium.

When Pictures Were a "Chaser."

"The pictures were supposed to work as a chaser, and Billy Inman frequently had me run the films backwards and ring in long intermissions. This was a good job, requiring only three hours of my time daily.

"The rest of the time was spent at the studios and in fixing the plumbing in 'Pop' Rock's home. He had discovered I was handy with tools.

"After I quit Vitagraph I went to work for Al Harsten, who had an exchange of his own in those days. It sure was a fine collection of junk. Al sent me to Boston, where I ran a machine at the old Austin & Stone Museum.

"A few weeks of this, and I left the industry flat to join a burlesque troupe. Now I ask you to tell me what the industry was in 1904, if it was an infant in 1910?"

Meet Two Youthful Publicists.

While we are on the "human interest" subject we'll dispose of a couple-a more topics here and now. from High School, in Little Rock, Ark. Pat had moved in from the "Arkansas sticks" to complete his education in "the big city."

Pat was then destined to be a press agent—he practiced on his school mates and here's a sample: "Jed Quelters, of Frenchman's Bayou, was the fastest runner in Mississippi County. He could run a hundred yards in practically nothing. He never wore a shoe in his life.

"Some slickers from Hot Springs came down to clean up the sports at Frenchman's Bayou with a trick runner. When the city slickers found out that Jed Quelters had been brought up barefooted they insisted that the race be run on a cinder track.

Stories That Steal Space.

"Jed had a lot of broken glass mixed in with the cinders and won the race, looking over his shoulder. The smart cracking city sport had the soles cut off his running shoes by the broken glass."

Here's another: "They never have been able to introduce automobiles into Mississippi County. They tried hard enough, but every time a machine went past Jed Quelters's the hogs ran out from under the house, ducked under the machines and cut the tires with their backbone."

Pathe Declared No Trust.

In Moving Picture World, dated April 2, 1910, one of the numerous suits pending in the matter of the Patents Company vs. the Whole World was adjudicated in the State of Ohio, and Pathe, defendant, was declared not to be a trust. The Co-Operative Film Syndicate, of North Baltimore, Ohio, had purchased films from Pathe, was sued on the matter of collections and had "countered low" by claiming Pathe was a trust and that Pathe pay $20,000 instead of receiving the sum sued for. The Infant Industry has always been a "good thing" for the lawyers.

In Coatesville, Pa., W. L. W. Jones was owner and manager of World-in-Motion Photoplay Theatre. The fact is noted largely to introduce the name of the theatre—rather good for a movie house, eh wot?

Notice was given that Frank Winch was retiring from the film game to become press agent for Buffalo Bill's Wild West. Winch was quite a man-about-town in those days, belonging to the Friars 'n everything.

Urging Along Educative Films.

In Cleveland the Lake Shore Film Exchange gave a free demonstration of educative film subjects, leasing the Hippodrome and showing to 2,000 people, including doctors, teachers, ministers, students, etc., fifteen Urban-Eclipse subjects, three Pathes, one Biograph, one Edison, one Selig and one Essanay.

Walter Storey was secretary of the National Board of Censorship.

Chaplain J. E. Yates, Coast Artillery Corps, reported that he was using films to interest the soldiers at Fort McHenry, Baltimore, in religious and instructive subjects.

From an advertisement, paid for by Duplex Manufacturing Company, St. Louis, we learn that the following objects were used to make sounds and noises to accompany the pictures ten years ago:

Bird and steamboat whistles, police rattles, rooster crows, hen cackles, pop guns, sleigh bells, fog horns, dog barks, castagnets, tom-toms, horsehoof imitations, Chinese crash cymbals, railroad imitations, pond frogs, midway musettes, sand jig imitators and clog mallets. In these later days they call 'em "musical settings."

Two pages were devoted to descriptions of the various scenes—a synopsis in detail—of the Roosevelt in Africa "hunt pictures." Sixteen scenes were itemized. W. K. H.

The Progress of Danny Freeman.

Unusually interesting is the progress that has been made by Danny Freeman as a figure in Canadian moving picture exchange circles. He started out as a shipper with the old Canadian Film Exchange at Vancouver and then joined the Vancouver branch of the Regal Films, Ltd., with which he remained until the opening of the war in 1914. He enlisted with the Canadian Expeditionary Force at Toronto and eventually became an army boxing instructor.

When the armistice was signed he returned to the film exchange business and joined the Regal staff at Toronto, but became associated with the Select Pictures Corporation of Canada when that company was established in Toronto last year. Recently he was appointed Western general manager of the Select with headquarters at Winnipeg, Manitoba.

Educational and Non-theatrical News

Conducted by Margaret I. MacDonald

Orrin G. Cocks Replies to Complaint Against Non-Theatrical Performances

IN its issue of March 20 the Moving Picture World publishes a complaint from exhibitors and some of the exchange men in Washington, D. C., regarding the growth of the so-called "non-theatrical" business. The assertion is made by the exhibitors "that schools, churches, community centers, and other like propositions are cutting deep into the business." According to one, in the columns of the World, "It is only a question of time when the exhibitors handling first-run pictures will have to say to the exchanges: 'We cannot pay you $200 a day for your pictures because our receipts have fallen off and we do not take enough in to warrant that payment.'"

"The exhibitors have no desire to prevent the showing of strictly educational films in the schools and churches. But when they begin to enter the general exhibition field, minus taxes, rent and other overhead expenses which bear heavily on the exhibitor it's time to kick, and the manufacturers should take cognizance of that and lay down a rule for our protection."

"Unduly Excited," Says Cocks.

In reply to this Orrin G. Cocks, secretary of the National Committee for Better Films and Advisory Secretary of the National Board of Review, comes forward with a statement. He is qualified to speak, for the National Board has been extending help to the non-theatrical users who, unfamiliar with the exhibition of motion pictures, have turned to it for direction, and the board knows the kinds of people who are reached by these special entertainments. Says Mr. Cocks:

"The Grievance Committee of Exhibitors in the Washington exchange district are unduly excited about the use of non-theatrical films—they are 'barking up the wrong tree,' also 'biting off their noses to spite their faces,' not to say 'peny wise and pound foolish.'"

"A large percentage of the people in all cities and towns are not going to the motion picture theatres—they are either indifferent or positively prejudiced and these are the ones who are ready to be led by excited agitators, who demand repression, censorship and the 'heads of exhibitors on a silver platter.' This group must be considered, for they are a part of the whole question.

All Want Entertainment.

"Churches, schools, community centers and civic organizations want certain classes of films for entertainment. They draw to their auditoriums a public which has been hypercritical of the motion picture theatre. In places beyond count these people have discovered that the motion picture drama is a splendid entertainment and when once their opposition is changed to friendship they inevitably turn to the theatre for more of the same sort.

"Many exhibitors have figured this movement out clearly and have recognized that they were building a new clientele by assisting these non-theatrical groups to get what they want. Very few of these organizations remain destructive critics. They discover new values and virtues—and with wisdom comes tolerance. The exhibitors of the country can often meet these groups half way and draw new audiences by furnishing one of two programs a week regularly for the kinds of people who think they want entertainments furnished by the groups mentioned above. In this way they capture the support of the new crowd.

Would Aid Non-Theatrical Group.

"The talk about local or national social, civic or religious organizations making their own films is plain tommyrot. Where it has come to the point of discussion, none of them find that it has the money, the skill, the technique or the distributing agency for the undertaking. It is well to remember also that each organization has certain interests which are opposed to attempts to enter the amusement field.

"It is a wise and far-seeing policy, both for exhibitors and distributing organizations, to assist these non-theatrical groups as long as they are sensible and desire to furnish entertainment for the people of their towns who want relaxation and desire to laugh and to play. It is also worth while to have friends in court when reformers raise a hue and cry."

Pathe Review Analyzes

Motions of Diving Girls

VENUS Takes a Swim" is the title of the Novagraph presentation of analysis of motion in Pathe Review No. 43, released March 21. The pictures are said to be the most beautiful and novel of this unusual series. Showing swimming and diving girls, who have both beauty and amazing skill, they demonstrate the value of slow motion pictures as an aid to athletic training.

The ultra-rapid camera affords an opportunity for close observation, the action being slowed down to ten times less than normal. The strokes, which propel them through the water, are most clearly brought out, and, for general exhibition effect, the girls slowly floating through the air with the grace of birds is a tremendously effective sight.

Julian Ollendorff contributes to this issue perhaps the most sensational of his series, "The Spirit of the Dance," with "The Dance Apache." It is interpreted by Mme. Desiree Lubovska and Willard Foote.

"Contented Wives" is the title of the foreign scenic, which shows how wives are made happy in Portugal. Work does it. And the loyal matrons don't seem to mind a bit. If there's a load to go to town that's too heavy for the family horse, hubby puts the horse in the stable and calls Mary. Interesting views are fern gathering and other woodland industries are also shown.

The animal study is called "African Beauties," and shows different animals of the forests in their haunts surrounded by the tropical coloring, which is exquisitely brought out in the Pathecolor pictures. A glimpse of the "downstairs world" is given in "Silver and Soap," showing the many processes through which the great hotels of New York put their silverware.

"Through Winding Walls"

Trip on Ausable River

THE advance in artistic methods of making and assembling scenic studies was never more marked than in the Chester picture, "Through Winding Walls." This constitutes a trip on the Ausable river, and through the beautiful Ausable chasm.

A start is made where the river plies its course after the manner of ordinary streams. Gradually we find our way through the winding walls of the chasm, with its quaint bridges, its caverns, its dangerous curves and rapids. One of the most thrilling things about Ausable chasm is the boat ride through the narrow gorges, and finally the hurried pull to shore just in time to avoid being hurled into an angry whirlpool.

The Chester account of this entertaining and beautiful spot is the best yet.

When Robert C. Bruce Takes to the Tall Timbers.

Showing Bob himself and two striking scenes from one of his recent subjects for Educational Film Corporation's Travel Series.

Chester Screenics Possess Great Variety of Interests

TWO excellent subjects comprise the latest Chester-Outing Screenics, the first of which is "Duck Days." This picture will surely prove a joy to those whose fancy turns to the duck marshes. It contains some of the best views of ducks on the wing, ducks on the water, and ducks being felled by rifle shot that has been made. The picture is well photographed, and is assembled and subtitled in a way which makes it entertaining. The second subject on the reel is "Climbing the Cataracts." This shows how the salmon at a certain time of the year hurrying in from the sea to the rivers of the Pacific coast, stopping at no obstacle until they reach the spawning ground. Splendid views of the fish jumping the cataracts are shown, and also scenes in which the Indians along the rivers catch the fish and dry them for winter use.

The closing subject is "A Stormy Sea," in which are some beautiful surf scenes. The assembling of this subject is especially commendable, and its subtitles are beautifully and appropriately worded.

W. E. Macarton Has Ten Reels of Panama Canal

THE title of a ten-reel picture of the Panama Canal under construction, "The Eternal Union of the Seas," which was made by W. F. Macarton, under the supervision of the Panama Canal Commission. This picture, which was directed by T. Gabriel Duque and Samuel Lewis, is being handled by the Latin-American Republics Film Corporation, of Panama, and is said to be the only complete film of the canal, including all details of its construction, in existence.

Mr. Macarton, who did the actual photographing of the work of construction, is in charge of the film and can be located at the offices of the firm at Ancon, Canal Zone. While some time has elapsed since the completion of the Panama Canal, the details of this wonderful engineering feat should still prove of genuine interest.

Howells to Distribute Urban Films in Europe

A PARTICULARLY progressive spirit pervades the offices and plant of the Kineto Company of America, and many of the dreams of its founder, Charles Urban, seem about to be materialized. Recognition that his educational library is one of the best, has brought educators to his doors, and is the direct cause of more than one fortunate circumstance that has been created in favor of the Kineto Company of America.

One of these is the taking over of the foreign distribution of Urban films, with the exception of Germany, Austria, Switzerland, Canada, and Hawaii by David P. Howells. The Urban offices were also the scene of an interesting gathering of New York educators on a day of recent date, when considerable illumination was thrown on the question of the film in the school from both sides.

These incidents are of vast importance in the outlook of the industry. They are only a few among the many things that are happening in the educational film world, which show that the pot is being kept boiling.

Prizma Enlarges Scope to Include Industrials

FOLLOWING the announcement last week that Prizma Color Pictures will in the future be distributed through Select exchanges, and that Lewis J. Selznick aims to produce in colors a series of five-reel features in colors, as well as shorter dramas in natural colors, it became known that Prizma under the new arrangement has also inaugurated an industrial department. This announcement accompanied the information that several contracts for productions have already been made, and that more are lined up awaiting the final touches.

Carroll H. Dunning, vice president of Prizma, is named as head of the Prizma Industrial Department. Mr. Dunning has for years been prominent in the industry, and is well known nationally among advertisers. He left New York last week to close two propositions in Chicago, after which he left for the Coast. It is expected his journey will keep him away five weeks.

This latest development in the growth of Prizma includes "The Little Match Girl," with Madge Evans. Its list of subjects will now embrace color scenics, educationals, long feature dramas, short features and industrials—all in color.

George R. Meeker, formerly Director of Sales of Republic Distributing Corporation, through which Prizma was distributed before the change to Select, has been delegated by Mr. Selznick to an executive post in the sales division of Prizma.

Some Things Worth Knowing

That the oil industry of California is given a brief bit of publicity in the Universal New Screen Magazine No. 60.

That Kinograms No. 23 has some interesting views of the breaking up of the ice on the Delaware river, the first photographs of President Wilson taken since his illness, "Babe" Ruth and the Yanks in action, and views of St. Patrick Day's parade in New York City.

That the Pathe News No. 22 boasts pictures of persons prominent in the German revolution. Views of the Brandenburg gate carefully watched by Noske guards, and other scenes in and about Berlin are shown.

That Fox News No. 48 has a budget of news from Australis, which includes blind soldiers swimming and running races, girl life savers in first aid drill, and an exhibition of beautiful Japanese irises.

That the Ford-Goldwyn Educational Weekly No. 194 "A pilgrimage" consists of a trip to historic New England. It shows some of the quaint old towns of Massachusetts and Rhode Island. The older settlements of Plymouth and Provincetown are visited by the cameraman, and then by way of contrast he journeys to the homes of wealth and fashion at Newport.

That the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph B7052 presents "Famous Robberies," "A Zooland Romance" and a "Jerry on the Job" cartoon, "A Busy Day." It records the fact that America de Santis, a young woman detective, claims over 500 arrests each year. It shows how the wits of clever thieves are met by the equally sharp wits of the guardians of property rights. The hero of the "zooland romance" is an orang-outang.

Many Leading Theatres Book the New Selznick News Reel

THAT motion picture theatres have a place on their screens for a well-edited and variegated news reel is evidenced in the partial list of bookings announced this week for the new Selznick news reel, which will flicker its way into the film industry on Easter Sunday. Following that date it will appear in motion picture programs twice a week, giving a complete and concise account of what is going on locally, nationally and internationally.

Included in the theatres which have already booked the reel, plans for which have been in the process of completion for over a year, are the Strand on Broadway in New York, Sid Grauman's new palace of motion pictures in Los Angeles, the Clevelander in Seattle, and the Colonial in Indianapolis. These three representative houses in the East, Middle West and the West, indicate that the entire country is in line for the news reel, says a Selznick announcement.

Additional bookings, scheduled to begin with the first reel on Easter Sunday, embrace the Regent in Buffalo, Temple in Toledo, Dome in Yonkstown, Crystal in Indianapolis, Alamo in Louisville, Regent in Rochester and the Madison in Detroit.

Railway System Shown in Newest Pictograph

GUARDIANS of Our Gateways," a study of the efficiency of America's great railroad systems; an "Out of the Inkwell" cartoon by Max Fleischer, and "Mat Weaving," a film photographed in the Fiji Islands, showing the expertness of the natives, comprise the contents of the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph B7031.

The railroad pictures are particularly timely just now when there is considerable speculation about the possible results of their return to individual owners after the period of government management. The Pictograph cameraman shows the care with which a train is safeguarded against accident and guided through the maze of tracks leading into a big city station. The intricate little electric devices, the switches and the levers by which the course of the train is directed, are caught by the camera.

Max Fleischer, creator of the now famous "Out of the Inkwell" clown, surpasses himself in the episodes presented in this Pictograph.

How highly the art of mat weaving has been developed by the natives of the Fiji Islands is shown as the closing subject on this reel.

New York Civic League Seeks to Amend Sunday Observance Part of Penal Law

THE New York Civic League, which in the past has strenuously opposed any measures introduced in the legislature toward permitting Sunday motion picture shows in the state, showed its hand during the past few days in the introduction in the assembly of a bill which seeks to amend the penal law in relation to the exhibition of motion pictures on the first day of the week. The bill was introduced by Assemblyman Hunter and has been referred to the codes committee, in which it will in all probability die an uneventful death between now and April 24, when the legislature is scheduled to adjourn.

The new portion reads as follows: "Motion picture exhibitions, where an admission fee is charged, are hereby prohibited on the first day of the week."

This is an amendment to the bill which was introduced and passed last year and which permits each municipality to decide whether or not its picture theatres shall be open after 2 o'clock Sunday afternoons. The remainder of the bill is to be omitted, which means that no municipality will be able, should the Hunter bill be passed, to determine if its theatres shall be open on Sundays, and virtually wiping out every picture theatre in the state so far as Sundays is concerned, by reason of the fact that no admission could be charged.

This measure is statewide and takes in every city and every village. Among legislators it was admitted that there was very little likelihood of the bill being reported out of committee, even though the New York State Civic League should exert its utmost efforts to get it to a vote. Senators and Assemblymen interviewed admitted that the present state of things, so far as Sunday motion picture shows was concerned in their own sections, was highly satisfactory, and that they saw no need of stirring up the matter again or of attempting to close the theatres because of some desire on the part of an organization that has tasted defeat in the past and has revived a forlorn hope of being able to accomplish something at this session.

New Duncan Serial Gets Long Booking in Hartford

VITAGRAPH issues the report that its latest super-serial, "The Silent Avenger," of which William Duncan is star, has been booked for a solid week-run or 105-day continuous showing at a big theatre. The Majestic Theatre of Hartford, Conn., is the showhouse which has undertaken this stand.

Vitagraph further declares that the serial had reached, in the third week of its booking campaign, double the amount of bookings signed in a similar period for any previous chaptered production released by the company.

"The Silent Avenger" enters this early success on the crest of a campaign which has been forecasting it for weeks. The serial is the first of the million-dollar brood to come from the William Duncan unit of Vitagraph. The company declares the picture brings forward a serial style of action and spectacle which depends mainly upon heart interest. The thrills are not merely thrills but are enactments clothed with dramatic elements.

The William Duncan production is declared to have universal appeal from the nature of its story and by reason of the established popularity of its star.

The general booking reports received up to date are declared to show that "The Silent Avenger" is making big inroads into the high class theatres, most of which never before ran chaptered subjects.

International Has Pictures of German Raider's Exploits

SCENES similar to those in a Hearst News reel issued last November showing the sinking of allied vessels during the war by German submarines are contained in 2,000 feet of German film secured abroad against the wishes of the Ebert government, which will be released by Universal in four installments, beginning with International News No. 13 on April 1 and ending with No. 16 on April 12.

Similar these scenes are, but the new film has much more "meat" in it than had its predecessor. The views were taken on board of the famous raider Moewe and the crew is shown at work and at play. Besides views of beautiful sailing vessels and sturdy freighters disappearing beneath the surface of the ocean, there also are views of the transfer of prisoners in mid-ocean, the coaling from a captured ship, the harbor of Wilhelmshaven and German sea lords congratulating the Moewe commander upon his safe return to Germany after the first cruise.

No wonder Germany did not want these pictures to reach America, for one of the boats shown being sunk is the Yarrowdale, which carried Americans who were taken prisoners and landed in Germany. That unpleasant incident nearly caused an earlier entry of this country into the war. Another boat sunk by a shot below the water-line carried 1,200 horses in its hold.

The 2,000 feet of film are crowded with interesting scenes. What a great adjunct to American recruiting campaigns it would have been if the picture could have been shown in this country before the armistice was signed! Seen now, it merely keeps fresh in our minds the memory of the attempt of the Huns to dominate the world.

National to Reissue Talmadge Film.

Joe Brandt, general representative of the National Film Corporation of America, announces that his company is contemplating the reissue of its first Norma Talmadge production, entitled "Captivating Mary Carstairs."

"Captivating Mary Carstairs" was produced by National several years ago and met with big success wherever it was shown. The call for Talmadge pictures has become so great that National has decided to answer the insistent demands from exhibitors to reissue this picture. It will be marketed on the state rights plan.

Newspapers Are to Publish Joe Martin's "Adventures"

JOE MARTIN, Universal's almost human orang-outang and the central figure of many Universal comedies, is being exploited throughout the country by a novel and highly successful method—the publication of a comic strip entitled "The Life, Loves and Adventures of Mr. Joe Martin." These strips are issued weekly and sent gratis in six-column mat form to those newspapers requesting them.

There is no advertising or Universal publicity connected with these comics except the name "Joe Martin" and caricatured representation of the famous monk. The subject matter of these cartoons is a varied assortment of humorous situations depicting Joe's adventures from the time he is lured from the jungle home with promises of stardom and high pay.

The artist is Forest A. McGinn, a newspaper cartoonist, who worked on several Middle West papers before the war. He was severely wounded at St. Mihiel, where he went into action with the marine brigade.

Universal is planning to have Joe make a personal appearance in those towns where the comic is published. Many exhibitors have seized the opportunity for this exploitation and have arranged with local papers for the publication of the series.

Newspaper men regard the comic as one of the cleanest and most legitimate publicity stunts ever put forward by a film company.

W. W. Whitson, of San Diego, Praises Artistic Presentations on West Coast

W W. WHITSON, leading exhibitor of San Diego, California, is in New York on a visit. His first official act was to pay a visit to the offices of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation, where he delivered his personal congratulations to Mr. Kane, president, and organizer, and declared that in his opinion Chas. Ray, star of the new concern, was slated for a pre-eminent position among box office winners.

Mr. Whitson, who is owner of the Plaza Theatre, has come to look over the field and to study the latest methods of picture presentation, in which he is a specialist. He declared that the West is keeping pace with the East in this branch of the show business, and that in many respects the picture palaces of the Pacific Coast could teach eastern exhibitors a few things in prologue work, lighting effects and artistic presentation.

The San Diego showman cited the tremendous expansion in all sides of picture exhibiting as a sign of the development of the industry in this country. The reports heard everywhere of great investment of capital in the producing end of the business have tended to overshadow the corresponding expansion in the exhibiting branch of the pictures. This, according to Mr. Whitson, is one of the marvelous business facts of today. Construction work on big picture palaces is preceding in Los Angeles, San Francisco and other West Coast cities. In addition the present owners of picture houses are improving them at cost equalling in some cases the original outlay of the theatre.

Improved Presentation of Features.

Everywhere special emphasis is being laid upon better presentation of pictures. Exhibitors who were satisfied a short time ago with one or two musicians have now installed elaborate orchestras or expensive organs. Similarly, large sums of money are being spent on stage sets, where formerly an inexpensive drop sufficed. In his own theatre Mr. Whitson reports the addition this year of an elaborate stage-set done by one of the foremost scenic artists in the business.

The California exhibitor declared himself an advocate of dignified picture exploitation and reported that many tie-ups with local organizations had proved of unusual value during the run of special pictures. He insisted, however, that picture honesty was the only policy to adopt in dealing with the regular patrons of one's theatres.

Mr. Whitson is accompanied by his son, George Whitson, who is assistant to his father and who is a progressive in picture exploitation. The California film men are in town for an indefinite stay.

"The Valley of Tomorrow" Is Booked by a Minnesota Pastor

A SPECIAL booking of "The Valley of Tomorrow" at the request of the Rev. J. A. Killian, for his church auditorium at Melrose, Minn., bespeaks a broader and more advanced point of view on the part of the clergy both in regard to movies in general and in regard to the portrayal of actual life dramas in particular. The producer, who has tried to follow the mean between an honest public made up of all kinds of normal people and the over fearful, so-called "good" people, and at the same time to produce a Western drama with punch and strength and life, has been put to it. "The Valley of Tomorrow" is a case in point.

This "Flying A" super-drama draws a vivid picture of virile Americans who migrated from the mountains of Kentucky to the broad plains and rugged mountains of the glorious West. The force of the old eye for an eye tradition, "No Morgan sleeps till vengeance is done; that's our ancient law," was broken by the struggle of the hero of the story, battling with his own awakening conscience and the united reactionary stand of his kinsmen and friends.

Of course, true to history, blood was shed. Was ever a battle won by imperfect mortals without heart-rending scenes? But through the uphill struggle the higher concept of a more advanced ideal won out, and one could not leave the picturization of the subject without feeling "the nobler nature within him stirred to life."

Cast Is Named for "The Figurehead."

Advices received from the West Coast carry the information that the cast of the Selznick picture, "The Figurehead," in which Lewis J. Selznick will present Eugene O'Brien, has been chosen. Among the more important feminine parts is one for which Anna Q. Nilsson has been engaged.

Edwin Stevens has been engaged by Harry Rapp, West Coast production manager for Selznick, for a prominent part. Others are Ora Carewe, Joseph Gerard and Kate Perkins.

Brownell, Universal Scenario Editor, Deplores Filming of Many Stage Plays

IN line with the Universal policy of encouraging the development of screen writers, in the belief that screen literature is of itself apart and should be divorced from the stage, John C. Brownell, scenario editor for Universal, has issued a statement deploring the "practice of filming stage failures" and calling for original stories for screen productions.

"As long as film producers continue to pay big prices for a play that has been a failure on the stage and hesitate about accepting an original scenario written especially for the screen," he said, "just so long do they continue to admit that the screen is inferior to the stage in artistry and in public estimation.

"All stage plays, in order to make acceptable material for the screen, must be rewritten. Dialogue must be changed into action, continuity must be supplied, the many things that are supposed to occur between acts must be actually shown to happen in the film version of the story. Then, if the story has intrinsic value, and it is properly played and directed, it will make a good picture.

Stage and Screen Plays Little Alike.

"The majority of plays, however, are not suitable for the screen, as many producers have learned at great cost. When a big price is paid for a stage success the producer is simply paying for prestige—for a name—for an advertising point. He thus gives the spoken play first place in importance over the silent drama. The picture producer actually has it in his power, with his vast resources and his vast audiences, to put the screen production in the first place and so popularize an original story that it will be sought after as a vehicle for some star of the audible stage.

"The stage and the screen are allied, it is true. Both belong to the dramatic family but their relationship does not go much further. Each requires individual treatment; each has its own technique. Occasionally you will find a play that lends itself to screen treatment, but in the majority of cases only the bare outline can be utilized and the rest of the garment must be supplied out of the whole cloth.

Originals or Magazine Stories.

"Universal prefers original stories written by men who understand the requirements of the screen or it will buy clever magazine stories that contain the ingredients of a good motion picture play. Occasionally it will reach out for a stage play that has screen possibilities. But our chief desire is to obtain first-hand stories where the action transpires instead of being discussed by the characters, comedies where the humor lies in the situations and incidents instead of the lines—stories that can be told by the players in pantomime and not by an endless succession of sub-titles. Most of Universal's biggest successes were scored by original stories, written especially for film purposes."

"Indiscreet Wives" Is Next Alice Lake Special Picture

INDISCREET WIVES" is the title decided upon for Metro's next big special production with Alice Lake at the head of a notable cast. The picture is an adaptation of a stage play by Julie Herne, daughter of the late James A. Herne. Its original title was "An Outsider." John E. Ince, who directed Miss Lake in Finis Fox's powerful melodrama, "Should a Woman Tell?" will again guide this brilliant young actress in "Indiscreet Wives."

The production will be made at the Metro studios in Hollywood. Miss Lake has just finished her work at these studios in a picturization of James A. Herne's immortal stage drama, "Shore Acres"; hence she is doing two Herne plays—by father and daughter—in succession.

Miss Lake is in the midst of a fortnight's vacation prior to starting her new vehicle. This respite from studio responsibilities is being devoted by her chiefly to a selection of new spring apparel, with emphasis on hats.

Blackton Enters Last Half of First Year Under Pathe

J. STUART BLACKTON enters the last half of his first year as a producer of Pathe pictures by issuing "The Blood Barrier," considered the most virile of the five photo-dramas he has released through Pathe. Issue of "The Blood Barrier," the last story of the late Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady to be filmed, is set for April 11, almost six months to a day after "The Moonshine Trail," Blackton's first Pathe attraction, went out to exhibitors. Meanwhile he has produced "Dawn," "My Husband's Other Wife" and "Respectable by Proxy," all of which have been big box office winners.

In many ways "The Blood Barrier" is a distinctive offering, differing entirely from any other Blackton picture distributed by Pathe. It is of the melodramatic type, marked by rapid action from start to finish. Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon will again be seen in the chief character. Mr. Blackton has given his production a noteworthy cast, which includes Louis Dean, a screen veteran, and William R. Dunn, noted "heavy."

In "The Blood Barrier," Pathe believes Mr. Blackton has a production that readily will meet with popular approval. It is from a story of universal appeal, dealing with a topic that strikes forcefully for true Americanism; and it is pure entertainment.

Mystery Surrounds Release of Second Neilan Picture

MARSHALL NEILAN'S second independent release following "The River's End," which is breaking box office records everywhere, will be released the early part of May via First National.

Considerable mystery surrounds this production, and little information as to its title and theme is available either at the Marshall Neilan offices in New York or at the First National headquarters. It was stated at the Neilan offices that the picture offers a title and a series of situations that immediately place it in the front ranks as a box office attraction. The story is said to hold a big surprise in the way of plot and to offer exceptional exploitation possibilities.

Matt Moore has the leading role. In the leading feminine role Marjorie Daw, who added to her fame in "The River's End," again appears under the direction of Marshall Neilan.

The film is now receiving its final treatment at the Rothacker laboratories in Chicago, and a sample print is expected in New York at the end of this month. Meantime the Neilan Hollywood organization is busily engaged on the production of the third independent release for First National. The story is said to contain one of

"The Road to Divorce," with Mary MacLaren, Due April 5

UNIVERSAL announces "The Road to Divorce," with Mary MacLaren, as a special attraction, to be released on April 5. This picture was directed by Philip Rosen, the maker of several Universal successes. It is taken from a story by J. Grubb Alexander. Miss MacLaren is supported by Edward Peil, Bonnie Hill, Eugenie Forde, Helen Davidge, Roy Stecker and others.

Universal serial releases for the week are "The Assassin's Knife," the ninth episode of "Elmo the Fearless," with Elmo Lincoln, and "The Furnace of Fury," the fifteenth episode of "The Lion Man," featuring Kathleen O'Connor and Jack Perrin.

A picture full of pep and ginger is the latest Lyons and Moran comedy, "Downing an Uprising." A new Rainbow comedy, "Champion Loser," featuring June Love, Billy Engel and Harry Sweet, is the other fun maker for the week.

The second of Major Jack Allen's Animal Hunt pictures, "The Story of the Wolf," also will be released. The International and Universal New Screen Magazine news reels complete the program.

Clara Beranger Makes a Big Hit.

Clara Beranger, who has recently completed the scenario for "Civilian Clothes," in which Thomas Meighan is to star for Paramount, was told by the director to write in some exteriors in order to relieve the monotony of a series of interiors. This Miss Beranger did and submitted the script at the studio.

The next time she had occasion to go over to the studio she suddenly found herself the center of a group of players and studio workers, who started talking to her about her script of "Civilian Clothes." This seemed a most unusual performance, and then the secret came out. Thinking only of location, and not of prohibition, Miss Beranger had, without malice aforethought, written in Havana as the place where the exteriors were to be taken.

Enuf sed! The company and the necessary property people are now down there. Did Miss Beranger go too? She did not! But she discovered a sure way of making a hit.

John C. Ragland

Formerly general sales manager for Realart, but now general manager for Arthur S. Kane Pictures. He has also been elected a director.

Ragland Resigns as Realart's Sales Head to Become an Official of Kane Pictures

JOHAN C. RAGLAND has resigned from the position of general sales manager of Realart Pictures Corporation to become general manager of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation in which he has been elected a director.

Mr. Ragland, who has had a brilliant career in the selling end of motion pictures, and whose record with the Realart company has been unusual, took over his new office at the Kane Corporation on Monday, March 22.

With a background of experience in the theatrical and motion picture business extending from young manhood, Mr. Ragland is considered one of the best posted film executives in the industry and brings to the Kane corporation not only a technical knowledge of selling and distribution, but also a wide personal acquaintance with hundreds of exhibitors in all parts of the country.

Mr. Ragland's record with Realart Pictures has been one of the big accomplishments of contemporary sales work. Beginning his connection there as manager of the St. Louis branch, Mr. Ragland proved his ability in short order and was soon asked to become general sales manager in the home offices, where he has remained up to his present affiliation as general manager of the Kane company.

In leaving the Realart company to go with Arthur S. Kane, Mr. Ragland expresses a deep appreciation of the fine spirit of friendliness and co-operation which he has experienced in that concern at all times. The film executive declares that in ending his services with Realart on the best of possible terms, he terminates one of the most pleasant associations of his theatrical career, and retains for his former colleagues only the warmest of good wishes.

Kane Praises Ragland Highly.

"The election of Mr. Ragland as a director of the Kane company and his appointment as general manager is regarded with the greatest satisfaction by officials of this company," says Mr. Kane in a statement. "With a record of sales activity behind him that is hard to equal, Mr. Ragland represents, in addition, the highest type of the gentlemanly quality in business. For a long time prominently identified with the business management of big theatrical and motion picture enterprises, he has established a reputation among showmen of the country as a straightforward, plain dealing business man, whose honesty and human personality have won him personal as well as business friends. This is the element that makes for progress and co-operation in any industry, and by a long practise of man to man relationship with exhibiting interests, Mr. Ragland has won the confidence and esteem of the entire industry."

"Aside from the personal value of a man of Mr. Ragland's good character, the Kane company feels that it is adding to its forces a film executive of vision, whose knowledge of picture conditions is not of one territory but extends to the far ends of the country, and who appreciates the problems of the owners of small houses as well as the needs of the big chains, with which he has been long associated. Mr. Ragland will bring to the directing councils of our company an intimate knowledge of national conditions and a personal acquaintanceship with film men."

Exports Nearly $1,000,000 a Month.

Exports of moving picture films now total nearly a million dollars a month, according to reports from the Department of Commerce, our foreign trade in January including shipments of 14,734,046 linear feet of unexposed film, valued at $341,647, and 12,015,051 linear feet of exposed film, worth $633,359.

Our most important customers for unexposed film are England and France, which took over seven million feet apiece, while England, Canada, Brazil and Argentina each took a million feet or more of exposed film.

Vincent Plans Novelties in Sets.

Some new ideas in the way of sets are promised in the forthcoming production of the American Cinema Corporation.

James Vincent, president of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, who recently signed a contract with American Cinema to produce this picture—not yet titled—at a large figure, has already drawn up designs for some sets in which will be introduced some novelties in the way of technical direction. The exact nature of these innovations is being kept a secret for the present. Shooting of scenes began this week.

Mayflower Reveals for First Time Nature of New Chautard Picture; to Tell Cast Soon

THE production which Emile Chautard is now preparing at the Paragon Studios, Fort Lee, is based on a widely known stage play dealing with life after death. Actual filming has been completed. The director is now cutting and assembling the picture, which will be presented by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation.

This is the first intimation made by Mayflower concerning the nature of the new Chautard subject. The title and cast are being withheld pending final completion of the production. It is hinted, however, that an important role has been assigned to one of the country's most celebrated spiritual mediums.

The secrecy surrounding Chautard's recent activities at the studio has given rise to considerable speculation in the trade. Mayflower's statement leads to the belief that the production now under way will be the most ambitious undertaking of the director's career.

The arrival in this country of Sir Oliver Lodge, eminent British scientist, has given further impetus to interest in the supernatural with which the story is said to deal.

In its announcement, Mayflower particularly stresses the timeliness of the forthcoming Chautard production. Though totally dissimilar from "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," Chautard's previous picture which Mayflower presented through Realart, the director's new subject will contain an equal measure of dramatic force and suspense. The picture, it is declared, will be lavishly mounted.

Full details, including title, author and cast, will be made public upon final completion of the picture which, it is expected, will take place within a week.

Expect "Yellow Typhoon" to Eclipse "In Old Kentucky"

IF reports from the coast are to be believed, Anita Stewart's latest production, "The Yellow Typhoon," by Harold MacGrath, will eclipse any production in which that star has ever appeared, not excepting "In Old Kentucky," which is proving one of the big successes of the present season.

The early scenes are laid in Washington where twin sisters, Hilda and Berta Nordstrom, both played by Miss Stewart, are seen in their home life. From there Berta elopes to Paris, from where she lives with a new lover and turns up in Shanghai.

The various locals to be represented high versatility in the dressing of the sets. Two of the Shanghai sets representing a big gambling hall and the boudoir-office of the proprietress will rank among the most artistic and effective scenes.

"The Yellow Typhoon" will be released as a Louis B. Mayer-First National attraction. It was adapted to the screen by Monte M. Katterjohn and the supporting cast includes Ward Crane, Donald MacDonald, Joseph Kilgour, E. J. Brady, George Fisher, Mrs. Orlamond and Frank Tokunaga.

New Binghamton House Picks Goldwyn Films for Opening

ANOTHER triumph for Goldwyn pictures was scored when two of the current releases were booked as opening attractions for the new Strand Theatre in Binghamton, N. Y., a $300,000 house that is classed with the finest modern theatres in the state. Having made a careful survey of all of the available material on the market, the manager selected "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" for the first half of the opening week and "The Blooming Angel" for the remaining days.

Both of these productions have met with popular favor at the New York Strand and other leading theatres in the largest cities of the country where they were given pre-release showings. In "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," an adaptation of the novel by John Fox, Jr., Jack Pickford, makes his first appearance as a Goldwyn star, and in the opinion of competent critics he gives the best performance of his career.

The second selection, "The Blooming Angel," is a Wallace Irwin Saturday Evening Post story in which Madge Kennedy is starred.

A. J. Callaghan and Other Chicago Men Sponsor Bessie Love Producing Company

FOLLOWING the announcement of negotiations between Bessie Love and Chicago capitalist interests represented by A. J. Callaghan comes further confirmation this week that the former Vitagraph star is to be presented in a series of high-grade vehicles adapted from big novels and produced under expert direction.

The formation of the Bessie Love Producing Company is the result of the determination of a group of Chicago film men to place this star in surroundings which will bring out in a bigger way than ever the talent which she possesses. Considerable money has already been spent in the new purchase of several novels for screen adaptation and in the rental of the Bessie Love studio at 6642 Santa Monica Boulevard, Hollywood, where the star is already at work.

Andrew J. Callaghan, the Chicago film executive, who is at the head of the Chicago syndicate which is sponsoring Miss Love in her forthcoming independent productions, has retained the services of two of the most able directors in the industry, Joseph de Grasse and Ida May Park. Miss Love recently concluded an engagement with the Vitagraph company. Since then three of the large producing companies have been bidding for her services.

To Provide Superior Story Material.

The affiliation of Miss Love, as an independent star, with the Callaghan organization follows her own expressed desire and also the desire of her sponsors to devote much time, thought and money to the adequate handling of a personality discovered by D. W. Griffith and popular with fans the country over. Mr. Callaghan declared that practically no limit is to be placed on the sum to be expended for superior story material for Miss Love and that available copyrighted books and stories suited to her personality will be purchased.

"After having seen the first results of Miss Love's work under the expert direction of Mr. de Grasse and Miss Park, I am entirely satisfied to have cast my lot with this remarkable young actress," said Mr. Callaghan in a statement for the Los Angeles studios. "We believe that Miss Love has never yet had her dramatic qualities fully brought out on the screen. For a long time we have had our eyes on this charming little lady, who combines with youth and beauty a rare feeling for dramatic expression, and we feel highly elated that she has become our partner.

"It is plain, of course, that Miss Love comes to the Callaghan organization with a substantial financial interest in her future work. With such an incentive, and with the further advantage of big vehicles, first-class direction and all the time she desires, the motion picture industry is due to see a new Bessie Love, a recreated artist with all the charm that has endeared her to the picture fans of the nation placed in entirely new surroundings."

Mayflower Presents Bird Millman.

Bird Millman, aerial performer, has been added to the list of international celebrities appearing in motion pictures. The circus star makes her screen debut in "The Deep Purple," R. A. Walsh's first independent production to be presented by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation.

Miss Millman lately starred in the Ziegfeld Follies. She has already commenced work under Walsh's direction. She will appear as a tight-wire walker in an elaborate cabaret scene, performing many acrobatic feats. Upon completion of her work she will join the Barnum and Bailey circus which opens its season at Madison Square Garden, New York.

Reproduce Australian Scenes.

Reports from Vitagraph's studio at Hollywood, reveal that this company has brought the antipodes to this country. It is declared that Australian scenes and the customs of the remote bush people half way round the world have been reproduced for the latest Earle Williams feature, "Captain Swift." The picture is adapted from the play by C. Hadden Chambers.

Thurston Hall in "Prince of Pines."

Thurston Hall, widely known as leading man in motion pictures, is announced as prominent in the cast of "Prince of Pines," Selznick production which is being directed by Burton George as a so-called all-star production. Others in the cast are Arline Pretty, Anna Lehr, William Davidson and Anita Booth.

Judge Bessie on the Bench.

Associated Exhibitors Silently Active; F. C. Quimby Reticent About Deals Closed

WITH the arrival in New York from California of F. C. Quimby, its general manager, the Associated Exhibitors, Inc., sponsors the news that negotiations virtually have been completed for the early release through Pathe exchanges of several big attractions. It is also stated that the details of arrangements for several sources of future productions soon will be made public.

Close on the heels of this information, as to which Mr. Quimby and other officers are quite reticent at present, comes the further statement that it will be but a very short time before the hundreds of exhibitors, who have expressed interest in the organization, will have made known to them the full scope and workings of the sub-franchise part of the Associated Exhibitors' plans.

Developments Brought Quimby Back.

It is understood that Mr. Quimby cut short his visit to the Coast because of a proposition that developed in New York during his absence, and which now is in the process of being welded into a powerful part of the co-operative machine under whose workings every factor in the industry will benefit.

At present the Associated Exhibitors are being represented in California by Harry Crandall, treasurer of the association and owner of a string of theatres in Washington, D. C., who is known to be carrying on many of the negotiations started by Mr. Quimby, as well as opening new channels of benefit to all concerned. Information from Los Angeles is to the effect that several big stars, directors and authors soon will begin work in the furtherance of the plans of the Associated Exhibitors, but that definite announcement as to names and connections cannot be made at present because of existing contracts.

Quiet As to Accomplishments.

Meanwhile, the organization is working with enthusiastic activity, marshalling its various component parts into a co-ordinate unit powerful enough to make itself one of the biggest factors in the industry the moment its opening gun is fired. This is possible, it is said, largely through the power of Pathe Exchange, Inc., and the courses laid out through the experience and judgment of men like Paul Brunet, Messmore Kendall, Edward Bowes, and many of the other prominent persons who are already connected with the organization.

When seen at his offices Mr. Quimby was very reticent as to what he had accomplished in California. "While several important deals have been closed," he said, "neither Associated Exhibitors, nor the individuals and organizations working with them are ready to make known the connections at the present moment. We are even further advanced right now than we had ever hoped to be, and the enthusiasm shown on every side is itself on indication of what can be expected of the Associated Exhibitors."

Hodkinson Reviews Comments on Louise Glaum Production

EXCLAMATIONS of surprise and amazement, flat confessions of having been startled and some few protests over having been shocked by J. Parker Read, Jr.'s latest Louise Glaum production, "Sex," to be distributed by W. W. Hodkinson, are the emotional demonstrations that have followed the showing of C. Gardner Sullivan's story to the critics of the motion picture trade journals and the New York daily papers.

"No critic dares to forecast other than a financial success for Miss Glaum's new production and the lavish praise of the beauties and the richness of the production are sustained by an immediate nationwide demand for the picture to play pre-release engagements in the large cities on April 11," says a Hodkinson announcement.

The picture opens a week's engagement at Fabian's Garden Theatre in Paterson, N. J., on March 29, and Charles Dooley, general manager of the Fabian enterprises, took this chance by rushing his opening after being told there was a possibility that the lithographs and certain accessories could not be definitely guaranteed of delivery in advance of that date.

Trade showings of "Sex" are being held this week in the thirty-two cities where the W. W. Hodkinson organization maintains branch managers and sales representation.

"I'm Sure We'll Agree"

Says Mary Miles Minter to Charles Maigne, her new director in Reallart Pictures.

Wesley Barry Will Play for Marshall Neilan in "Penrod"

ANNOUNCEMENT was made by the New York offices of Marshall Neilan Productions that the director-producer would soon start work on his adaptation of Booth Tarkington's famous "Penrod" stories. Initial preparations are now under way at the Neilan studios in Hollywood. Reed Houstis, one of the best known newspaper humorists in the country, will write the continuity. He will also prepare several original boy stories.

The "Penrod" stories have for the past several years appeared in various national magazines and have become one of the foremost series of popular literature. In 1914, the book "Penrod" was published by Doubleday, Page & Co. and proved one of the biggest sellers of the day. In 1916, that company published a sequel by Tarkington in book form entitled "Penrod and Sam."

As a play, "Penrod" proved an instantaneous success. The production is still meeting with big success on the road.

For the title role of Penrod, Mr. Neilan will present little Wesley Barry, his freckle-faced protégé. The boy's work in "Daddy Long Legs," "The Unpardonable Sin" and other Neilan-directed pictures is well remembered, and it is expected that his work in this film will place him among the foremost stars. Under the eye of Mr. Neilan, little Wesley is now being coached for his big part.

Percy Heath Leaves Universal.

Percy Heath, general manager of the scenario department of Universal, with headquarters at Universal City, has resigned to take a position with the Metro Company. He will be succeeded by Lucien Hubbard, a New York newspaper man who recently has collaborated with George Randolph Chester in the production department of the Vitagraph Company. Mr. Hubbard is now on his way to the Coast.

"The Law of the Yukon," Charles Miller's First Mayflower Feature, Being Assembled

CHARLES MILLER has started work on assembling "The Law of the Yukon," his first special feature for Mayflower Photography Corporation. Camera work was completed a short time ago when the company returned from Port Henry, N. Y. The production is founded on Robert W. Service's poem, "The Law of the Yukon." From the poem Mr. Miller has fashioned a powerful story of life in the Canadian Northwest.

The keenest expectations have been aroused in the picture among officials of Reallart Pictures Corporation, which will distribute it, and preparations have been made to exploit it on a scale proportionate with its importance as one of the outstanding and notable features of the year.

Mr. Miller discussed his experiences in making the picture with great enthusiasm. The blizzards during the winter gave a picturesque background that, according to Mr. Miller, he could not have bettered even by taking his company into the Northwest.

"The storms, however, were not an un-mixed blessing," Mr. Miller said. "They made it extremely difficult at times for us to make progress with our work. This could only be done at the cost of great physical exhaustion, and I believe the company is to be congratulated on the spirit with which they overcome conditions that paralyzed other activities elsewhere."

"For one thing it was very difficult to hunt location. I managed to accomplish something, however, when a local inventor came to the rescue with an automobile sleigh, which was not only ingenious but practical."

"The longest trip we made was one of eleven miles to Maria Center. On this we encountered drifts that were up to our arm-pits and we were forced to carry the dogs through as they floundered almost helplessly in the light snow under their heavy harness. I think the record that the company made in that locality deserves to be mentioned."

Riesenfled Takes Criterion to Give Features Long Runs

THE Criterion Theatre, at Broadway and Forty-fourth street, New York City, will be turned into the first long-run motion picture house in New York, beginning on Sunday, April 24, under the supervision of Hugo Riesenfled, whose work as managing director of the Rivoli and Rialto theatres has made him known wherever motion pictures are shown. The first production booked for the new house is Cecil B. De Mille's "Why Change Your Wife," written by William De Mille and with Thomas Meighan and Gloria Swanson in the leading roles. It will stay at the Criterion indefinitely. So confident is Mr. Riesenfled of the pulling power of the De Mille creation that no second picture has been booked.

There will be an orchestra and other music on the bill, but the doctor refuses to make the details of the program known in advance of opening day. He plans to offer a surprise, a form of entertainment that will be different from that offered at the Rivoli and Rialto, and still combine the basic elements of big picture and music.

The work of remodeling the lobby and redecorating will be begun in time to allow of opening the house on the date set. A larger lobby will be constructed and the entrance so changed as to eliminate the present congestion at Broadway and Forty-fourth street, which has been a serious handicap to the place. The redecorating of the interior will be done under the personal supervision of Mr. Riesenfled, with the stage work in the hands of Willy Pogany.

"The World Needs to Laugh," Says Originator of "Jiggs"

HUNDREDS of newspapers in which the McManus cartoon, "Bringing Up Father" has been a feature for several years, have announced to their readers the advent of Jiggs in motion pictures. Johnny Ray and Margaret Fitzroy, who are featured as Jiggs and Mrs. Jiggs, have been photographed and in scores of the papers the screen actors of the comedies have been compared with the original comic characters so well known to newspaper readers.

Many tie-ups with newspapers and theatres for the mutual advertising and exploitation of "Bringing Up Father" have been reported, and from the volume of inquiries to Pathe Exchange, Inc., great success is predicted for the comedies, which begin with "Jiggs in Society."

"What the world needs today as never before is a tonic of laughter—pure, simple, unadulterated laughter, even the kind that makes some folks fat," George McManus said. "Sorrow is an awful cross for an amusement-loving people to bear, but what is worse than worry? Anybody scrutinizing the newspaper columns today must be forcibly impressed with the positive indications that America is starting to worry her head off."

"There are two patent nostrums—the funny strips in the newspapers and the funny reels in the movies. Everybody reads the newspapers and I don't know anybody who doesn't enjoy the movies. I know funny strips are doing their share in the way of making people happy."

Cast of "Children Not Wanted."

The cast of "Children Not Wanted," the Crest production which exhibitors will find available through Republic Distributing Corporation, was announced this week in a statement from Briton N. Busch, president of Republic, who at the same time declared this an exceptional picture of its kind.

In the principal role, or star part, of the feature is Edith Day. Dorothy Walters, Jean Robertson, Ruth Sullivan, Lumsden Hare and Kenneth Beaton are other players prominent in the cast.

"Children Not Wanted" is a six-reel production from a short story by Stuart Sinclair and directed by Paul Scardon. Carle Carlton, president of Crest Pictures, supervised the feature.

Three years after Epes Winthrop Sargent established in Moving Picture World his department of Advertising for Exhibitors, other trade papers took up the idea

From the two following scenes it sort of looks as though they could use a couple in "Trailed by Three," an Arthur Beck serial released by Pathe.

Many Theatrical Managers Turned Down" Famous "Shore Acres," Now a Metro Play

SHORE ACRES," the Metro picturization of James A. Herne's immortal drama of New England life, with Alice Lake heading a distinguished cast, was one of the first plays in the history of the American theatre to achieve the run of "a hundred nights." In 1892, when "Shore Acres" was first produced, three months in the same playhouse was a long period of time for any production to last, and the record made by the Herne play at the Boston Museum was considered as nothing short of phenomenal.

This record of "Shore Acres" is especially remarkable in view of the great difficulty its author, James A. Herne, had in getting his now famous play produced. Mr. Herne was the American theatre's first apostle of realism, and his methods of simplicity and naturalism in attaining dramatic effects were bitterly opposed by the producing managers of the day, who catered to the tastes of a public nourished on a dramatic fare of cheap, artificial clap-trap and mock heroics. It was therefore increasingly difficult for the author of "Shore Acres" to get a hearing from the men who saw nothing in his percept of "truth for art's sake."

His Faith Finally Justified.

It so happened that "Shore Acres" went the weary rounds of New York theatrical producers and was time after time returned to its author, who was making so desperate a fight against odds. Mr. Herne had written and produced "Hearts of Oak," "The Minute Men" and "Margaret Fleming," but in "Shore Acres" he felt that he had achieved something new and something which, in a world where material interests hold full sway, would outlast the very theatre walls that housed its production. Time alone justified his faith.

The script was finally presented to Mr. Field, of the Boston Museum, who at length accepted the play for production largely on the strength of a letter written him by William Dean Howells, a close friend of the author. The history of its success is best contained in an appreciation of Mr. Herne at the time of his death by Hamlin Garland, the veteran novelist. In speaking of its first appearance before the public, Mr. Garland said:

"That was a glorious night at the Boston Museum when 'Shore Acres' began its golden tale of a hundred nights and telegrams from New York poured in upon Mr. Herne offering 'time' that formerly he had begged for!"

Fine Photographic Shots Promised.

This was the commencement of a record in play production that has been seldom, if ever, equalled in the American theatre. It marked the beginning of "Shore Acres'" success on the stage—a success that has lasted for thirty years and has established a new school of dramatic craftsmanship. And in addition it marked the beginning of easier times for Mr. Herne, for the play earned him a fortune. Following its record run at the Boston museum Mr. Herne played the famous drama of New England life throughout the country, so that its very title became a household word.

The screen production of "Shore Acres," just completed by Metro, with Alice Lake as the featured player, is heralded as a notable achievement on the silver sheet. In the picturization are contained all the qualities that were part of its author's ideals and which made the play for nearly thirty years one of the very greatest American dramas, it is said. Rex Ingram directed the screen production, and among other things achieved some exceptional photographic shots of a storm at sea and the wreck of a coastwise sailing ship.

"April Folly" Scheduled for Release March 21

APRIL FOLLY," adapted from the novel by Cynthia Stockley and presenting Marion Davies as its star, is the Cosmopolitan production which shares with Wallace Reid in "Excuse My Dust," the honors of the Paramount-Artcraft release schedule for March 21.

The exploitation possibilities, backed by one of the biggest newspaper campaigns involving the use of full-page spreads in all the Hearst papers, ever put behind a single production, ought to commend themselves to exhibitors in cities and towns of all sizes, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation maintains.

Conway Tearle is Miss Davies' leading man, having the role of the publisher-hero. J. Herbert Frank is appropriately sinister as the "heavy," and Madoline Marshall, Hattie De Laro, Amelia Summerville, Warren Cook, Spencer Charters and Charles Peyton are also in the cast.

The Wallace Reid picture, "Excuse My Dust," is another of Byron Morgan's Junkpile Handicap stories of automobile adventure which delighted readers of the Saturday Evening Post.

In "Excuse My Dust" (the original title was "The Bear Trap") the players in all the principal roles are identical with those who appeared in "The Roaring Road," Reid's previous picture. Wallace Reid is again seen as "Toodles" Walden, the speed fiend; Ann Little is Dorothy, now married to "Toodles"; Theodore Roberts is "Old Man" Ward, Dorothy's father, head of the Darco Company; Guy Oliver is the mechanic; Tully Marshall is seen as the head of the rival firm. Sam Ward directed.

Big Advertising Drive on Pathe's "Lifting Shadows"

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC., announces a big special advertising campaign on "Lifting Shadows," starring Emmy Wehlen, as the special feature of the Pathe program scheduled for release April 4. Outside of the regular exploitation aids for exhibitors, the billboards of New York territory will be used to put over this production in a deserving manner.

It is a typical Leonce Perrett production, emerging from the usual love story to a theme tense and dramatic. Miss Wehlen is seen in an emotional role which taxes her ability. Wyndham Standing is her leading man and Stuart Holmes appears in a villainous role. Julia Swayne Gordon is also prominent in the large cast of players.

Besides the extensive advertising campaign laid out the following advertising aids will be issued: one-sheet; two styles three-sheet; six-sheet; twenty-four sheet; set of colored lobby display; 22 by 28 colored scene; 22 by 28 stars, colored; one, two and three-column ad cuts and mats; one col., one-half col. and thumbnail star cuts and mats; two-col. scene cuts and mats; campaign book, announcement slides; title slug; set of black and whites.

Blache to Direct "New Henrietta."

Herbert Blache has been selected to direct "The New Henrietta," the first Winchell Smith production for Metro, at the company's West Coast studios in Hollywood. Mr. Blache has just finished directing "The Hope," the first of the five great Drury Lane melodramas to be released by Metro. Previous to that he directed May Allison in "The Walk-Offs," the Morosco stage hit by the Hattons.

Metro to Resume Production in New York with Three All-Star Specials Under Karger

STARTING with immediate production of three big special feature pictures enacted by all-star casts, Metro will reopen its New York studios at 3 West Sixty-first street the first week in April. The entire activities of the eastern plant will be under the supervision of Maxwell Karger.

The trio of stories selected for the initial three productions are "Clothes," the society drama by Avery Hopwood and Channing Pollock, to which Metro recently purchased the screen rights; "The Marriages of Mayfair," by Cecil Raleigh, one of the five Drury Lane melodramas on the Metro production list, and "The Tyranny of Weakness," a novel by Charles Neville Buck, just bought for the screen.

Preparations, which included a complete renovation and remodelling of the studios as well as actual work on the scenarios for the new special releases, have been under way for several weeks. M. P. Staulcup, formerly supervisor of art interiors at Metro's west coast plant in Hollywood, has been in New York since the latter part of February taking charge of the overhauling of the Sixty-first street studios.

Zellner Writing Continuity.

"Clothes," the Hopwood-Pollock drama, is being rapidly whipped into continuity form by Arthur Zellner. Mr. Zellner and his wife, Lois Zellner, are both members of the Metro scenario staff. This play was Avery Hopwood's introduction to the American public as a playwright. His play, written in collaboration with Channing Pollock, had its metropolitan premiere September 11, 1906, at the old Manhattan Theatre, Sixth Avenue and Thirty-fourth street, which has since been razed to make place for a department store.

The story is described as "the portrayal of feminine vanity, extravagance and capriciousness, and the disasters to which such weaknesses may lead."

First S-L Production.

"The Tyranny of Weakness," which is to be an S-L Production, distributed by Metro, will be made at the Metro studios. This novel is said to be replete with dramatic situations and deft character drawing that will provide an all-star cast with splendidly contrasted roles. Eugene Walter is writing the continuity for this play.

This production will be the first of the five specials that Arthur Sawyer and Herbert Lubin recently announced would be made by S-L Pictures, Inc.

"The Marriages of Mayfair" will be given elaborate production. This English melodrama has all the punch and swiftness of action that made Drury Lane famous the world over, and it will be interpreted by an ensemble composed entirely of stars.

Metro is not yet ready to announce the names of the directors who will put on these three big specials under Maxwell Karger's personal supervision.

Mary Miles Minter to Play Zangwill's "Nurse Marjorie"

NURSE MARJORIE," an adaptation of the successful stage play by the internationally known playwright, Israel Zangwill, is announced as the forthcoming Mary Miles Minter release by Realart Pictures Corporation. April 4 has been set as the date of release. The picture was viewed recently by Realart officials and evoked enthusiastic praise for the work of the star and of Director William Desmond Taylor.

"Nurse Marjorie" was first produced in London and later scored a success in the United States, its New York City production having a run of over a year with Elinor Robson as the star. Miss Minter has the role of Lady Marjorie, daughter of a proud and aristocratic Irish family.

The adaptation of the story and scenario were made by Julia Crawford Ivers. Clyde Fillmore plays opposite Miss Minter in the role of John Danbury. Mollie MacConnell plays the part of the mother of John Danbury. Frankie Lee, a well-known child actor, has the role of "Orphan Dick."

Others in the cast are Vera Lewis, Arthur Hoyt, George E. Periolat and Frank Leigh.

Anne Cornwall Is Star of "Virginia."

Anne Cornwall is the little star whom Universal has been so mysterious about in connection with "Virginia" the story by Ida M. Evans that is to be put into production shortly at Universal City.

Universal announced the forthcoming production of the picture several weeks ago, withholding the name of the featured player. A new star was promised. It is understood that "Virginia" will be the first of many starring vehicles for Miss Cornwall. At present she is playing with Lyons and Moran in their first five-reel comedy.

She has had considerable experience in comedy pictures. Previously she was a stage success, having played in several musical comedies at the Princess Theatre, in New York.

Hodkinson Has Showings of Holman Day's "King Spruce"

TRADER showings of "King Spruce," starring Mitchell Lewis, the Dial Film Company's vivid picturization of Holman Day's story of the Maine forests, will be held the coming week at all Hodkinson exchanges. True-to-life characters of Northern Maine are seen in this picture, for as Tom Moore knew every nook and cranny of Ireland so does Mr. Day know Maine.

Besides affording the star a role in which he sustains his reputation as an actor of rugged types, "King Spruce" exacts some strong characterizations from a number of screen favorites, who not only made a thorough study of the types in the story but assisted Director Roy Clements in clothing the characters to make them true to life.

Tommy Eye, as portrayed by Joe Ray, is typical of the carefree son of toil one sees working in the great northeast lumber belt. Another character is Prophet Eli, played by Frederick Herzog. Looked up to as a physician, weather forecaster and general adjuster of difficulties arising in the camps by the lumber folk because of his superior book learning. Gus Soville is said to contribute one of the outstanding performances. Mignon Anderson, talented leading woman of the stage and screen, plays opposite Mitchell Lewis. Pretty Betty Wales and Arthur Millette are also seen.

Levy Heads National Pictures in New York

It is announced that Jack Levy has been appointed New York manager of National Picture Theatres, Inc., of which Lewis J. Selznick is president.

Mr. Levy is considered one of the best known film men in New York. He was manager in Manhattan for Fox Film Corporation for several years, and also managed the Philadelphia branch for the Fox organization. He left Fox to join United Picture Theatres as eastern division manager, and in addition to managing the New York branch for United had supervision over the Philadelphia, Washington, Atlanta and Boston branches.

"This Way Out" New Hallroom Comedy.

Percy and Ferdie Hallroom, inseparable for years, have had a falling out. As is usually the case, a woman is to blame—in this instance, a very pretty woman.

Both of the boys fell so hard for her that they fought over her. The battle was staged in a boxing ring in an exclusive club, and since neither of them had ever been in a ring before, the results were comical, to say the least.

This is part of the story of "This Way Out!" which is to be an early Hallroom Boys release, according to Jack Cohn, president of the company. It is the best comedy this firm has yet produced, and is of the type which will be released in the future.

Navy Department to Purchase Pictures When Its Brooklyn Library Is Finished

UPON the completion of the film storage in the Navy Yard, Brooklyn, N. Y., steps will be taken toward the assembling of a library of at least 20,000 reels of film. A library of this size will be necessary to adequately provide for the requirements of naval ships and stations located at distant points.

In order that the officers and men on the various ships may receive the maximum amount of entertainment from the funds available, it has been necessary to decide on a policy. This policy has been definitely decided upon by establishing a maximum price that will be paid by the U. S. Navy Motion Picture Exchange to any distributing organization for the two classes of material referred to.

The maximum price to be paid for new and used prints of current releases will be $65 a reel on orders of $20,000 or more. On orders amounting to $10,000 or less, $70 a reel will be the maximum payment. The maximum price that will be paid for used prints will be $20 a reel. It will be immaterial to the Navy Department whether these prints are purchased outright or whether they are leased for the life of the prints, which might be from nine to eighteen months.

None But the Best Desired.

Prints procured on long-term lease will be returned within eighteen months, and in the event of material being lost or destroyed, the distributor will be furnished with an affidavit covering the circumstances attending such loss or destruction in lieu of the return of the material.

All used prints for which the maximum price of $20 a reel is paid must pass inspection as to the quality of the subject. The physical condition of the print must indicate that it is good for a minimum of at least fifty to sixty exhibitions. The price to be paid, of course, will be determined by the physical condition of the print. A poor subject will not be desired at any price. The purchase or lease of used material will not be considered until the film storage at the Brooklyn Navy Yard is completed and proper facilities are available for the careful examination and inspection of this material.

No Desire to Be Arbitrary.

In determining the maximum price that will be paid for the unused prints of current releases, it must be thoroughly understood that there is no disposition on the part of the Navy Department to be arbitrary in the matter. It is fully realized that the action on the part of the various distributors in making it possible for the navy to obtain new prints of current releases at $65 a reel is done for the purpose of assistance to the navy and not because of the small profit over and above the physical cost of the prints.

All pictures supplied by the U. S. Navy Motion Picture Exchange will be exhibited only on board naval vessels or within the confines of a naval station. There will be no civilians in the audiences.

Butterfield Adds Another Big Theatre to His Chain

IT seemed that the entire population of Flint, Mich., and all of the exchange managers and salesmen in the territory were on hand to assist Col. W. S. Butterfield in the ceremonies attending the opening of his new Regent Theatre on the evening of Wednesday, March 17. The Regent will take its place alongside the rest of the Butterfield theatres, as a modern, tasty and cozy motion picture house with accommodations for more than 1,700 persons. It has a long beautiful lobby, a roomy foyer and a very artistically designed mezzanine. The house is deep and is lighted in such a manner as to make every head in the audience visible from the back of the house. A large, almost perfect projection adds the finishing touch.

The house is to be managed by John Prescott, formerly a director and until recently in charge of the Liberty Theatre at Camp Taylor, Louisville. Mr. Prescott has been in Flint for several weeks, superintending the details of completion.

The projection at the New Regent is as fine as you will find anywhere, and the equipment is of the very best. The projectors are two Power's 6b cameragraphs. The generator in the New Regent is one of the largest Hertners ever built. A minusa screen is used.

The policy of the New Regent will be pictures exclusively, changed every Sunday and Wednesday.

Here's Half of Bermuda At Least Relying Solely on Moving Picture World

KAPLAN, who owns half of the picture theatres (two in number) on the island of Bermuda, was in New York last week, and so dropped in on his old friend Moving Picture World.

Business prospers in Bermuda, stated Mr. Kaplan. During the war American and British fleets and British troops helped to swell the crowds patronizing his theatre.

American hotel interests are planning to invest $5,000,000 in a magnificent hotel outside of Hamilton, according to Mr. Kaplan, and this should help Bermuda's business men to reap a harvest.

Mr. Kaplan was in New York arranging for the booking of a big batch of films to take the place of a number of reels which were damaged when the steamer carrying them smashed into a storm.

Mr. Kaplan has been in the picture business for the past eight years, and for the past eight years he has depended upon Moving Picture World.

G. A. R. post in Kansas City determined to hold a big celebration to bring out in forcible fashion some of the pertinent facts of history.

The Warwick Theatre was engaged for March 16 and 17. The event was taken up by the newspapers and for the time being the G. A. R. came in for the lion's share of attention. The event proved to be a highly popular, patriotic one and the Warwick Theatre is reported to have had two of the biggest days of business in its history.

The Post voted for "Soldiers of Fortune," the Allan Dwan production, presented by Mayflower and it was shown.

"The singular fact of this booking," says John N. MacMeekin, Realart's manager in Kansas City, "was that the manager of this particular theatre had earlier refused a contract for this Mayflower special on the ground that we are seeking too high a price for it. The veterans met our terms without question and did a big business with it. It netted them a tidy sum for the Post and was declared to be a fine patriotic effort. Everybody in the city, even the boys of the American Legion, were out strong rooting for the G. A. R."

She's seen here asking Thurston Hall, "Would You Forgive?" His answer is—well, who could say "No" to a pretty girl? This is a new Fox production.

"Out of the Snows" Nears Completion.

Advance information from the center of eastern motion picture activities indicates that the Selznick special production, "Out of the Snows," will be completed with the first robin and that exhibitors will be able to show their patrons this story of the Northwest as a spring attraction.

This Is a Theatre You Can Bank On Always to Cash In

NAT BREGSTEIN, traveling circulation representative of Moving Picture World, candidly admits in his latest letter that the 23,000 population of Raleigh, N. C., has been increased, temporarily, by the addition of two great men. Nat, who ranks as an exhibitor handshaker along with Felix Feist and other glad-hand artists, also allows that these two celebrities are famous for their comedy chatter. Before we forget it, we might name them. They are Irvin Cobb and Nat Bregstein. Cobb was speaking at the Auditorium and Bregstein is speaking now through the rigid censorship system of the M. P. W. copy desk.

"To the Bank!"

To the bank and theatre all in one building. R. G. Allen's Superba in Raleigh, N. C.

Delving deeper into the maze of cabalistic pencil marks on Nat's stationery, the transcriber of his immortal thoughts discovers that Nat has met up with R. B. Allen, who owns the Superba Theatre and City Bank all in one. Nat allows that Mr. Allen must know all about percentage.

"Mr. Allen is a young man in the fifties," says Nat, "and he never had to have a monkey gland. He is a bear-cat for work. To give his daily routine of work would be like reciting Douglas Fairbanks' and Harold Lloyd's stunts."

The Superba seats 700 at 20 and 30-cent prices and books the product of First National, Fox, Metro and Goldwyn and Paramount Specials.

Aronson and Brown are the proprietors of the Grand and Alamo theatres. The latter is the moving picture house and seats 400 at prices of 20 and 30 cents. Mr. Aronson recently took the agency for Typhoon fans for Virginia and North and South Carolina.

Burgess and Joyner, lawyers, jointly own the Royal Theatre, a moving picture house for colored people, seating 380, at prices of 15 and 20 cents. They would like to get a production in which colored people take part, for the novelty of the thing.

Realart Has First Runs on All Films in Indianapolis and Other Key Cities

WITH the closing of new contracts Mark Goldman, Indianapolis manager of Realart Pictures Corporation, has reported to the home offices that first runs have been arranged for all Realart pictures in that city and in surrounding key cities.

The Circle Theatre some time ago played "Soldiers of Fortune," an Allan Dwan production, presented by Mayflower Photoplay Corporation. Within the last week Mr. Goldman closed contracts with the Central Amusement Company, operating the Alhambra Theatre, for a week's booking of "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," an Emile Chautard production, and "The Luck of the Irish," an Allan Dwan production, presented by Mayflower.

In addition, the Colonial Theatre, operated by Bingham and Cohen, holds the contract in Indianapolis for first run showings on the Realart star series, the entire output to date having been shown. In Cincinnati the Gifts Theatre recently closed contracts for first run showings of "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," while Ike Libson, operating the Strand, Walnut, Family, Star and Bijou theatres, holds the contract for the star series and for a week's booking of "Soldiers of Fortune."

Charleston, W. Va., the remaining key city in the territory, has also been completely covered. T. L. Kears, operating the Strand Theatre, has the contract for the Realart star series, and George Kyros, owning the Virginian Theatre, has contracted to show "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," "Soldiers of Fortune" and "The Luck of the Irish."

The record established by the first two Mayflower specials, "The Mystery of the Yellow Room" and "Soldiers of Fortune," has been maintained by "The Luck of the Irish," recently released. William A. Mustarde, manager of the Blue Mouse Theatre, sent the following telegram to Realart on his showing of the feature:

"'Luck of the Irish' broke all our house records on opening days. Expect to arrange with Mr. Hollander for extended run. This means extended beyond our regular seven-day booking. Your feature is the talk of St. Paul. It is a regular American romance. You have certainly met the demands for fewer and better pictures. Congratulations."

Morris Is General Manager of Both Republic and Select

IT is announced that in pursuit of greater efficiency and consolidation with the welfare of the exhibitor in mind, Samuel E. Morris, vice president and general manager of Select Pictures Corporation, has been appointed also general manager of Republic Distributing Corporation, of which Lewis J. Selznick is advisory director and Briton N. Busch, president. The Selznick headquarters are at 729 Seventh avenue, New York, and Republic is located at 130 West Forty-sixth street. The executive offices of the latter are, however, at 729 Seventh avenue.

Mr. Morris has assumed his additional duties and has already taken steps to give to Republic the efficient methods of co-operation and service to the exhibitor that have been characteristic of Select Pictures Corporation. The confidence reposed in Mr. Morris by Mr. Selznick is the outgrowth of years of faithful services dating from the time that he began as salesman in the days when World Film Corporation was created under the guidance of Mr. Selznick.

Another appointment made by Mr. Selznick concurrent with Mr. Morris' new duties is that of Charles R. Rogers as director of sales of Republic. Mr. Rogers will perform the duties of this position in addition to that of director of sales of Select. George R. Meeker, who had been sales director of Republic, has been delegated by Mr. Selznick to the executive forces of Prizma Color Pictures.

Doris Kenyon's Popularity Helps "The Harvest Moon"

DORIS KENYON'S popularity attained by the success of her first W. W. Hodkinson release, "The Bandbox," and by her overnight rise to stage stardom in A. H. Woods' "The Girl in the Limousine" is reflected in the volume of contract bookings received on her second Deitrich-Beck production, "The Harvest Moon," adapted from Augustus Thomas' stage success.

An idea of the vogue enjoyed by her is seen in the results achieved by exhibitors in the Boston territory on "The Bandbox" during the run of her stage vehicle there. It was the same in the New York district during the eight months' engagement of "The Girl in the Limousine" at the Eltinge Theatre. The fine newspaper publicity given the star both for her stage and screen activities is responsible for the early flood of contracts on "The Harvest Moon" weeks before its release date or pre-release showings in any of the large cities.

"The Harvest Moon," considered by many as Augustus Thomas' greatest work, is said to be appealing and interest-compelling in its screen version. The cast assembled by Deitrich-Beck, Inc., compares favorably with the all-star aggregation that appeared in the year's run of "The Harvest Moon" at the Garrick Theatre, New York, the picture ensemble including George A. Lessey, Earl Schenck, Wilfred Lytell, Grace Barton, Marie Shotwell and Peter Lang.

Sobler Joins Mayflower's Advertising-Publicity Staff

IN line with his recently announced plan to launch an extensive advertising and publicity campaign in the interests of Mayflower productions, Isaac Wolper, president of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, has engaged Albert W. Sobler, formerly identified with the publicity departments of Vitagraph, Capellani Productions and Goldwyn.

Mr. Sobler joins the Mayflower organization after serving as head of the Goldwyn exploitation and service department for almost a year. In this capacity, he was responsible for the production of the company's exhibitor-accessories including the press books and lithographs, and in addition was editor of the firm's house organ, the Goldwynner.

As a member of the Mayflower publicity staff, Sobler will devote himself to the preparation of trade paper advertising and publicity as well as handling the press books under the supervision of Mark Larkin, director of publicity for Mayflower.

Buddy Post Comedy Completed.

The first "Buddy" Post comedy to be made by the National Film Corporation of America will be entitled "Love and Loot," an original story by L. V. Jefferson. "Buddy" Post is supported by Helen Howard, formerly with the Flying A studios at Santa Barbara. Mark Goldaine is directing this series of twenty-six situation comedies, which are being photographed by W. W. Bell.

Sennett's "Down on the Farm" Praised by Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford

MACK SENNETT was more than elated recently after he had taken a few of his friends to his heart and confidence and given them the opportunity of seeing his latest big new five reel comedy, "Down on the Farm," which will be marketed through United Artists Corporation, and which Hiram Abrams of that organization says is the most sensational Sennett comedy that has come from his studios. The joy that Sennett received, however, was from the expressions of opinion from his friends, two of which, from "Doug" and Miss Pickford, he treasures and prizes most highly.

After Mary had witnessed the showing of the production she wrote Mr. Sennett in the following vein: "Your production 'Down on the Farm' is perfectly splendid. It is one of the funniest I have ever had the pleasure of witnessing. I am confident that it will be a tremendous success."

"Doug" was even more enthusiastic and his remarks were these:

"Listen, Mack. I just ran your picture, 'Down on the Farm,' at my home in Beverly last night. You certainly ripped it up at a hundred and fifty miles an hour and picked flowers every inch of the way.

"This is by far the best thing you have ever done in your distinctive and individual way of making pictures. Your main theme is certainly a corker—well rounded out. Thrills you have injected positively make this picture 520 per cent."

"This same enthusiasm over this production has permeated every member of our organization who has seen the first copies of the production," said Mr. Abrams, "and there is no doubt in our minds but that this picture will be a veritable sensation wherever it is shown." Every element of comedy success is found in the production in plentiful quantity, for there are thrills, laughter, suspense, travesty, satire, a tinge of the burlesque, and spectacular combinations that are startling in every degree; making it a picture that will be as delightful as it is inspiring and thrilling.

Al Green Joins Goldwyn to Be a Culver City Director

AL GREEN, who has recently joined the Goldwyn forces as director at the Culver City studios and is now directing Jack Pickford in "The Double Dyed Deceiver," has perhaps helped direct more stars than any man in the business, although he is one of the youngest directors. He started in pictures in 1911 as camera boy and steadily climbed to the top.

While assistant director he helped to guide the destinies of Mary Pickford, Blanche Sweet, Elsie Ferguson, Marguerite Clark, George M. Cohan, William Farnum, Tyrone Power, Helen Ware and to produce such pictures as "The Spoilers," "Ne'er Do Well," "The Crisis," "Garden of Allah," "Daddy Long Legs," "M'Liss" and "Old Kentucky."

For a year and a half he was co-director with Marshal Neilan and then became author-director of George Fawcett and Vivian Reed in "Reward of Service," "Lost and Found" and "Trials and Tribulations." He is married to Vivian Reed and has a boy named after his friend, Marshal Neilan.

Canadian Film Making Pictures.

Charles Berman, distribution manager of the Adanac Producing Company, Ltd., Montreal, has announced that Col. D. F. Pigeon, formerly auditor of the Militia Department, Ottawa, has been made general manager of the Adanac company. This concern recently placed on the market a Made-in-Canada feature, "The Great Shadow," starring Tyrone Power, the rights for which outside of Canada were sold to Selznick for release under the Republic trade mark.

According to Mr. Berman, it is the intention of the Adanac company to proceed with the production of various high-class productions at the Trenton studio and elsewhere in Canada and that it was not the plan of the organization to stop after it had made and sold one feature.

Republic Extends Serial and Short Subjects Department

REPORTS from Republic Distributing Corporation indicate that this Lewis J. Selznick organization is making great headway in its serial and short subjects department, which is being enlarged by the addition of suitable material for exhibitors and by the engagement of experienced men to look after the various processes of "making the wheels go around."

Exhibitor aids and service for "The Whirlwind," in which Charles Hutchison will be presented in fifteen episodes as a daredevil hero, are said to be shaping up nicely under the skilled hands of a special staff which has been delegated to look after not only this serial but others which are expected to follow it for Republic distribution.

The most recent addition to the staff, following the engagement a few weeks ago of George Ames in the short subjects department, is Frank Duffy, who has been appointed manager of the newly created serial department of Republic. Mr. Duffy came to Republic from Pathe and his experience covers a period of six years spent with that organization.

Theatres Book Two Goldwyn Features on the Same Bill

DOUBLE feature bills made up of Goldwyn pictures are becoming quite the thing with exhibitors in the New York territory. Goldwyn proudly points to four features in one week at Harmanus Bleeker Hall, Albany, one of the Proctor houses.

The first three days of this week, March 22, 23 and 24, Manager U. S. Hill was showing "The Girl From Outside" and giving his patrons an extra treat with Pauline Frederick in "The Loves of Letty." For the last three days he booked Jack Pickford in "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" and Will Rogers in "Jubilo."

In conjunction with E. E. Thompson, Goldwyn press and service representative in the New York City exchange, Mr. Hill is telling the world around Albany of his Goldwyn "splash" and he has purchased several extra rolls of tickets to take care of the rush.

Early in April the Newark Theatre, Newark, N. J., will have a double Goldwyn feature bill. Manager McNally will show Rupert Hughes' "Cup of Fury" in connection with "The Blooming Angel." Then on April 15 to 17, the Capitol Theatre, Elizabeth, N. J., will show "Water, Water Everywhere," with Will Rogers, and "The Blooming Angel."

New Director for Alice Joyce.

George Sargent has been engaged to direct Alice Joyce, the Vitagraph star. Active work on a new production began this week.

Vitagraph has not yet announced the title of the subject, but it is known to be an adaptation from a popular play.

Mr. Sargent served as stage director for a long time with Cohan and Harris before entering the film industry.

David Butler Finishes His First Independent Picture

IT has just been announced in Los Angeles that David Butler, the well-known screen artist who has appeared as co-star in numerous featured productions, will hereafter be starred in his own productions in which he is financially interested. His first picture, which has already been completed and will be shown in New York shortly, is an adaptation of a recent story published in the Saturday Evening Post. The leading part is said to suit his capabilities better than anything in which he has ever appeared. It is one that he selected from many stories that were available.

Mr. Butler has had a world of experience and has certainly created a large following by having done consistently good work. He has been co-starred in the following features: D. W. Griffith's "The Greatest Thing in Life;" D. W. Griffith's "The Girl Who Stayed at Home;" Paramount's "Nugget Nell" with Dorothy Gish; King Vidor's "Better Times"; Universal's "Bonnie Bonnie Lassie" with Mary MacLaren; Selznick's "Upstairs and Down" with Olive Thomas; Marshall Neilan's "Don't Ever Marry" (not yet released); Maurice Tourneur's "The Country Fair," etc.

Mr. Butler is backing up his confidence in his ability by investing his own money. He has turned down various offers. After completing a contract with the Universal, he turned down a new offer of contract and stardom, preferring to organize his own company and go in "on his own hook."

Ripley Now Head Cutter for Metro.

Arthur D. Ripley has been given the position of head of the cutting department at the Metro studios in Hollywood, succeeding George McGuire, now in New York. Mr. Ripley was formerly with Metro as a cutter and has also been film editor for Fox and Kalem.

Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, Puts on Elaborate Arabian Nights Spectacle

AN innovation in scenic art known as the "Spectaclorama"—one of the most recent creations of the fertile brain of S. Barret McCormick, the guiding genius of the Circle Theatre at Indianapolis—was introduced to his patrons at a recent showing of "The River's End," which broke all previous attendance records. Those who witnessed the bill that week are still talking about it.

The latest of the Circle director's pretentious stage productions was so large that it ceased to be merely a spectacle. It was so unique in scope, both of imagination and physical proportions, that it was termed a spectaclorama. The specific title was "The Palace of Diversion."

In brief, it was an elaborate and colorful Arabian Night's spectacle, comprising the ballet, song, whirling Arabs, fashion models of ancient Bagdad and several other novelties. It was divided into two scenes, the first a palace interior in which an incense dance was presented, and the second the festival outside the palace, in which Mlle. Theo Hewes and a group of dancers appeared in still more radiant attire.

Magnificent Stage Settings.

One of the costumes, a radiant Batik gown, is said to have cost approximately $1,000. There were twenty-four other persons in the cast, each of whom was costumed gorgeously.

The stage was hung with intricately designed curtains of irregular outline. They were heavy and dark and formed a frame for great, light silk hangings, painted with the figures of women in gala Oriental attire. A wide opening at the back of the stage was draped with bright silks showing graceful figures moving to and fro. Seated on the floor on purple hassocks were two richly clothed and heavily turbaned figures, the guests of the palace. As the curtains parted, disclosing a long vista lying between sloping meadows, a number of dancers appeared. This was followed by a solo dance by Mlle. Theo Hewes in the symbolic costume of the white peacock.

During the progress of the pageant "Pale Hands I Loved Beside the Shalimar," one of the most haunting of the Indian love songs, was fittingly introduced by Robert White, baritone, the soloist for the week.

The spectaclorama was arranged and directed by Mr. McCormick and required almost two weeks' work to perfect it. To Frank Zimmerer, the Circle's art director, goes the credit for the art work and the designing of the costumes, all of which were made in the Circle's own studio. All in all, it was by far the biggest triumph that the Circle has ever scored.

So successfully received was this spectaclorama that Mr. McCormick has decided to make it a monthly event. He has now started work on the one he will present the first week in April, and patrons of the Circle are eagerly awaiting it. It is to be of Chinese design and; in his own words, will surpass the latter. If this be true it will have to be a "whopper."

Don Bartlett, of Vitagraph, Establishes Great Record

DON BARTLETT, title editor of Vitagraph productions and rated among the foremost members of his branch of the motion picture industry, has established a record that few in his profession can rival.

With the titling and editing of "The Fortune Hunter" and "Deadline at Eleven," Bartlett has completed for Vitagraph probably its most successful series of features. In his long career with the Big V Bartlett has titled and supervised the editing of all the Vitagraph serials, among which were the following highly successful continued subjects: "The Fighting Trail," "Vengeance and the Woman," "The Fight for Millions," "The Man of Might" and "Smashing Barriers." When Walter W. Irwin was general manager of Vitagraph he attributed one-third of the success of these great serials to the titling of Mr. Bartlett.

For a year and a half the Vitagraph title editor wrote the titles and supervised the editing of every foot of film issued by the company, twelve reels weekly, including one five-reel feature, one two-reel episode, one O. Henry two-reeler, one Alfred Henry Lewis two-reeler and one slap-stick single reel production.

He titled the entire series of Kenneth Webb's O. Henry pictures, every one of which played the Rivoli Theatre. These included "Tobin's Palm," "A Ramble in Aphasia," "Sisters of the Golden Circle," "Springtime a La Carte" and "The Ghost of a Chance."

Borzage's Rise to Directorship Result of Experience and Work

FRANK BORZAGE, director of Fannie Hurst's "Humoresque," featuring Alma Rubens, his first picture for Cosmopolitan Productions, is a Salt Lake boy. While his first blink at God's sunlight came to him in the Mormon capital he never exhibited any signs of the matrimonial attitude for which it has been libeled and slandered, and his wives are "one and fluently ample." By this you will know he is happily married.

Like a few others of the histrionic clan Borzage was born with the love of the theatre in his heart. Various obstacles conspired to keep him away from the stage, however, and it wasn't until his thirteenth year on earth that he made his first appearance. Borzage doesn't talk much about his initial effort behind the footlights, but he stuck to it notwithstanding, and shortly afterward he became assistant stage manager. This new job gave him ample opportunities not only to study the theatre, but also to give circulation to his ambition to act, and he played "bits."

Eight long, hard and sometimes lean, years of this "stock and rep" life, and then Frank Borzage became a full-fledged stage director and character actor.

Now comes the paradox of it. All these years Borzage had played character parts because in the opinion of his friends and himself he wasn't cut out for anything else. But Thomas H. Ince grabbed him for the screen and made him a juvenile lead.

After three years with Ince Borzage went with the American at Santa Barbara, where he directed and starred for two years. After that followed one and a half years with Triangle; and one and a half years producing big independent specials. Now he is with Cosmopolitan Productions.

King Completes "The Road to Arcady."

Burton King has just completed the final scenes of "The Road to Arcady," his first independent production. Mr. King is now engaged in cutting and titling the film, and he expects to announce his plans for release next week. The story was adopted for the screen by Lawrence McCloskey and Harry Chandler from an Edith Sessions Tupper novel, which appeared recently in serial form in The Ladies' Home Journal.

Baum Resigns from Universal.

Sol Baum, for the past two years manager of the Universal branch exchange in Portland, Ore., has resigned. C. W. Koerner, salesman in the Universal exchange at Butte, Mont., has been appointed in his stead. Koerner formerly was an exhibitor. His interest in Universal pictures prompted him to join the Universal sales force.

Lucy Fox in Perret Film.

Lucy Fox is the star in "L'Empire du Diamant," the picture being made by Leonce Perret in France. Miss Fox left the States in January, and will be busily at work until April 15, when she will immediately return to New York. Miss Fox, with several other players, was sent overseas by John J. Livingston.

Inter-Ocean Places Three Serials in South America

MANY sales are reported by Inter-Ocean Film Corporation. "The Lurking Peril," starring Anne Luther and Charles Hutchinson; "The Mystery Mind," featuring Pauline, the well-known vaudeville hypnotist; and "The Whirlwind," with Charles Hutchinson in the stellar role—three serials of proven box office value—were placed by Inter-Ocean for physical distribution in Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador. The deal involves the acquisition of ninety reels, together with posters, lobby display and the necessary press material which usually accompanies a serial, by the company which Inter-Ocean Film Corporation represents in the capacity of confidential buying agent.

"An Adventuress," recently acquired by Inter-Ocean Film Corporation for distribution throughout the entire world, exclusive of the United States, was sold to one of the largest Mexican film renters for distribution in Mexico.

"Bearcat," an adaptation of the novel by Charles Neville Buck, was disposed of for Porto Rico, Santo Domingo and Venezuela. "The Transgressor" and "The Burning Question," two productions made by the Catholic Art Association, and for which Inter-Ocean Film Corporation are world distributors, were also disposed of for distribution in Porto Rico and Santo Domingo.

New Pathe Serial Is Tale of Romance and Adventure

AN engrossing tale of romance and adventure, thrills and smart-paced action is the promise made for "Trailed by Three," the fifteen episode picturization of a story by Charles T. Dazey, co-starring Stuart Holmes and Frankie Mann, which Pathe Exchange, Inc., will release April 4.

From the standpoint of production the serial is also something of a novelty. The action of the story swings from a locale of New York to an island in the South Sea group and the trail of the precious jewels also transports the characters, plot, thrills and all the paraphernalia of the serial thriller to the Orient. Faithful detail in the presentation of the settings was the particular concern of the director, Perry Vekroff.

Drew Comedies Going Big All Over.

The New York success of "The Charming Mrs. Chase," the first of the Mrs. Sidney Drew Comedies featuring John Cumberland, is being duplicated throughout the country according to reports received at the Pathe offices. The entire series of six comedies has been booked for practically every first class house in the country and press and public have expressed strong approval of the work of Mrs. Drew in adapting and directing and of Mr. Cumberland's artistic work before the screen.

Neilan to Produce in Europe; to Take Entire Company Abroad, Remaining Six Months

MARSHALL NEILAN has made public his plans for the production of a number of foreign subjects in Europe. Mr. Neilan will take an entire producing unit with him, including a number of players, among whom will be Marjorie Daw.

Mr. Neilan will produce a number of stories in the different historic locales offered in England, France, Belgium and Spain. In his absence from his Hollywood studios various American productions on which he is now working will be completed there under his supervision, the details for this work to be arranged before he leaves.

To attend to advance preparations for Mr. Neilan's activities abroad, Harry Ham, his personal foreign representative, sailed for Europe on March 20. Mr. Ham arrived in New York from the West Coast last week. In speaking of Mr. Neilan's foreign plans, he said: "The American motion picture public will welcome foreign backgrounds in motion pictures. For years we have had practically nothing in the way of foreign-produced subjects. We intend to do foreign stories, staged in the exact locale of the plot."

May Sail on May 28.

Mr. Ham stated that Mr. Neilan would, in the near future, announce further details concerning his foreign trip, including the names of the stories he is to produce which, he said, will be of international prominence. "We feel that we will have some very interesting information for exhibitors shortly," said Mr. Ham, "and realize fully the great opportunity of the fertile territory afforded us." Mr. Neilan plans to remain abroad for six months.

Marshall Neilan has just finished his second independent production for First National release following "The River's End." Few details concerning this second picture are available at this time, although it is stated that Matt Moore and Marjorie Daw play the leading roles. A third film is now underway, and advance preparations for "Penrod," in which Wesley Barry will be starred, have also been started. May 28 is the tentative sailing date of the Marshall Neilan troupe for England, where the first film will be staged.

Buck Jones Returns to Finish "Forbidden Trails" for Fox

ON January 28 last Buck Jones, the widely-heralded cowboy made a star by William Fox, suffered a severe injury to one of his feet while at work in "Forbidden Trails" at the Hollywood studios. He has just returned to finish this new picture.

The accident occurred while the star, famed for his horsemanship and daring, was attempting a hazardous feat mounted on his big horse, Silver, in one of the scenes of "Forbidden Trails," which is an adaptation of the popular novel by Charles Alden Seltzer. Scott Dunlap, the director, was staging the scene and had cautioned the reckless star against attempting the stunt.

At the crucial moment one of the stirrup straps parted and Jones was thrown headlong from his horse, which was running at high speed. The star, smiling in spite of the pain, was confined to his home for weeks, unable to walk. The supporting company, which included Kathryn Adams, Stanton Heck, William Elmer, George Kinkle, Harry Todd and Fred Herzog, were retained by Fox and distributed through other productions then being cast.

Tourneur Finishes "Pavilion on the Links."

Maurice Tourneur has finished the final scenes of his forthcoming production, "The Pavilion on the Links," and the production is now receiving its final editing before being presented by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

The photoplay is a visualization of one of Robert Louis Stevenson's short stories, and is said to promise new laurels for Mr. Tourneur as a producer of artistic photoplays.

"Bowes Knows," Says Realart as Capitol Books "Sinners"

SINNERS," Alice Brady's recent production for Realart Pictures Corporation, has been booked by the Capitol Theatre, New York City, as the attraction for the week of April 28. "Bowes knows," the announcement from the Realart offices read, after Edward Bowes, managing director of the theatre, and Thomas F. Walker, film director, had viewed the picture and concluded a contract for the Capitol's first open date.

Mr. Walker, who plays an important part in selecting features of distinction for the world's largest theatre, was particularly enthusiastic about the picture and declared its presentation at the Capitol would be in keeping with its success as a stage play. "Sinners" is the third Realart picture to be booked at the Capitol. In addition, it is the eighth consecutive Realart picture to have a Broadway showing. Realart's unbroken record of bookings in the principal houses along the Rialto, according to a statement by J. S. Woody, general manager, stands unrivaled. Every production yet released by this organization has had a Broadway showing.

Rogers Touring Country in Interest of Blackton Films

FRANK B. ROGERS, who recently joined J. Stuart Blackton Feature Pictures, Inc., as general sales director, is touring the country in the interests of Blackton pictures. Mr. Rogers has left New York City for Chicago, his first stop. The middle western territory is familiar ground to Mr. Rogers who is a native of Kansas City, Mo. He represented the Essanay, George Kleine, and more recently was manager of the central western division of Pathe.

Mr. Blackton has produced five releases so far under the Pathe banner, "The Moonshine Trail," "Dawn," "My Husband's Other Wife," "Respectable by Proxy" and the April 11 release, "The Blood Barrier."

Mr. Rogers expects to place these features not only in territory where they have not been shown but for "repeats" in theatres where they have already played.

Kerrigan's Sixth Robert Brunton Film Is "The Dream Cheater," a Balzac Tale

THE W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces for early April release J. Warren Kerrigan's sixth in his series of Robert Brunton productions, "The Dream Cheater," adapted from Balzac's "The Wild Ass' Skin." The picture is said to be a noteworthy production in that it reveals an entirely new phase of the popular star's artistry. As Brandon McShane, scholar, dreamer and philosopher, Kerrigan departs at times from light comedy and romance and gives the public a real glimpse of his abilities as a dramatic actor.

Dramatic strength is obtained by sudden and striking contrasts in the production. The hero's happy boyhood stands out in relief against the tragedies which follow, his former wealth contrasts with his want, his superstition and fear give way to the light of truth and understanding, and his doubt in woman's loyalty is supplanted by his love for one of the sweetest characters ever reproduced upon the silver screen, a role essayed by Fritz Brunette, who played opposite the star in his fourth successive Hodkinson release.

Among the other screen favorites who support Kerrigan are Sam Sothorn, a brother of the illustrious E. H.; Joseph J. Dowling, who played "The Patriarch" in "The Miracle Man"; Aggie Herring, Thomas Guise and Alice Wilson. The director was Ernest C. Warde, who has supervised the production of all Kerrigan-Brunton releases.

mission worker. This girl, by her spirit of self-sacrifice and an unquenchable love for the young man, ultimately proves an influence for the better in his life. The way the version has been pictured by McCauley's Photoplays, Inc., makes its success assured.

Prints of "The Gift Supreme" are now available for screening for resident foreign buyers. Inter-Ocean also announces an elaborate advertising and publicity campaign in behalf of the production.

Chief Flynn Series Crowds Other Republic Productions

THE latest pictures numbered among the Republic releases to assume front rank in the bookings of that company are the "Flynn Series." This series of two-reel dramas have, according to the Republic officials, scored a success wherever shown and the bookings have in a large way been confined to the largest and most progressive theatres in the country.

The Capitol Theatre management in New York has expressed itself as highly pleased with the short releases and still another example of what prominent exhibitors think of this series is noted in the booking of the series for the "Mr. Smith's" Theatre in Indianapolis, which is under the management of the Circle Theatre Company there.

Among the other theatres of the country which have contracted for this series, which star Herbert Rawlinson, are: the Strand, Amsterdam, New Atlantic Garden and Venice in New York City; Goodwin in Newark; Stanley Booking Corporation, Philadelphia; Victory and Garden, Scranton, Pa., and the Strand, Sunbury, Pa.

The Cincinnati office of Republic reports bookings in Richmond, Ind.; Kenia, Ohio; Connersville, Ind.; and in Columbus and Portsmouth, Ohio. The Cleveland office has booked the National, Wade Park and Alpha theatres in Cleveland, and in the cities of Delaware, Toledo and Marion, Ohio.

Others having booked the series are: East Boston, Littleton, N. H.; Newport, N. H.; Joliet, Ill.; Ft. Wayne, Ind.; Sherman, Texas; Wyandotte, Mich.; Portland, Ore.; Columbia City, Wash., and Tacoma, Wash. All of the bookings noted here are taken from only a part of the last week's bookings according to the home office records.

Inter-Ocean Gets Foreign Rights to "The Gift Supreme"

THE GIFT SUPREME," the third of the productions made by the C. R. McCauley's Photoplays, Inc., has been acquired by Inter-Ocean Film Corporation for exclusive foreign distribution.

"We have taken over for world distribution, exclusive of the United States, the rights to "The Gift Supreme," produced by the C. R. McCauley's Photoplays, Inc.," says the announcement from Inter-Ocean. "In purchasing this production we were influenced primarily by the humaneness of the story and the fidelity with which this element has been transferred to the screen. The market for attractions of this nature is always large.

"The production is a powerful drama of conflicting human emotions, and tells in realistic fashion the story of a degenerate young man, who falls in love with a young

Ingraham Directing "Old Dad."

Lloyd Ingraham, who has two of the year's best pictures to his credit, "Mary's Ankle" and "What's Your Husband Doing?" is now directing Mildred Harris Chaplin in "Old Dad," a Louis B. Mayer production which will be released through First National. The story was written by Eleanor Hallowell Abbott and had its first publication in serial form in the Woman's Home Companion.

California Invites Tom Mix to Lead Big Fresno Rodeo

TOM MIX, Fox star, has accepted an honor conferred upon him by the Motion Picture Exhibitors of California and will lead the rodeo to be held by the Raisin Growers' Association at Fresno on April 30.

George F. Sharp, manager of the Liberty Theatre in Fresno and chairman of the publicity committee sending to the Fox star the invitation to attend the rodeo, wrote:

"We would feel honored if you would accept. I can promise you that Tom Mix will be the main attraction and the whole celebration will be built around the early pioneer days of California, with Tom Mix as the leading light. Bring your cowboys with you, and we will have more on hand. The Native Sons of California's stage coach, the oldest in California, will be at our disposal on a special permit from the Grand Lodge of the Native Sons.

"The day's celebration will consist of a big pageant parade in the morning, automobile racing in the afternoon and in the evening a grand ball—which we want you to lead as the most typical westerner in the country today. The ball will be held at the Civic Auditorium, and all the municipal and state officials will be on hand. It is estimated that the crowd will number between 150,000 and 200,000."

Tom Mix and his twenty-five cowboys will move into Fresno on April 29. The entire outfit from Mixville will go with the Fox star, and the competition at Fresno will be of the keenest in the steer-throwing, roping, bull-dogging and broncho busting contests.

Frances Gray Joins Metro News Staff.

Frances Gray, one of the newest contributors to the motion picture "fan" magazines, has joined the news staff at the Metro studios in Hollywood. She will write fashion stories and special articles. Miss Gray was society and fashion editor of "The Evening Missourian" at Columbia, Mo., for a year and a half.

"Rio Grande," by Augustus Thomas, Is Latest Pathe Film Based on Stage Play

WITH a record of many motion picture plays adapted from stage successes, Pathe Exchange, Inc., will shortly release another great stage play made into a motion picture. "Rio Grande," from the pen of Augustus Thomas, is the latest production of this character, and, from hundreds of inquiries already received from exhibitors it is evident that it will be in great demand from the moment of its release.

The Pathe record of successful motion pictures which were originally stage plays is an exceptional one. The success of "The Thirteenth Chair" should rival the stage run of the play, and it is generally known that more than $1,000,000 was paid in at box office windows during the New York run of Bayard Veiller's success and to the various road companies.

Among other big stage successes released as motion pictures by Pathe are "Common Clay," "In Walked Mary," which was staged under the title of "Liza Ann," "Oh, Boy," "The Narrow Path," "The Japanese Nightingale" and "A Woman of Pleasure." All of these productions have established records which augur well for the reception of "Rio Grande."

In the moving picture production the full scope of the story may be seen. The great plains of the Southwest, the cactus levels of the Rio Grande and the mountains of Mexico form the background of the scenes. It is distinctly an outdoor picture with one, two or three scenes taken indoors; but, in addition, it is filled with dramatic strength and action.

Several impressive scenes have been staged, notably a dance in which 100 couples from Mexico City participated, and a raid scene in which 500 cowboys and Texas Rangers meet several hundred Mexicans in a cavalry combat.

The cast is headed by Rosemary Theby and Allan Sears. They are supported by many well known screen actors and actresses, and throughout the production the touch of Carewe at his best is said to be in evidence.

Arthur Jackson Is Pleased with His First Production

ARTHUR JACKSON, playwright and dramatist, who has signed a contract with William Fox to contribute to the screen through the Fox studios, has witnessed a special showing of his first pictorial endeavor and has pronounced the production superb.

Mr. Jackson is probably better known to the theatregoers of the country as the author of the successful "Scandals of 1919," a topical revue crowded with fun, frolic and magnificent coloring. "La La Lucille," also one of the most daring productions ever offered to metropolitan first-nighters, came from the pen of this versatile writer.

William Fox succeeded recently in securing Mr. Jackson's signature to a contract for Fox Film stories, the first of which was "Leave It To Me," written to order for William Russell, the star whose recent successes have included "Sacred Silence," "The Lincoln Highwayman" and "Shod with Fire."

In "Leave It To Me" the cast supporting the star includes Eileen Percy, Marcella Daley, Lucille Cavanaugh, Hal Cooley, William Elmer, Harvey Clark and Milla Davenport.

A rush print of this film was forwarded to Mr. Jackson for his opinion, and the word comes from the author that the picture, from a point of characterization, staging, continuity and sub-titling, surpasses his fondest hopes for his first silent drama.

Republic Describes "The Whirlwind."

An announcement from the Republic offices makes known this week for the first time the nature of the events upon which the story of "The Whirlwind," the new Republic serial, is founded. This serial, starring Charles Hutchison, well known daredevil, is one of the most interesting ever produced, according to the Republic serial department.

Unlike many serials it contains hair-raising events that are not human impossibilities. In fact, the serial is said to owe its entertaining power to the clever working out of an adventurous story, without making it appear foolish. Charles Hutchison, however, is an unusual individual and his seeming disregard for life adds to the suspense shown in the serial story.

Crandall Gives Metropolitan Its Own Electric Light Plant

A NUMBER of important alterations are being made to the various theatres comprising the Crandall chain in Washington, D. C. One of the most important items is the installation of a complete individual electric plant at the Metropolitan, which will provide sufficient current to light the house and operate the booths.

During the past winter, the electric current furnished by the local lighting company has failed several times, resulting in a great deal of inconvenience to local theatres. Hereafter the Metropolitan will be independent of the city current. The Delco system will be used, the Metropolitan being the first theatre in Washington and one of the first in the East to be so equipped.

The lobby and ticket booth at the Apollo, another of the Crandall Theatres, has been remodeled and redecorated. The ticket booth is now between the entrance doors, and the lobby has been divided by brass chains in such a manner as to make it possible to handle incoming and leaving crowds more readily. The front of the theatre has been equipped with a new lighting system using 500-watt lamps.

Within the next few weeks the summer gardens operated in conjunction with the Apollo and Savoy theatres will be put into shape for use.

Garvin Joins Fox Corporation.

George M. Garvin, who for several years has represented the International News Service at the War and Navy Departments, has joined the forces of the Fox Film Corporation.

Mr. Garvin's new work will be the arranging of dates on which the cameramen can get pictures of prominent people.

Mary Pickford Begins Work on Her Second "Big Four" Picture, "Op o' Me Thumb"

CLOSE on the heels of the big success that has been scored in every section of the country by Mary Pickford's first production for United Artists Corporation, "Pollyanna," comes the announcement from Hiram Abrams, that he has received telegraphic information from Miss Pickford at her Hollywood studios that she has begun work on the picturization of the greatest of all Maude Adams' stage successes, "Op O' Me Thumb."

"Op O' Me Thumb" created a big sensation in London some years ago, and immediately after its success there, Charles Frohman acquired the American rights for the production for his leading star, Maude Adams, which was used by her during her most successful engagement in the Empire Theatre, New York, and which she used with exceptional success on her tours throughout the country. "Op O' Me Thumb" is from the dual pens of two clever British playwrights, Frederick Fenn and Richard Pryce, who have been responsible for a large number of other brilliant stage successes.

New Role for Miss Pickford.

Here again Miss Pickford has been successful in obtaining a big story for herself, one that is strong and moving, giving Miss Pickford a most excellent opportunity for unusual and effective characterization, for it has that measure of humor and pathos which is almost inseparable from its realism and contains more real human interest and feeling than in ninety per cent. of all stories. There are moments in the story of tearful emotion and scenes in which Miss Pickford will be the sweet, charming, beautifully-clothed character of unusual joy and happiness.

The central theme of the plot is laid in the slums of London and Miss Pickford, according to reports is going to present herself in a character totally unlike anything in which she has heretofore appeared. It is a type of character she has had in mind for some time, but owing to her stories has been unable to present it before.

The story runs the entire gamut of human emotions, from grave to gay and from passionate protest to meek resignation. There is even an abated moment of interest throughout its entire telling. Added opportunities will be afforded Miss Pickford through the picturized version of the stage production, which has been greatly elaborated upon, giving it added punch through a full quantity of quaint comedy and a delightful mingling of a charmingly proud humility.

Leading Goldwyn Players to Support Pauline Frederick

A N unusually strong cast will support Pauline Frederick in the elaborate picturization of the drama, "Madame X," started last week by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation at the Culver City studios under the direction of Frank Lloyd. Little Pat Moore plays the part of Raymond Floriot as a child and Casson Ferguson appears as the young barrister. William Courtleigh is cast as Louis Floriot and others selected for prominent roles are Albert Roscoe, Sydney Ainsworth, Willard Louis and Lionel Belmore.

Will Rogers has just completed "Jes' Call Me Jim." After a short rest he will start work on his next picture under the direction of Clarence Badger. Much of the action is laid in the West. Harry Beaumont is taking the final scenes for Ben Ames Williams' "The Great Accident," starring Tom Moore, and soon will be ready to commence work on Moore's next picture, "Officer 666," adapted from the popular stage farce. Jack Pickford and his company, under the direction of Al Green, have gone to San Diego to take some big race track scenes.

Reginald Barker, who with his company, spent a week at Truckee getting snow scenes for "The Branding Iron," has transferred his players to Sonora where desert backgrounds will be secured. In connection with his picturization of Basil King's "Earth Bound," Director T. Hayes Hunter is preparing to start work on one of the largest interior sets ever built for a picture.

Sidney Olcott has finished Rupert Hughes' "Scratch My Back" and Paul Scardon is busy on "Milestones," the cast for which will be completed this week.

Ross & Mack Form Partnership.

Roderick Ross, of Ross & Company, and Irving Mack have taken over the advertising, printing, engraving and other miscellaneous departments of Willis & Eckels & Mack and will hereafter take care of this service for exhibitors and exchangers under the firm name of Ross & Mack.

The aim of Ross & Mack will be not only to take charge of the newspaper advertising for theatres and exchanges, but also to prepare campaign books, press books, all kinds of printing and engravings, in fact every kind of service which the exchangers and exhibitors need to advertise their wares to the public.

Williams Working on "Three Keys."

Earle Williams is at work on his newest production, "The Three Keys," taken from a popular novel by Frederic Van Rennselaer Dey. Mr. Williams plays the role of Yale Durant, a wealthy young man who squanders his fortune away and is at the point of suicide. He is saved from this act; and fate plunges him into thrilling adventures in Wall street.

Chester Bennett is directing the production. The adaptation was done by H. Thompson Rich and Lucien Hubbard.

Marie Walcamp and Her Company Are Peekin' Around Peking, China.

The Universal serial, "The Dragon's Net," is being partly made in the Orient. Miss Walcamp is in the center, with Harland Tucker, leading man, at her left, and Wadsworth Harris, the heavy, on her right. Director Henry McRae is directly in back of the star.

New Coin Size Means Loss.

The decision on the part of the Canadian Government to change the size of the one-cent piece as used in the Dominion will cause a direct loss of thousands of dollars to Harry Brouse, of Ottawa, one of the Eastern Canadian franchise holders of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. This loss will be due to the necessity of altering the mechanism of gum slot machines or of discarding the vending machines completely.

In addition to being the owner of the Imperial and Family theatres, Ottawa, Mr. Brouse has been the proprietor of the Peerless Vending Company, which has in operation about 1,200 of the slot machines in use in eastern Ontario.

The new Canadian cent is to be the same size as the American "penny."

Stroheim Directing "Devil's Pass Key."

Universal is producing a photoplay by a prominent London society woman and godmother of the late King Edward. She is the Baroness De Meyer, and her story, written under the name "Clothes and Treachery," is being filmed as "The Devil's Pass Key" by Eric Von Stroheim.

The Baroness, who now makes her home in New York, has written many magazine stories. In her screen story, now "The Devil's Pass Key," she has woven much of the life and intrigues of Paris, in which she lived for many years.

Eight Weeks' Drive Brings Over 1,500 Members to Selznick Exhibitor Family

AN unusual record in bookings is announced by Selznick Pictures, of which Lewis J. Selznick is president. It embraces the contracting by the Select sales department of over 1,500 additional theatres in the space of eight weeks. This means that over 1,500 exhibitors in the past two months have decided that Selznick pictures are of such quality that they should be exhibited to the patrons in their locality.

"It proves conclusively," claims Charles Rogers, director of sales of Select, "that our sales organization is not only the best, but that we have the proper pictures for the exhibitor, whether his theatre is large or small, in New York or in a country hamlet. Our star productions, our all-star productions and our shorter subjects are the composite of art, skill, experience and showmanship, a combination which no exhibitor can afford to overlook.

Mr. Selznick's Motto.

"Mr. Selznick's motto is well known: 'I consider myself a failure unless the exhibitor is a success.' And success, in the case of the eight weeks' record just marked up, means even greater success for the exhibitors concerned."

Following a checking up of the latest contracts to be received at the Select offices in New York, it was announced that in the majority of exchange territories throughout the country no more than three theatres do not present the Selznick stars upon their screens.

The Selznick News reel, which will first flicker across the screen on Easter Sunday, is marking up regular dates in all sections of the country. Among the representatives theatres to book it are the Strand, New York; Sid Grauman's, Los Angeles; the Clemmer, Seattle, and the Colonial, Indianapolis. The Regent, Buffalo; Temple, Toledo; Dome, Youngstown; Crystal, Indianapolis; Alamo, Louisville; Regent, Rochester, and Colonial, Indianapolis, have also booked the reel.

Although all reports and announcements indicate that the Selznick organization has grown rapidly since the first of the year, it is expected that more gratifying reports will be made at the six-day annual convention which begins at the Hotel Astor, in New York on April 5. Republic will also be represented at the convention, which will be opened by Sam E. Morris, general manager of Select and Republic.

Rochester Censor Forbids Showing of "The Tong Man"

THE TONG MAN" cannot be shown in Rochester, the official censor, Commissioner of Public Safety R. Andrew Hamilton, having officially decreed so. The film had been booked by Jack Farren, of the Victoria Theatre.

Mayor Edgerton was requested by the Chinese consul-general at New York, Chan Kwang Sin, to suppress the film or to use his best efforts to do so, as it gave offense to Chinese citizens. The mayor turned over the letter from the consul-general, together with a like protest from the national organization of Chinamen in this country and a petition from Chinese residents of Rochester, to Mr. Hamilton. A screening convinced him that it would be best to suppress the picture.

There is no appeal from the ruling of the local censor, so far as showing pictures in Rochester is concerned. His powers are not merely advisory, as is the case in some places, but mandatory. However, there is no instance on record where local exhibitors have made any effort to reverse his decisions.

Declare Mary Miles Minter a Real "Magic Money Maker"

REALART has a new interpretation for "M. M. M." Based on recent box office reports they are credited with standing for "Magic Money Maker" as well as Mary Miles Minter.

As one illustration is cited the fact that Jack Callicott packed the Kinema Theatre in Los Angeles during a week's showing of "Judy of Rogue's Harbor" and got a unanimous and hearty verdict of approval from the critics of the press for his selection of the picture.

W. L. Snapp, manager of the Realart Theatre in Oaktown, Ind., after playing the same production, sent the following post card to Realart: "Over the top—packed house—broke all records with Mary Miles Minter's Realart production. Let's have more of 'em. Yours with success."

In Cedar Rapids, Iowa, J. E. Hostettler, of the Isis Theatre, had such heavy business with "Anne of Green Gables," Miss Minter's first Realart picture, that he immediately wired for and obtained a repeat booking of two days. The first booking was for four days, considered an exceptional run in Cedar Rapids, a town of 41,000 population.

The successful Los Angeles premier of "Judy of Rogue's Harbor" followed its eastern premier at the Rialto Theatre on Broadway.

Chautard and Walsh May Go West.

The Mayflower Photoplay Corporation may possibly concentrate all its production forces on the Pacific Coast, according to a report emanating from the Paragon Studio in Fort Lee, where Emile Chautard and R. A. Walsh are now making their productions.

The Mayflower lease expires early in April and President Isaac Wolper is seriously considering the advisability of sending both the Walsh and Chautard companies to Los Angeles where Allan Dwan and Sidney A. Franklin are now working. This move would result in concentrating all the companies whose product is being presented by Mayflower.

How Long Are Your Publicity Campaigns? Do You Over-Sell or Under-Sell Films?

By G. N. BRIGGS

Publicity Director for Finkelstein & Ruben

IS there any advantage of a long newspaper publicity campaign over a short one? Does it pay to play up a picture for four or five weeks, or is it better to put your trust in two good "smashes?" Would you rather over-sell than under-sell your attractions?

Recent experiences have convinced us that there is no advantage, rather a distinct danger, in long newspaper publicity campaigns; that two good "smashes" are sufficient to get your opening, and that it is far better to under-sell than over-sell your entertainment.

When Finkelstein & Ruben booked "The Miracle Man" for showing in Minneapolis beginning on Sunday, November 9, a carefully thought out publicity program was immediately put into operation. This was the beginning of October. In the five newspapers of Minneapolis and St. Paul we carried long stories the first Sunday in October, followed by five pictures from "The Miracle Man" on the second Sunday of the month.

Gave Film a Dinner Review.

On October 19 all five newspapers carried front page stories in their dramatic sections. Mind you, our display advertising campaign did not start until two weeks before the opening. Pictures and stories were used in the newspapers on Sunday, October 26, when our display ads started.

In the meantime we had held a dinner review of the picture in the Gold Room of the Hotel Radisson for the newspaper men and women of the two cities, and at this dinner review we had for guests about forty men and women upon whom we actually depended for aid in exploiting the picture. They included publishers, advertising and business managers, managing editors and city editors, etc.

Featured on Front Pages.

We also had held a private showing for the dramatic editors, who, on Sunday, November 2, a week previous to the opening, reviewed the picture at length, each review being accompanied by a picture. On that day, too, two of the papers printed layouts for us, while the other three carried extra cuts with feature stories concerning Director George Loane Tucker and Betty Compson, besides a number of news stories.

On Wednesday, before the opening, two papers printed stories under binder lines the width of the papers, in which the words "The Miracle Man" appeared. For the opening day each newspaper played "The Miracle Man" prominently on the front page as the big attraction in the Twin Cities. In short, no picture could have had a better send-off. And "The Miracle Man" got the opening, proof that the campaign, both from a publicity, advertising and posting viewpoint, was right.

Later Finkelstein & Ruben booked "Broken Blossoms," and in this instance the publicity department of Minneapolis made a ten day campaign, while in St. Paul there was a six day campaign. The Minneapolis papers gave us reviews of the film a week before the opening. There were special stories and pictures in the same issue. For the opening day we had front page display and favorable comment from the various dramatic critics.

Result of Short Campaign.

In St. Paul we concentrated on the attraction during the week, as a result of which B. C. Ferriss, in charge of publicity there, succeeded in getting pictures and stories on three successive days. The Sunday editions, of course, gave "Broken Blossoms" the benefit of best position and type display.

The result of this short campaign, in spite of the fact that there was no chance to plan or systematize it, was that "Broken Blossoms," playing for less money than "The Miracle Man," opened to better business than the Tucker production in both cities.

Perhaps better evidence of the advantages we have found in the short campaign came to us as a result of the exploitation used for "In Old Kentucky." This campaign, concentrated on two Sundays, with special stories through the week previous to opening, resulted in the breaking of all house records in both cities.

Much Safer to Under-Sell.

The effect of a long campaign seems patent enough. It is a well understood fact that if a man is constantly advised to see something; if he hears nothing but that for weeks and weeks, his natural inclination is to lose interest. There is a flood tide in the enthusiasm of photoplay fans. This is reached, so we have been led to believe by our experiments, not later than after the second smash.

It seems much safer to under-sell than to over-sell your pictures. If you under-sell your picture, and it is a good picture, it will in a matter of perhaps two days recommend itself. If, however, you over-sell, you have not made a friend of the man to whom you over-sold it, and the next time you rave about a film he will have his doubts. And the extreme danger of a long newspaper publicity campaign is in over-selling a picture which you are only boosting on the reputation of the producer, the director, the cast and what seems to you to be the merit of the story.

Lessens Space for Current Attractions.

Another disadvantage of a long campaign is that by crowding in publicity for an attraction set in five or six weeks' distant, you are naturally taking away that much space which might otherwise be utilized in exploiting your current program.

Under ordinary circumstances, Minneapolis and St. Paul will be sold on a picture by a short campaign.

Gosh! D'ya Ever See So Much Action—Good Title, Too—Called "The Blood Barrier."

Bet that in Scene 1 Robert Gordon didn't know he'd have to save Sylvia Breamer later in the story. Four telling "shots" from Pathe's latest production.

It "Reely" Happened—And They Didn't Use a Hose to Wet Her Either—She Was in the Water. These are all "Shore Acres"—a real estate enticement and an entertainment inducement. Alice Lake is the star in this new Metro picture.

"Flying A" Westerns at Blue Mouse.

"No, the 'Blue Mouse' is not for sale—and will not be so long as we can obtain such box office attractions as 'The Valley of Tomorrow,'" so said Oliver Rowe, manager of the aforesaid Blue Mouse Theatre of St. Paul, adding, "I am going to pull the old chestnut, and say that 'The Valley of Tomorrow' did a record breaking business, for want of a stronger way to express it. And such a crowd is a guarantee of a good follow-up business. I am anticipating a repetition of this success with 'Slam-Bang Jim.'"

Corinne Griffith Starts on New Feature, "Gumshoes 4-B"

CORINNE GRIFFITH, the Vitagraph star, has just begun production of her next picture "Gumshoes 4-B," an adaptation from the story by Forrest Crissey. This was one of the thirty stories which won prize awards in the recent O. Henry memorial contest conducted by the American Society of Arts and Sciences. A strong cast has been selected.

Miss Griffith may become known as the O. Henry girl as the result of this production and the one immediately preceding it, "The Garter Girl." The latter subject, which the young star recently finished and which will be released soon, is an adaptation of the O. Henry story entitled "The Memento."

"Gumshoes 4-B," as its presence in the memorial contest would indicate, was written especially to present the flavor and style of O. Henry. Its selection as a winner was based upon its merits as a reflector of that style. The adaptation was written by Lucien Hubbard. Edward H. Griffith is the director. Alice Calhoun, a young leading woman who has become prominent in recent big pictures, plays an important role.

Alice Joyce Begins on New Play.

Alice Joyce and a large company under the direction of George Terwilliger are commencing this week the Vitagraph special production, "Dollars and the Woman," adapted from the story by Albert Payson Terhune. Lucien Hubbard wrote the scenario.

Goldwyn Promises High Quality Films for First Run Theatres During April

DURING April four Goldwyn pictures that promise to keep up the record-breaking success scored by the earlier issues in this year's schedule will be released. They are Rex Beach's "The Silver Horde," Geraldine Farrar in "The Woman and the Puppet," Gertrude Atherton's "The Tower of Ivory" and Tom Moore in "The Great Accident." All of these productions have been completed at Goldwyn's Culver City studios.

In "The Silver Horde" Rex Beach is said to have written his screen masterpiece. The action of the story is laid in Alaska, where a Wall Street syndicate fights to reap the profit on a silver horde of salmon when the claim rightfully belongs to Cherry Malotte, the heroine, played by Myrtle Stedman. The cast also includes Robert McKim, Curtis Cooksey, Betty Blythe, M. B. Clynne and Hector Sarno.

Geraldine Farrar in "The Woman and the Puppet," a Reginald Barker production from the play by Pierre Louys and Pierre Frondaie, has the type of colorful character that she knows so well how to portray with striking effect. Lavish sets supply a picturesque background for the stirring tale of love, hate and jealousy. Besides Miss Farrar, Lou Tellegen, Dorothy Cummings, Bertram Grassby, Macey Harlan and others are in the cast.

"The Tower of Ivory," an Eminent Authors productions directed by William Parke, is an adaptation of Gertrude Atherton's popular novel. It is a romance of America and England in which Barbara Castleton appears in four distinct characters—as a half-starved factory girl, as a dancehall singer, as the pet of a wealthy admirer and as a famous singer and the wife of an English nobleman.

"The Great Accident" is one of Ben Ames Williams' widely circulated tales. It appeared first as a serial in the Saturday Evening Post where it attracted much attention, and later in book form. Harry Beaumont directed the picture with a cast including Jane Novak, Ann Forrest, whose emotional acting is a conspicuous feature of "Dangerous Days," Andrew Robson, Willard Louis and Lillian Langdon.

ceeded in penetrating deep into the Sierra Nevada snow country and is now filming scenes for "Athalie," by Robert W. Chambers, to be Franklin's first Mayflower production.

According to Franklin's wire, his picture will contain a number of unusual snow scenes, the pictorial beauty of which will rival any heretofore recorded by the camera.

Accompanied by Sylvia Breamer, Conrad Nagle, Rosemary Theby, Robert Cain and Sam De Grasse, the principal players in the "Athalie" cast, and a complete staff of technical experts, Director Franklin made the journey from Truckee to Lake Tahoe in waist-deep snow, encountering considerable difficulty and hardship on the way.

Selznick and Republic Ready to Stage Annual Convention

PARTIAL plans for the second annual convention of Select branch managers in New York City during the week of April 5 have been announced by Sam E. Morris, vice president and general manager of Select.

The plans so far made indicate a more important convention than the one held last year. They call for daily business sessions, trips to the Selznick Bronx and Fort Lee studios, organization lunches and dinners, theatre parties and after theatre roof-frolics.

On Monday morning, April 5, the first session will convene at the Hotel Astor at 11 o'clock with Mr. Morris presiding. An organization luncheon will be held at 2.30 p. m. in a private dining room and following this a trip to the Fort Lee studio will be made. An organization theatre party will be held in the evening.

On Tuesday a business meeting will be held at the Hotel Astor from 10 o'clock to 12.30. A luncheon recess will follow until 2.30. The business session will be from 2.30 until 5.30. In the evening a theatre party will be followed by an after theatre supper.

On Wednesday a business session will be held from 10 until 12.30 o'clock. The luncheon recess will end at 2 p. m., and the afternoon business session will last until 5 o'clock. At 7 p. m. an organization dinner will be held.

A daily convention issue of the Selznick "Brain Exchange" will be distributed.

New York Exhibitors' League Officers Plan Legislation on Juvenile Problem

SYDNEY S. COHEN, Samuel I. Berman and Charles L. O'Reilly, of the New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, will meet and confer with the legislative committee of the league in Albany on March 29 in connection with pending legislation of interest to the motion picture industry.

In the meantime, it is expected that President Cohen and his associates will confer with child welfare societies as well as with representatives of the board of education of New York City in bringing about an interchange of ideas preliminary to the introduction of constructive legislation along lines identified with child welfare work.

Hunter Bill Is Doomed.

Mr. Cohen and his associates were in Albany on March 24 and as a result it was said that the Hunter bill which seeks to repeal the present law permitting Sunday motion picture shows in this state, will be killed beyond any question of doubt. Mr. Cohen before leaving for New York received assurances from many legislators not only in the senate but in the assembly as well, that there is absolutely no likelihood of the bill being passed.

There is, however, an interesting outlook for the next few weeks in connection with constructive legislation which is favored by President Cohen and his associates, and which, if approved by the legislature, will become a forward step in the handling of boys and girls in motion picture theatres.

The Juvenile Problem.

"I am in favor of more regulation," said Mr. Cohen, "but I want it inside the theatre rather than outside. I am in favor of a bill which would bring about the segregation of children unaccompanied by parents to the theatre and who would be in charge of a matron whose fitness for the position would be passed on by the children's welfare society or the department of licenses. I think that unaccompanied children should be segregated in the motion picture houses. This would, of course, be of interest chiefly to cities of the first and second class and would pertain only to after-school hours. Furthermore, I am in favor of making the law so broad that it would restrict certain motion picture theatres that in some instances can be classified only as 'dumps' from admitting children. I am positive that such regulation would merit the approval of fathers and mothers throughout the state and would also serve to elevate and bring about a higher type of picture intended for the entertainment of children."

Crotch, English Film Man and Dickensian, Due Here

AMONG the passengers on board the Lapland, which is due in New York, March 27, was Walter Crotch, England's great Dickensian scholar and also vice chairman of the Alliance Film Corporation, the five-million-dollar British film organization recently established in London.

Mr. Crotch is coming to America with a view to cementing the growing cordial relations between the kindred industries in both countries. He is himself the author of a photoplay based on Charles Dickens' unfinished novel, Edwin Drood. With him he is bringing a big program of first-rate British film stories made by British actors under the latest expert advice from America, and he is hoping to stimulate American interest in these themes. Crotch is a noted lecturer, a scholarly writer and a keen business man.

Legion Post of California Honors Tom Mix, Fox Cowboy

TOM MIX, Fox star, soldier of several wars and with a long service under the Stars and Stripes to his credit, was honored by Melvin Smyth Post of the American Legion while he was at Sonora in the Sierra Mountains, where the exteriors of his latest Fox photoplay, "No Limit Carson," were made. Everyone in California knows Tom Mix and knows his record as a soldier and a cowboy. Accordingly, when he reached the historic country which was the scene of the first gold rush to California in 1849 the entire town turned out to greet him.

At a reception given in his honor Mix was presented with a nugget pin by Melvin Smyth Post. The pin was made from a nugget taken from the famous O'Hara Pocket Mine; the nugget being one of the largest taken from the mine in recent years.

G. P. Morgan, superintendent of schools, whose father was one of the original Forty-niners and who has lived in Sonora all his life, made the presentation speech.

SUNDAY OPENING THOUGHT LOST IN NORTH DAKOTA

SUNDAY picture theatre opening in North Dakota appears to have lost by a majority of more than 4,000 in the state-wide referendum held there on March 16, according to incomplete returns available this week. The vote tabulated thus far gives the opponents of Sunday opening 19,799 as against 15,715 in favor of the move.

The referendum caused one of the most strenuous fights ever conducted in the state. To inclement weather, in which one of the most severe snowstorms of the year took place, is attributed largely the light vote which was registered on the measure. The "blue laws", which have been operative in the state for years, will continue for some time at least.

One of the encouraging features of the situation, which has been brought to the attention of state exhibitors, is the removal in the referendum of the ban on Sunday baseball, which won by more than 1,900 votes. This, it is expected, will pave the way for a reopening of the question with chances of the "blue laws" appeal soon, if the Sunday baseball lifting proves successful. The ban on cigarettes and boxing, which also were balloted on in the referendum, was continued.

The exhibitors of North Dakota organized an independent association to fight during the campaign for reopening of the picture houses. They had the support in their campaign of the Independent Legion. The inauguration of more liberal laws was opposed by the North Dakota Ministerial Association and the Non-Partisan League.

And They Were Glad They Saw It.

Marshall Neilan's initial production from his own studios, "The River's End," opened a one week's engagement at the American Theatre in Salt Lake City by attracting capacity business afternoon and evening. This is the first time in the history of the American, with its 3,100 seats, that a picture has been booked for a longer period than four days. The rule was broken in the case of "The River's End," because, according to Manager George Mayne, it is one of the greatest pictures which has ever been made.

In connection with his exploitation campaign, Mr. Mayne adopted the slogan, "You will be glad you bought a ticket."

He's Swift at Everything—Love—Rescues—Battling—Oh! Yes, He's a Swift Captain.

would stand in the way of our doing it. If we found that we could not place our product throughout the United States in the theatres where they should be shown, we could and would build our own theatres. However, I do not think it will be necessary for us to make pictures or to buy theatres.

"We realized that if we could work with the independent producer and with a proper organization, and working along lines where we could command respect for what we were doing, we could make a success. So we directed our course accordingly.

Going Into the Business Heavier.

"I was rather amused to hear that a rumor had been circulated that a competitor had bought out Robertson-Cole. Instead of retiring from the business, we are going into it heavier and heavier every week, because we realize we are on the right track.

"In summing up, I want you to take this thought away with you: We are very much in your hands—I might say 99 per cent. in your hands. I think you learned that we are in this business to give you the best the market offers. We work on the basis of getting not what is offered to us, but what we want.

"We are giving you a product today that is costing 100, 150, and in some instances, 200 per cent more for our pictures. Every week you will have something big to offer and book.

"Honesty of Purpose."

"I wish to instill in your minds the one thought as to our business. It may be summed up in three words—'honesty of purpose.' We insist on your commanding the respect of every exhibitor with whom you do business, whether he is paying $2,000 for the use of one of our productions, or pay only $5. We want every exhibitor to know that we are giving him a square deal, and we want every employee to realize that we will not tolerate methods which might be considered by an exhibitor as 'putting something over.' You must be fair and honorable in your business dealings with everyone you come in contact with. That, in brief, is the very foundation of Robertson-Cole."

"A Woman Who Understood" Is Going Big Everywhere

WITH a New York showing which indicates that it is going to be one of the most popular pictures in which Bessie Barriscale ever has been seen, "A Woman Who Understood" is drawing big crowds all over the country. All New York likes to go "down to the village" and it is saving the price of tea and crumpets on this picture, because in it Miss Barriscale is a Greenwich village sculptress and has her own tea room.

Many Angles of Appeal.

The continued success of the picture is assured through the diverse angles by which it appeals. First of all there is the pretty story of a Greenwich Village sculptress, who saves a young musician from suicide. Then there is the married love triangle, with a most unusual ending. Besides there are a number of lovely children in the picture, and the Greenwich Village locations, and those of the country near New York both are attractive. Isabelle Johnson wrote the story, and the production was directed by William Parke.

Forrest Stanley is a new leading man who supports Miss Barriscale. Thomas Holding plays the husband of the dilettante, which latter role is played by Dorothy Cumming.

Harry Berman Describes Universal Plan for Another National Exchange Contest

HARRY M. BERMAN, general manager of exchanges for Universal, has announced the working plan of another national sales contest to be started next month among the twenty-six Universal exchanges in the United States. He has named it the "7,000 Prize Contest"—that being the amount of prize money involved.

Under his plan the exchanges have been partitioned off into five groups and all the competition is within these groups. Thus each exchange, instead of competing against twenty-five other exchanges, will compete only against exchanges of equal possibilities.

Explaining this, Mr. Berman said: "In our sales contests heretofore, we have had a difficult problem because there was no possibility of starting every one equally. Conditions in the field make it impossible for every exchange to be absolutely on the same level. We have met this problem by arranging our exchanges into groups of equal possibilities.

How Exchanges Are Grouped.

"In the first group, we have placed Salt Lake City, Butte, Portland, Sioux Falls, Charlotte and Spokane. These exchanges are about evenly matched; their possibilities are just about the same and they are capable of a neck and neck race all the way through.

"It is the same with the other groups. Group No. 2 includes Denver, Seattle and Omaha. Group No. 3 has Indianapolis, Milwaukee, Kansas City, San Francisco and Des Moines. Group No. 4 has St. Louis, Chicago, Los Angeles, Oklahoma, Minneapolis and Pittsburgh. Group No. 5 has Cincinnati, Detroit, Buffalo, Toronto, Cleveland and New York.

"Under this system we have only first prizes. There will be first prize for each winner of each group. In the case of the first two groups, the first prize is for $750 each. The prize for the third group is $1,000. The prize for the fourth and fifth groups is $1,750 each.

"That makes the prize money total $6,000. The other $1,000 is to be competed for on a national basis; every exchange against the other. The winner gets the $1,000, which is to be divided among employees not on the sales force. In the event of a tie in any of the prizes, the full amount of the prize will be awarded each of those tying.

Expects Regular "Spring Drive."

"The plan of determining the winner follows plans of previous contests. The business of April, May and June will be measured against that of January, February and March. The largest ratio of increase determines the successful contestant. The contest opens April 3 and closes July 3."

Mr. Berman said that the contest among the exchanges was being launched at the happiest time of the season. It ought to develop into a regular "spring drive," he said, now that "The Virgin of Stamboul" is on the threshold of making records.

While the regularly affiliated exchanges are engaging in this contest, Universal's independent exchanges also will enter the prize lists. The Big U Exchange, which the ball rolling by setting itself a lofty handles the New York territory, has started standard and agreeing to reach that mark.

Educational to Distribute Booklets Detailing Policy

THAT exhibitors may be informed of its future policy, Educational Films Corporation announces this week that it has in preparation an attractive booklet which will fully inform the hundreds of inquirers concerning its greatly enlarged activities. Officials state that there will be no effort to distribute this broadcast, but that it will be sent only to those who are sufficiently interested to make the request on their theatre stationery.

Educational announced last week that it had acquired the entire product of the C. L. Chester studios, including the Chester-Outing Scenics, which will continue to be released weekly; the Chester Screenics, which will be bi-weekly; and the Chester Comedies, the first of which has been given a prerelease showing, which will be released monthly. Already work is under way on the first of the "Stereospeed" camera product, the new inventoin of Earle Emlay and controlled by the Johnson and Hopkins Company. These pictures are now being made in Florida and the first of them will be delivered in Educational within a few days.

With production activities at full speed, Joseph Lee, who will have charge of special exploitation, is spending considerable time in principal centers, making investigations under the direction of E. W. Hammons, vice president and general manager. As yet only tentative arrangements have been made toward forming the general sales organization, awaiting a complete survey of the situation. However, it is the plan to make the New York exchange the model one and to bring those having charge of the out-of-town exchanges here first to acquaint them fully with Educational methods and policies.

Universal Congratulates Nicholas Power.

Harry Levey, manager of the industrial department of Universal, has written his congratulations to the Nicholas Power Company, Inc., for its "wonderful co-operation in conducting the motion picture part of the program of the dinner to Secretary of State Hugo at the Commodore."

"It simply goes to prove that the Powers machine and the Powers organization measure up to the best in the industry," his letter continues. "Everyone was mazed at the wonderful clear photography projected on the screen, in spite of the smoke and the throw of 165 feet."

Ain't the Sky Bee-utiful.

Thought we'd just call your attention to something besides—well it's Marie Prevost in United Artists' "Down on the Farm," made by Mack Sennett.

"Desert Love!" Huh! Sorta Looks Like Desert Hate.

Douglas Z. Doty To Be "Plot Doctor" in Universal's Scenario Department

DOUGLAS Z. DOTY, known as a shrewd judge of stories in the literary world, has joined the Universal forces and is now on his way to Los Angeles to create a new post in the Universal scenario department. He will be the Universal literary advisor and "plot doctor."

This is somewhat of a new departure in the film editorial field and Universal, in conceiving the importance of this work, has been satisfied with none but the best.

Mr. Doty, besides being a well-known author, is a magazine editor of many years' standing. After being associated as magazine editor with the Boston Journal and the New York Sunday Herald he entered the magazine world exclusively and became literary advisor of the Century Company. Later he became editor of the Century Magazine and resigned to become editor of the Cosmopolitan. Recently he has been connected with the publishing concern of Harper Brothers as fiction editor.

"Twelve years' work in developing and handling the work of established novelists has taught me that plot is of paramount importance," he says. "The theme may be as old as the hills and the treatment mediocre, but if the plot is clever, if the story itself is big it is worth any effort that may be taken in dressing it up. This is just as true on the screen as it is in the drama or on the printed page.

Styles Vary from Season to Season.

"Styles in stories seem to vary from season to season. Historical romances went out of vogue, for instance. This was not because the public stopped reading them, but because the authors stopped writing them. After a season or so of melodrama the public will seem to turn away from it to other styles of the dramatic art. This is not because of a lessening interest in melodrama, but because a flood of poor melodramas generally follows the presentation of several good ones.

"Fundamentally, it is the story, or plot, that puts a story across. The technique of the scenario and the technique of the story or novel are quite different, but the essential values are the same in any form of art. It is the essential human appeal that makes for popular success. After all, what the public wants is a good story."

Of his new work Mr. Doty has enthusiastic hopes. "What is true of stories and their plots in the field of fiction must be true in the motion picture world," he says. "Good stories are of prime necessity. Good plots are paramount."

Metro Adds Harvey H. Gates and Percy Heath as Writers

METRO announces the addition of Harvey M. Gates and Percy Heath to its staff of scenario writers at Hollywood. The acquisition of these two writers marks another step in Metro's policy of expansion, which enters its most important phase with the resumption of dual production activities in the East and West.

Mr. Gates is one of the youngest writers to attain a big reputation in the screen world. He was born in Hawaii in 1889. After a newspaper and magazine career he came to New York as a reviewer on "The Dramatic Mirror." His screen career he started as a free lance writer. He later went into the publicity field. This led to his becoming a staff scenario writer.

Mr. Heath comes to Metro from Universal, where he was screen editor. He is a veteran newspaper man, with wide acquaintance and experience in many cities. He is well-known on Broadway because of his long service as a publicity man for Charles Dillingham. He has written a number of scenarios and achieved substantial success.

Norma Nichols Joins Ruth Roland Company.

Norma Nichols is a recent addition to the company supporting Ruth Roland in her next Pathe serial, "Broadway Bab," which is now in production at Los Angeles.

Miss Nichols began her screen career in Sennett Comedies, and has since appeared with Roscoe Arbuckle and Chester Conklin and many of the Kalem Ham and

Bud pictures in comedy roles. Later she joined the Lasky company, where she appeared with Blanche Sweet in "Tides of Barnegat." She also played the second lead in "The Legion of Death," and was a member of the cast of "The Ne'er Do Well."

Put Chains Across Front of Theatre to Keep Out Crowds Coming to See Pathe Film

PREDICTING that every theatre in Iowa will show the big Edgar Lewis' special production released by Pathe, "Other Men's Shoes," H. L. Conway, manager of the Des Moines branch office, has reported the remarkable success of the picture in his territory. Mr. Conway has just spent a week in New York at the Pathe executive offices preparing the schedule for his territory in the coming months.

"I have heard of many managers who fought to get people into their theatres, but I never heard of them fighting to keep people out until 'Other Men's Shoes' came along," Mr. Conway said. "It is a fact, however, that A. H. Dunkel, of the Strand Theatre in Iowa City, had to stretch chains across the front of his theatre lobby to keep the crowds from forcing down the doors the two days he played the picture.

Rumor and Letter Did the Trick.

"Mr. Dunkel sent a circular letter to his patrons on the picture, quoting some of the newspaper criticisms. That circular and the word of mouth advertising after the first showing did the trick. For two days and two nights the crowd surged in front of the theatre, held from jamming against the doors only by the chains which the manager had hurriedly fixed in place.

"In practically every theatre in which the picture has been shown capacity business has resulted. It is the general opinion of all my customers that it is among the very best of all pictures. I feel certain that it will play to 100 per cent. business in 100 per cent. of the theatres in the territory."

Bill Authorizes Liberty Theatre Completion.

Congressman Julius Kahn, of California, chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs, has introduced a bill in the House of Representatives authorizing the Secretary of War to spend $78,000 in completing the Liberty Theatre at Camp Knox, Kentucky.

Lewis' "Other Men's Shoes" Breaks All Pathe Records

BREAKING every record for Pathe feature business, "Other Men's Shoes," Edgar Lewis' first big special for Pathe distribution, has won a place for itself among the big pictures of the year. Sales figures established by "Common Clay" and "The Thirteenth Chair," which have stood pre-eminent among Pathe marks, have been far surpassed by "Other Men's Shoes."

Released the first week in February, the Lewis special already has passed the heavy quota set for it in virtually every territory in the country, and on the whole has reached the nationwide total imposed by Pathe. Director of Exchanges Elmer R. Pearson, in reporting these facts to Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, comments enthusiastically on the sweep of the production. The exceptional exploitation possibilities presented by the production have been grasped by exhibitors generally, Mr. Pearson said, and, as a consequence, the Lewis special has received a greater amount of publicity and advertising than any other Pathe picture to date.

Henry King and Robert Thornby Will Produce Specials for J. D. Hampton

ANNOUNCEMENT of a series of special productions has just been made by the Jesse D. Hampton studios. This new series is to be known as the Henry King Productions and the Robert Thornby Productions and will be made in addition to the present star series of the Hampton studios, which includes the productions of H. B. Warner, Blanche Sweet and William Desmond.

Mr. Hampton said: "The trend of the theatre-going public to special productions is particularly interesting from the producer's standpoint as it permits the use of a type of stories and plays not always acceptable for star vehicles.

"Contrary to the generally accepted theory there is a great amount of excellent all-star special picture material available. Most of the famous writers of fiction of several decades past wrote stories that for screen purposes are ideally suited to this type of production, but which were not feasible for the star production type. The trend in current fiction seems to be along the same lines. All of the stories of the leading publications, including the Saturday Evening Post, the Red Book, et cetera, in the very great majority are all-star types of stories.

Two Able Directors.

"Another attractive angle in producing these special productions, from the producer's viewpoint, is the opportunity to utilize to the utmost the ability of the director. In this day it is a truism to suggest the importance of the director. While the public may not know the names of very many directors, exhibitors definitely have learned that they can safely judge a picture in advance by knowing who directed it."

It is further announced that Mr. Hampton has chosen as his directors for the forthcoming series of specials, Henry King and Robert Thornby.

"Both of them have been responsible for many recent box-office successes," says the announcement. "Mr. King most notably with H. B. Warner pictures and Mr. Thornby with Blanche Sweet's. Both have had long careers as actors on the legitimate stage and in pictures and as directors.

"Director King's first special will be 'Big Dick,' by Frank Spearman, a virile heart-interest story with some spectacular scenes laid in San Francisco at the time of the fire, and on sea, and back again on the desert. Director Thornby's first picture will be 'Half a Chance,' by Frederick S. Isham."

Congratulates Lloyd by Wire.

Jack Eaton, managing director of the Strand Theatre, where Harold Lloyd's latest comedy, "Haunted Spooks," scored a big hit, was so enthusiastic over the production, that he wired personal congratulations to the young comedian. He termed Lloyd's latest "the best comedy of the year." The wire to Lloyd under date of March 16 follows:

"'Haunted Spooks' is a pippin. Best comedy of the year. Congratulations. Broadway likes you. Observe advertising in New York newspapers this week and you will see what I think of you. The great question is always, when is the next one ready. The Strand has got to be your New York home."

To Be Accounted for: "The Thirtieth Piece of Silver." Well, There's Two on the Captain's Shoulders and the Rest Is in the Dining Room.

Anderson Begins on "Monsieur Couperin."

Robert Anderson's theories of what the American public wants in the way of high class comedy is getting its try-out at Universal City, where he has just begun the filming of the first of the two-reel comedies he has been engaged to direct for Universal.

It is called "Monsieur Couperin," and is based on the story by Bernard McConville, in which a struggling French artist, trying to camouflage a hole in his sweetheart's stocking, hits upon the idea of painting feminine limbs in imitation of gorgeous hosiery.

Anderson himself takes the role of the artist. He is supported by Beulah Booker, Olga Grey, Frances Brissell, Helen Holte, Sidney D'Albrook, William DeVaul, Alfred Pollet and M. J. McCarty.

Artistic Poster for "Stamboul" Film.

Among the posters prepared for exploiting "The Virgin of Stamboul," in which Priscilla Dean is starred, Universal has produced a one-sheet poster of unusual beauty and quality, painted by E. Tempest Inman.

It bears a bust-portrait of Miss Dean, garbed in Turkish garments, including the turban and jewels of the East.

Eileen Percy To Be Leading Woman for Tom Mix in Fox Film, "The Untamed"

EILEEN PERCY, the same popular Miss Percy who has graced the leading female roles of many successful pictures, has been placed under a six months' contract by William Fox to appear in a similar capacity with various Fox stars. The first production in which she will figure under her new contract is the screen adaptation of the Max Brand novel, "The Untamed." Tom Mix will be the star in this western drama and Miss Percy, in the chief female role, will add her magnetism and personal charm.

In her latest picture, "Leave It To Me," also a Fox production, the versatile actress did such fine work opposite William Russell that Mr. Fox decided to place her under contract for other male stars at his western studios, and there is a hint that Miss Percy may climb still further up the ladder of screen fame before the lapse of many months.

Besides being a talented actress and a fine artist at make-up, Miss Eileen Percy is a well-known beauty. She has appeared with almost a score of the most popular male stars of the film in roles which varied from the strongest drama to the lightest comedy and farce. In each line she has acquitted herself with equal success, and with each impersonation has established herself more firmly among the leading players of this country.

It is interesting that two such charming young women as Eileen Percy and Shirley Mason—the latter now a Fox star—should, after various stage and screen experiences, come under the same management in California. Both are Brooklyn girls.

Miss Percy, unlike Miss Mason, received her early stage experience in the musical field. For two and a half years she was in the front rank of the Ziegfeld Beauties, starting with Ziegfeld in her sixteenth year. It was while appearing with the late Gaby Deslys in "Stop, Look and Listen" that Mr. Ziegfeld discovered her and chose her for his beauty chorus. Later she was enhancing the beauty of the Cocoanut Grove atop the Century Roof, when Douglas Fairbanks spied her and induced her to enter the picture field.

Eleven Owners of Neighborhood Houses Plan to Buy First Runs in Milwaukee

STARTING out with the determination to get the best motion pictures without waiting for the larger theatres to play them first run, eleven Milwaukee exhibitors who own neighborhood houses have organized the Milwaukee Associated First Run Theatres. The combination will pay the first run price for every new picture accepted and will arrange for its presentation almost simultaneously in the several theatres.

The officers of the new organization are: president, Ernest Langemack, of the Colonial theatre; vice-president, L. Plate, of the Climax; secretary, Fred Sieger, of the Regent; treasurer, M. Rice, of the State. Other members are Earl Rice, of the New Riviera; S. Bauer, of the Venus and Atlas; Harry Berlowitz, of the Climax; A. Dietz, of the Savoy; J. H. Silliman, of the Downer and Astor; A. L. Bartlett, of the Empire; F. Breummer, of the Idle Hour, and Joseph Schwartz, owner of several houses, including the Riviera and the Liberty.

Plan Joint Advertising Campaign.

In addition to combining for the purchase of the pictures the exhibitors have arranged a joint newspaper and street car advertising campaign to drive home the fact that the public may see the latest motion pictures in the neighborhood houses as well as in the downtown houses. The first picture selected for first-run presentation by the associated exhibitors was the Pathe special "Other Men's Shoes," an Edgar Lewis production.

"Many of the best pictures are held up here for weeks awaiting a big start at the downtown theatres where they have been able to pay first run prices," said Ernest Langemack, president of the association, "and the neighborhood exhibitors decided to combine for the purpose of getting the very best for our customers. When they understand that we are giving them the finest pictures made, and are giving them first runs, we know that our efforts will be appreciated.

"'Other Men's Shoes' is one of the best pictures of the year, in my opinion, and if we waited until it could be shown at one of the downtown theatres as a first run we would not have secured it without waiting for other theatres to start in on the way. We therefore organized and secured the picture for everyone in the combination."

Dallas Closing In On New York Men.

The William Fox salesman attached to the New York exchange are now in a neck and neck race with the salesmen of Dallas for first place in the third annual drive which is being conducted under Mr. Fox's personal direction.

Two weeks more remain of the drive, which finishes Saturday midnight, April 10. Louis Rosenbluh, the executive of the New York exchange, is spurring on his salesmen and he is confident that when his young men get into their hundred per cent. stride they will walk home with the bacon.

In the New York exchange Morris Markowitz is leading, with Nat Furst and David Gross close seconds.

Walthall Returns to Screen in "The Splendid Hazard"

AFTER an absence of several months, Henry B. Walthall will come back to the screen in Allan Dwan's picturization of Harold MacGrath's widely read novel, "The Splendid Hazard," to be presented by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation.

Walthall has been entrusted with an important role in the production. As the illegitimate son of Napoleon Bonaparte, consumed by a maniacal ambition to restore a monarchical government in France, the actor has been given a part rich in opportunities for character portrayal.

According to the Mayflower statement, Walthall has realized the full possibilities of his vivid role. His notable performance as the "Little Colonial" in "The Birth of a Nation" has been equalled if not surpassed by his latest achievement, says Allan Dwan.

Walthall's appearance in "The Splendid Hazard" will be his first since he completed work in "The Confession," more than six months ago. Previous to that he had been featured in a number of special productions, including "The Boomerang," "The Long Lane's Turning" and "False Faces."

"Deadlier Sex" Praised in Letter to Pathe by B. S. Moss

THE presentation of "The Deadlier Sex" at the Broadway Theatre, New York City, and its enthusiastic reception by the management and the public marks the third Blanche Sweet success in that theatre since her return to the screen under the Pathe banner. The picture is warmly commended by B. S. Moss in a letter to Pathe Exchange, Inc., and in his letter Mr. Moss pleasantly refers to the fact that the first picture ever booked for The Broadway under his management was a Blanche Sweet production. "And," he adds, "we have been happy to show as many of her dramas as we possibly could."

all yours!

Commendation continues to reach the Pathe offices from branch managers and from exhibitors who are screening the picture preliminary to booking it.

"The film settles none of the world's problems, but it is unusually good entertainment—and entertainment has always been the chief function of the motion picture. Regardless of how valuable propaganda and philosophy may be on the screen, the fact remains that the essential mission of the celluloid art is to entertain, although not a few of the producers seem to have forgot this," said Mr. Moss in his letter.

Praises First Release of National Picture Theatres

THE Regent Theatre, of Rochester, N. Y., one of the leading motion picture theatres in the eastern part of the United States, was the first to wire congratulations to Lewis J. Selznick upon the excellence of "Just a Wife," the initial release of National Picture Theatres, Inc.

The telegram was sent immediately upon the conclusion of the presentation in Rochester of the production and coincidental with the release of the picture, which at this writing is being distributed to exhibitors throughout the country. The opinion was expressed by the management of the Regent that the feature should prove a record box office attraction.

In a statement following receipt of the wire, Mr. Selznick, president of National Picture Theatres, said: "I feel assured that the telegram from Rochester echoes the opinion of representative exhibitors throughout the country, although it is still too early to hear from them. 'Just a Wife' is barely released and the Regent merely 'got the jump' on others in the matter of expressing appreciation for the production."

Aside from the essential details of production furnished by press departments to all trade papers there is more exclusive matter of importance to the picture showmen published every week in Moving Picture World than in any other class publication.

"I'm a Representative of the Weak—I Mean Stronger 'Sex,'" Says Louise Glaum with a Smile.
But there is only one member of the "powerful" sex shown in these views from J. Parker Reid's production released through Hodkinson.

Eugene Walter Is Third Playright to Join Metro's Staff of Eminent Authors

EUGENE WALTER, author of "Paid in Full," "The Easiest Way," "Fine Feathers" and other notable stage successes, has joined Metro's staff of eminent authors. The dramatist is already at work on a manuscript for the screen, according to the announcement from the Metro offices telling of his acquisition by that producing and distributing corporation.

Mr. Walter is the third distinguished playwright to become associated with Metro within the past few weeks. The other two are Bayard Veiller, author of "Within the Law," and "The Thirteenth Chair" and Winchell Smith, who wrote "The Fortune Hunter" and "Brewster's Millions" and was co-author of "Turn of the Right" and "Lightnin'."

Eugene Walter has been referred to as "America's leading dramatist." He won through to success after tasting the bitterest drags of adversity. He slept on park benches in New York with the manuscript of "Paid in Full" in his pockets, before he finally obtained recognition. Every prominent manager in the city had rejected the play when he took it to Wagenhals and Kemper, who became interested.

"Where do you live, Mr. Walter?" he was asked, when he presented his play.

"Bryant Park, the second bench from the entrance at Fortieth street, he replied.

The play was accepted and produced in Chicago in 1907. It brought a new sense of realism to the American stage and critics were unanimous in hailing Mr. Walter as the most brilliant writer the country has produced. The production at the Astor Theatre in New York the following season established his reputation beyond question. The play ran for seasons and was produced in nearly every large city in the world. Any number of companies played it on the road and it is still frequently revived.

Since then his plays have included, besides "Fine Feathers" and "The Easiest Way," "The Wolf," "The Real Issue," "Just a Wife," "Boots and Saddles," "The Lie," "The Assassin," "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," "A Plain Woman," "The Knife" and "The Challenge."

Utah University Has Movies.

A series of moving picture performances are being presented Thursday afternoons at the University of Utah under the direction of the visual instruction department. Several films on education subjects go to make up an afternoon's exhibition. Prof. F. W. Reynolds addresses the classes, his first lecture being on "The Possibilities of the Motion Picture at Educational Institutions."

The department has $40,000 worth of films dealing with educational matters and these will be projected on the Thursday afternoons during the remainder of the year.

New South American Import Association Successfully Fights the Film Pirates

THE day of the film pirate is past, at least insofar as Brazil is concerned.

Advices received by E. E. Shauer, of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, tell of the formation of an import association for the protection of the legitimate film industry in that country. This organization is known as the Junta do Commercio Importador Cinematographico do Brazil. It has thrown its membership open to film importers of all nationalities and has pledged all of its resources to the protection and the improvement of the importation and exhibition of motion picture films.

While the pirating of films has about ceased in Brazil, thanks to the energetic action taken by the legitimate business interests, the association expects to make this elimination complete by stamping out the last vestiges of the illegal practice. One of the principal objects of the bureau is to assist in framing and in supporting laws for the protection of theatres and importers. All films released legitimately will be protected by the resources of the bureau, which will attempt to stamp out all such objectionable practices as the interchanging, cutting and destroying of films.

Must Pay for Mutilation.

All destroyed or damaged film must be paid for or service to the individual theatre will be discontinued. Offenders against the rules of the association will have the right to be heard in their own defense, but are subject to dismissal and are denied further film service. Theatres having faulty machines which damage the film will be required to purchase new equipment; the association assisting in the purchase of new machines without profit to itself.

The association also pledges its services

Schlager Goes on Tour.

Sig Schlager has left New York on a tour of thirty principal cities of the country. Schlager goes as J. Parker Read, Jr.'s, special sales representative, having acted in the past as publicity director for the Louise Glaum and Hobart Bosworth units. He is succeeded in this capacity by Lawrence A. Weingarten, who, peculiarly enough, succeeded Schlager as publicity manager for Louis J. Gasnier enterprises and as personal representative for Lew Cody. Weingarten formerly was exploitation representative in Los Angeles for First National and the T. L. Tally theatres.

in eliminating bad accounts, and theatre owners who neglect or refuse to pay just accounts will be deprived of film service, as practically every importer is a member of the organization. Peliculas "D'Luxo" da America do Sul, the distributor of Paramount-Artcraft Pictures in Brazil, is one of the leading importing firms to join the organization.

The organization is fully prepared to wage war on film pirates and will join hands with the government in elimination such business. Any theatre showing a stolen film forfeits its membership in the organization and is barred from receiving films imported by members of the association.

Cohns Praised on Their New Policy.

Jack and Harry Cohn have received scores of letters and telegrams of congratulation upon their recently inaugurated policy of bigger production methods. Those who have seen the first two Hall-room Boys Comedies, produced under the supervision of Harry Cohn in the Cohns' own studio, are enthusiastic about the manner which they have been handled.

Neely Edwards continues as the featured player, and is given the support of one of the screen's cleverest comedians in Hugh Fay, who has had a long experience in screen comedy, appearing in some of the screen's most famous laughmakers. Harry Cohn remains in Los Angeles to personally supervise production.

Forbell Buys Court Theatre.

Harry M. Forbell has bought the Court Theatre, Pekin, Ill., from George M. Troughton, who made it one of the best motion picture theatres in the state. He has retained Harry Dittmer and will continue the policy of high-class pictures.

Metro Is Sure Whipping the Cream of the Literature Field.

From left to right they are Eugene Walter, noted American dramatist, whose "Fine Feathers" is now being done on the Coast; Bayard Veiller, author of "Within the Law," will write first story for Bert Lytell, and Winchell Smith, noted playwright, will also contribute to the season's list.

Sig Samuels and New Company to Build Big Atlanta House

A NEW moving picture theatre to cost about $500,000 will be erected in downtown Atlanta at Broad, Luckie and Forsyth streets by a recently organized stock company capitalized at a like amount. Sig Samuels, owner of the Criterion Theatre, said that the new theatre will be known as the Metropolitan and will be completed in about a year.

Construction work will start in the near future. The building to be a combination office and theatre building, six stories high. The theatre will seat 2,250. The building will front fifty feet on Broad and on Forsyth and extend 282 feet along Luckie street, the site being directly opposite the city's principal hotel, the Piedmont. A long-term lease on the site has been taken by the company, which is headed by Mr. Samuels.

A local clothing firm recently purchased the site where the Criterion now stands and will use it for expansion purposes when the lease runs out, several years hence. The Criterion, managed by Willard Patterson, will continue to operate at least until that time. Mr. Samuels and Mr. Patterson recently visited several Eastern cities to secure ideas for the new Metropolitan.

Robertson-Cole Makes Announcements of Importance Promised the Industry

WITH 1920 only getting under way Robertson-Cole points with pride to the manner in which it has fulfilled its promise to make announcements of importance to the exhibitor. Better than mere phrases are mention of Otis Skinner, who is to give the screen his "Kismet"; Mae Marsh, who comes back for four specials a year; Georges Carpentier, the French heavyweight champion, for whom will be written a story by Willard Mack; Sessue Hayakawa, who will make four big pictures a year; Dustin Farnum, who will do the same; the Sir Ernest Shackleton South Polar pictures; Albert Capellani, one of the most popular of directors whose first picture will be Marjorie Rambeau in "The Fortune Teller"; screen rights to "Grumpy," Cyril Maude's well-known play, and Chic Sale, the popular rube comedian, on the screen for the first time.

Contracts covering these stars, writers, directors and plays have been closed. Work in most instances is already under way. So within the first phase of the new year is borne out the substance of the prophecy made by A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, to the effect that Robertson-Cole will not spare expense to release motion pictures that will please the patron and so assure a financial harvest for the live exhibitor.

From this list it will seem that Robertson-Cole is carrying out with fidelity the policy which it announced. The end has not yet come for more new acquisitions are to follow. The latest of the announcements, regarding Otis Skinner in "Kismet," was of big interest. Klaw & Erlanger produced this play which was most successful all over the country.

Mae Marsh is now at work in the Gasnier studios at Glendale, Cal., on her first Robertson-Cole-Gasnier specials.

Dustin Farnum is another star soon to commence work on Robertson-Cole specials. Stories are being selected, which will be used by Farnum for four big features each year.

In a California studio "Chic" Sale, one of the country's most popular rube comedians, is at work on his first picture which will be released by Robertson-Cole. "The Smart Alec," an Irving Cobb Saturday Evening Post story, will be the first production released.

Guide Has Section on Pictures.

The 20th edition of Julius Cahn's Theatrical Guide is now being prepared and will be more complete than ever. Three new departments will be added; a complete list of all moving picture, vaudeville and burlesque houses in the United States and Canada, together with a list of moving picture producers, studios and laboratories, making it a complete directory of all places of amusement in the United States and Canada.

Inter-Ocean Gets Rights to All Louis Tracy Productions

A CONTRACT has been signed between Gibraltar Pictures and the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation conveying the world's right to all Louis Tracy productions exclusive of the United States and Canada to that organization.

Louis Tracy Productions, Inc., is the most recently incorporated of the Gibraltar Pictures units, four of which are now in active operation. At least two more are shortly to be launched.

The production rights of Gibraltar Pictures include Mr. Tracy's most famous works, among these being "The Bartlett Mystery," "The Terms of Surrender," "His Unknown Wife," "The Stowaway," "Diana of the Moorland," "Cynthia's Chauffeur," "The Wheel of Fortune," "The Red Year," "Flower of the Gorse," "The Revelers," "The Postmaster's Daughter," "The Message," "The Captain of the Kansas" and "Carl Krier."

Tri-Star Corporation Will Feature Ethel Barrymore

JOSEPH BYRON TOTTEN and Joseph W. Smiley, two experienced motion picture directors, have formed the Tri-Star Pictures Corporation, to produce a limited number of special productions annually. The first player to be enrolled under their banner is Ethel Barrymore, who at present is at the zenith of her dramatic career in the star role of "De classe." Miss Barrymore has a most unusual following among patrons of the legitimate stage and moving pictures, in that her efforts to entertain the public in general always have had a special appeal for persons of intelligence, culture and refinement.

Totten and Smiley personally will supervise and direct all productions of the new organization.

Sydney Cohen Demands That F. I. L. M. Club Revoke Action Concerning Oral Promises

THE demand that the F. I. L. M. Club of New York City revoke its action disowning the making of verbal promises by film salesmen and insisting that exhibitors have all agreements incorporated into the contract, is made by President Sydney S. Cohen, of the New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, in a letter to President I. E. Chadwick, of the F. I. L. M. Club.

"We are writing to state as emphatically as we can that we strenuously object to this very arbitrary and un-American ruling," says Mr. Cohen. "No opportunity was given exhibitors to be represented at the meeting where this new ruling was adopted. This is an attempt to disown promises and representations made by your own representatives and the same will not be countenanced by exhibitors anywhere.

"It is the oral representation that the film salesman makes to the exhibitor who does not take the time to read over the minute printed details of your so-called contract, and most of them depend upon the earnest and solicitous representations made by the film salesman.

Contracts All Differ.

"Contracts of every exchange differ one from the other. The copy of the so-called contract which is signed by the exhibitor is never left with him at the time it is signed, and in a very large number of instances changes have been made in the contract after it has been signed by the exhibitor and has left his possession.

"If it is the purpose of your club to help in all dealings between exhibitors and exchanges, we would ask you to immediately promulgate a ruling insisting on the film representatives of every exchange belonging to your club leaving a copy of the contract for service with the exhibitor at the time that the same is signed.

"If the contract is signed and is subjected to home office approval, we would suggest that you stamp the same in the copy left with the exhibitor, incorporating the time limit within which it must be either accepted or rejected by the home office. If this latter suggestion is carried out, it will serve the purpose that perhaps your letter intended.

Suggests Conference Board.

"It may not be amiss for me to state that the exhibitor is militant in spirit at this time because of the many abuses and injustices that have been done him by some exchanges and their representatives, and we want you to know that our state organization will protect to its utmost ability the rights and interests of all exhibitors, particularly the small ones.

"We ask you to suspend this ruling, and if your F. I. L. M. Club wants to take up a suggestion made by the writer a year ago relative to the joint conference board on disputed matters, we are prepared to meet you in a spirit of fairness."

Brownell Invades the South for the Second Ten of the Adventure Scenics

ENTHUSIASTIC over the reports given him of the wide success which is being won by Adventure Scenics, H. H. Brownell, vice president of the Los Angeles company which is making this new series of out-of-door studies, has gone South to begin the shooting of the second ten of the thirty scenics which are contracted for by Robertson-Cole.

During the week he spent in New York with A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, Mr. Brownell received most flattering word of the warmth with which the scenics, many of which he personally made, are being received. Particularly he was pleased with news of the contract for the showing of Adventure Scenics in the Capitol Theatre, New York.

Up to this time Adventure Scenics have been made in the West and Northwest. Now Mr. Brownell is invading the South where he has in mind a number of picturesque locations about which he will weave interesting stories. These include "The Everglades," which he will enter and shoot from the very center of their jungle-like tangles. Mr. Brownell expects to send North the first of these new stories within a few weeks.

"While I am in the South, J. G. Sill, secretary and treasurer of our company, will continue to make pictures in the West," said Mr. Brownell. "About a dozen of the thirty pictures for which we have contracted with Robertson-Cole are now made."

"The Tempest," which is the current Adventure Scenic release, is one of the most artistic pictures which has been made in this series. Unlike most of the Adventure Scenics it has no human actors. In making it Mr. Brownell obtained the unique effect of screening Nature in all her varying moods. This is true in fact and not in phrase because the actual movements of the sea, wind, rain, snow, etc., were made to register all the moods which are known to the human mind.

Mr. Sill is expected shortly to forward some remarkable winter pictures, which he obtained in British Columbia, Montana and Wyoming, where he was all winter.

Garsson Tells Why His Two Features Prove Successful Throughout Country

THE reason why 'The Blindness of Youth' and 'A Dream of Fair Women,' the two Murray W. Garsson's feature pictures, are proving so successful for us and the independent exhibitors is because they have a well established box office value. They appeal so emphatically to the popular taste that there is no question of their meeting with approval of picture-goers everywhere."

Thus did Murray W. Garsson appraise the value of his two successes to a number of prominent Eastern exhibitors who attended a private showing of the features last week in the Offices of the Foundation Film Corporation, of which Mr. Garsson is general manager.

"There is no greater test of the success of a picture than its power to interest the observer, and he can do more to advertise it by word of mouth exploitation than by reams of publicity matter," continued Mr. Garsson. "If a picture pleases a house seating 500 or 5,000 this same audience will go home and talk it over with relatives and friends, and as a result the house will be

Films Leased Here for Showings Abroad Are Subject to Reel Tax

ALL films leased in this country, even though for exhibition abroad, are subject to the 5 per cent. tax, according to a decision which has been rendered by the commissioner of internal revenue on the request of Jack Connolly, Washington representative of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

The ruling was specifically upon the case of an exhibitor in Canada, who secured films in this country and had them shipped to him for exhibition. The association pointed out that the films were not exhibited in the United States by the lessee, but the commissioner held that the tax upon the business transacted in this country and that the actual leasing was accomplished here. Had the films been leased through a Canadian exchange there would have been no tax, but as they were leased from an American exchange, which received the rental money, the tax applied.

packed the succeeding afternoon or night. They will know its value more quickly in this manner than through the medium of the press."

"Both features appeal to youth and maturity, both have charming romance and sentiment, and are capably played," he said. "In 'The Blindness of Youth' a cast of professionals are presented, and 'A Dream of Fair Women' presents a cast of the most beautiful girls in America, selected as such by a contest held by the three fan magazines—the Motion Picture Magazine, Motion Picture Classic, and Shadowland. They are destined to be professionals in a short while."

Mr. Garsson, who is now in Chicago, says that all territory on these features for the United States, Canada and foreign countries is being rapidly sold. Booking arrangements already have been in operation for considerable of this territory, and the closing of all territory will be arranged during Mr. Garsson's Western trip. Several new booking firms are to handle the two pictures.

Austen Enthusiastic Over His Role in "Democracy"

MY part in 'Democracy—the Vision Restored' is without exception the most interesting I have ever portrayed, for it called for something more than an external presentation," declares Leslie Austen, the "Jonathan" or this thought drama produced by the Democracy Photoplay Company.

Although he is of English birth, Mr. Austen is a naturalized citizen of the United States, and during the war he was in the Twenty-Second Engineers. He was born in London in 1890, the son of G. H. Austen, novelist.

In 1906, he came to New York with the Ben Greet Players. After a short engagement he went to Pittsburgh, where he remained for three and a half years playing parts from "old men" to "leading business men." Returning to New York, he played with Ben Greet and John Killed in Shakespearean roles. In the period between 1912-1920, Mr. Austen appeared with many well-known players. He is at present playing with Florence Nash in "Cornered." In motion pictures, Leslie Austen has played with such stars as Emmy Wehlen, Nance O'Neill, Jane and Katherine Lee, Pauline Frederick, Alice Brady and Sheldon Lewis.

C. J. VerHalen.

Who has opened an advertising and publicity office in the Times Building.

VerHalen Opens Advertising Office in Times Building

C. J. VERHALEN, who recently resigned as advertising and publicity director of Robertson-Cole, after fifteen months with that organization, has opened up offices as advertising engineer in the Times Building, Room 1114. Mr. VerHalen has already taken over several state right accounts for which he had laid out the entire advertising and publicity campaigns from the press book to the twenty-four sheet.

Mr. VerHalen has established himself as an advertising counsellor, or consulting advertising engineer, giving advice and service to any organization contemplating a campaign. His venture marks a new departure in the motion picture industry. The need of just such an organization as this has long been felt in the industry, according to many of the independent producers and state right men who have consulted Mr. VerHalen. It is the belief of these men that inaccurately directed advertising has cost them many thousands of dollars. It is to remedy this condition the new company with only the highest trained specialists on its staff has been started.

J. N. Naulty Leaves for Chicago.

J. N. Naulty, general manager of the Eastern Studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has left for Chicago with John S. Robertson to inspect studio conditions there. Mr. Robertson will direct his next picture in Chicago. Arrangements for the studio, lighting and necessary equipment will be made immediately.

INTERNATIONAL FILM DENIES ACQUIRING PARAGON STUDIOS

International Film, producers of Cosmopolitan Productions, issues the following statement:

"One or two newspapers have carried stories currently to the effect that we have acquired the Paragon Studios at Fort Lee. We wish to make a denial as the facts are not true. International Film Service, Inc., has but one studio which is located at 127th Street and Second Avenue, New York, where Cosmopolitan Productions are made. This studio has just been completely outfitted and for the present fills our needs."

Robertson-Cole Says "The Fortune Hunter," by Albert Capellani, Is Its Best Picture

ROBERTSON-COLE has announced "The Fortune Teller," which is soon to be released, as the best picture to which it so far has put its name, and makes the further statement that it expects future special productions made by Albert Capellani, director of "The Fortune Teller," will maintain the standard which is set by this picture. Statistics compiled by leading exhibitors prove conclusively that productions bearing the Capellani trademark are among the best box office attractions offered. Capellani has just chosen a new story which will form the basis of the third production which he is to make for Robertson-Cole.

Capellani was born in Paris, France, and there was schooled in the days when the French led the motion picture industry, with the Pathes as pioneers. For sixteen years he was a director in the old Pathe Studios, after which he became an independent director, making productions in all parts of Europe, and further preparing himself for independent producing which he took up when he came to America some years later.

Marjorie Rambeau, who is picked by Mr. Capellani as one of the finest emotional actresses of the present age, in "The Fortune Teller" plays the part of a woman who is starved of all love and affection by her husband, who is a cold scientist. Chance brings across her path a man who forces his love upon her, whereupon her own husband gets a divorce and the custody of the child. The great struggle of the woman when years later she discovers that her boy is still alive and much in need of the mother's guidance, which she can give only surreptitiously, is one of the picture's strong situations.

Will Devote Time to Heart Interest Plays.

"I am satisfied," said Mr. Capellani in a recent talk, "that the pictures which really live are those which are simple in plot, but deep in their understanding of the human heart. Those which have brought me the greatest satisfaction, both from the standpoint of personal pleasure and of remuneration have been of this sort.

"So it is with all art which lives. One finds little of the sensational, the cheaply mysterious, and the 'quick action,' attained at the cost of everything else, in the productions which live, and which win the widest success when first produced. That is the reason why I am determined that I shall devote my career to the production of simple 'heart interest' plays for the screen."

Mr. Capellani is now engaged in making his second Robertson-Cole production. It will take several months to complete, for the reason that great care and deliberation will enter into the making of each of these productions. At present Mr. Capellani is working in the East.

Pathe Amplifies Plans for Features and Promises a New Woman Star Soon

THE plans of Pathe Exchange, Inc., for features and big specials have been amplified so that within a short time an announcement will be made of the acquisition of some pretentious productions and the listing of a popular beauty of the screen. Pathe's feature business has grown to such an extent that ambitious plans are making to meet future development for such time to come.

Blanche Sweet, it is promised, will be seen in productions even greater than her previous successes on the Pathe program. The coming production of "Sherry," Edgar Lewis' second special, is every bit as strong a feature as "Other Men's Shoes," it is said. J. Stuart Blackton characterizes his coming release, "The Blood Barrier," as a "master melodramatic achievement." Included also in the announcement are "Rio Grande," an Edwin Carewe production adapted from Augustus Thomas' stage play; Frank Keenan in "Dollar for Dollar" and Max Linder in "The Little Cafe," an adaptation from Klaw & Erlanger's theatrical success of the same name.

Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager, laughed when his attention was brought to a rumor that his organization contemplated dispensing with features.

"The very idea of it is absurd," he said, "and especially at the time when our feature business has reached such unusual proportions and is still growing while thousands of exhibitors look to Pathe as the only really independent distributing organization. Our feature business has passed all expectations and our plans of expansion consider only the best possible product with stars whose names are potent and directors whose names are a guaranty of skilled making. Upon what has already been achieved, I think I am safe in predicting that the coming year will be marked by a succession of brilliant feature successes."

Nebraska Business and Theatrical Men Unite to Oppose Non-Partisan League

NEBRASKA amusement interests have fired an opening gun in their battle against oppressive legislation which, according to a letter just sent out to all motion picture exhibitors asking their assistance, "is positively known to be threatening the entire theatrical interests of Nebraska." The exhibitors have united in the organization of the Nebraska Amusement League, with its State Protective Association.

Business in general in Nebraska is uniting with the film men. The retail merchants' associations, grain and livestock dealers and other interests have invited the theatre interests to co-operate with them.

One of the aims of this protective combination is to fight the Non-Partisan League, it is said, and prevent governmental oppression, higher taxation and other oppressive restrictions.

The executive committee for the showmen, including Harry Goldberg, of the Sun Theatre, pictures, Omaha, chairman; W. D. Ledoux, of the vaudeville and picture theatre, Empress, Omaha, treasurer; E. L. Johnson, of the Gayety, burlesque; H. M. Thomas, of the Rialto, pictures, and Sam MacIntyre, of the Omaha Film Board of Trade, has just sent out a letter to Nebraska exhibitors urging them to become members.

Gove Becomes Realart's Assistant General Manager; Adler Associate Publicity Head

JOHAN S. WOODY, general manager of Realart Pictures Corporation, has announced the promotion of Jay A. Gove to the new created position of assistant general manager. Mr. Gove's work in connection with Realart advertising has attracted favorable attention, but his promotion also takes into consideration the assistance he has given in the development of the company's sales campaigns.

At the same time Bert Adler is promoted by John Pond Fritts, director of publicity and advertising, to the post of associate director, succeeding Mr. Gove and merging the duties of that office with those of exploitation manager, which he has successfully handled for the company since September.

Advertisements Were Distinctive.

"Mr. Gove's work in handling the advertising of Realart is well known in the trade," says Mr. Woody. "This advertising has had unusual distinction, combining artistry with effective sales appeal. The part he has played in promoting Realart sales campaigns has perhaps not been given as wide recognition.

"But it was largely as a result of these campaigns that I discovered in Mr. Gove the qualities essential to the man handling the post of assistant general manager. I am sure his promotion will be welcome news for his many friends in the trade in all parts of the country."

Several years ago, Mr. Gove entered the employ of the Fox Film Corporation publicity department, later becoming director of publicity and advertising. He joined Realart shortly after its organization as associate of Mr. Fritts in the direction of publicity and advertising. He has given particular attention to advertising and to assisting the general manager and general sales manager in carrying on sales campaigns.

Five Years With Thanouser.

Mr. Adler has been connected with the Realart publicity department almost since the company's inception and is a man of wide motion picture experience and acquaintance. He was born in Brooklyn and educated in New York City schools. His early career was spent in the publishing business and his first experience in the motion picture field was as publicity manager of the old Thanouser organization and as assistant to Edwin Thanouser.

Here he spent five years, handling along with his publicity duties the Thanouser "big" productions and the introductory campaign on the Williamson submarine pictures. He also wrote the first advertising for the old Mutual Film Corporation and looked after the Eastern business end of their Apollo, Princess and Majestic comedy brands. He acted for some time as general representative of the late C. J. Hite, of Thanouser and Mutual, finally leaving New Rochelle to become editor of Universal. Later he became manager of the Coytesville studio and assistant manager of the Universal Heights studio.

After an association with Herbert Blache as his general assistant at the producer's Fort Lee, N. J., studio, Mr. Adler started free lancing with considerable success.

who voluntarily give their services free. They are of different creeds and of different interests, business and social. Therefore they form a cosmopolitan mind in reviewing a picture, and collectively should know what is best suited to the public.

Censors Must Insure Jobs.

"Legalized censors receive salaries, and the fact that they receive salaries makes it necessary for them to find something in each film to be taken out, in order to prove that they themselves are necessary as well as to insure their salaries. The personal prejudices of the censors must be satisfied, consequently the film is made to suit a single narrow mind instead of the millions of picture patrons.

"The greatest menace legalized censorship holds for the public is the curtailing of its free thought. The progress of our wonderful country has been so rapid because of the independence of each and every individual. Legalized censorship would take that independence away, depriving the public of the right to judge for itself. Its advocates seem to think that, taken collectively, the public is not fit to judge.

Bad Must Contrast With Good.

"To make the moral of a picture story clear it is often necessary to depict a phase of immorality. For instance, in 'The Miracle Men,' it was necessary to show the life lived by the people in the slums before they met the miracle man."

DOUGLAS McLEAN'S DAD WILL SHOW MOVIES IN HIS CHURCH

REGULAR moving picture shows as a supplement to the religious services are to be run in Washington, D. C., by the Rev. C. C. McLean, pastor of the Lincoln Road M. E. Church, father of Douglas McLean, the screen star. Two shows have already been given with such success that the films are to become a regular feature of the church's activities.

While Dr. McLean maintains a strict censorship over the films shown, there is no attempt to keep them confined to churchly lines, the last program consisting of two O. Henry films, a Sidney Drew comedy, a nature study and a Mutt and Jeff animated cartoon. Also, Dr. McLean says, Mack Sennett comedies will be among the films to be shown in the near future.

Playhouse Shelves Many Films to Show Second Clara Kimball Young Production

EQUITY PICTURES announces the opening of Clara Kimball Young in "The Forbidden Woman" at the Playhouse Theatre, Chicago, beginning Sunday, March 28, for a three weeks' run as the minimum stay at that house. Coincident with the booking of this picture in Chicago Equity has added another feather in its policy cap of few but great productions, for it has the distinction of being the choice out of fourteen feature productions, it announces.

When Manager Smith, of the Playhouse Theatre, considered the best and quickest means of filling his managerial exchequer for that week he found himself confronting the consideration of fourteen super-productions ranging throughout the entire field of comedy, romance, drama and melodramatic art. After screening all these features, he selected "The Forbidden Woman."

An unusual publicity and exploitation campaign will be given the picture under the personal supervision of Harry L. Reichenbach, Equity's vice-president, who has left for Chicago. As Mr. Reichenbach conducted the entire exploitation of "The Forbidden Woman" for its run at the Capitol Theatre in New York, for which he carried on a blind campaign in the New York daily papers for four weeks prior to the opening, it is not unlikely that similar methods will be used by him in Chicago.

It is with no small degree of interest that Equity enters on the run of "The Forbidden Woman" at the Playhouse following so shortly the showing of "Eyes of Youth" in that theatre. "Eyes of Youth" being the first of the Equity releases of the Clara Kimball Young pictures to be shown in Chicago, received initial attention from Equity in exploitation and publicity aids, and the story of "Eyes of Youth" breaking all records in Chicago has already been broadly published.

Mae Murray's Address Wins Clubwomen as Opponents of Legalized Censorship

AS a guest of the Woman's City Club, Mae Murray, Paramount-Artcraft star, spoke on censorship to the members of that organization at the Hotel McAlpin recently. About 200 women were present and at the close of Miss Murray's address it was voted to join actively in the fight against legalized censorship of the motion picture. As the club is closely affiliated with other women's organizations, having a total membership of approximately 4,000, it is evident that Miss Murray's talk will have a far-reaching effect in combating censorship.

Miss Murray said, in part:

"Should I step on anyone's toes, please forgive me. I do not mean to be personal, but I love this industry of which I am a very small part and realize that legalized censorship is a menace.

"The difference between the National Board of Review and legalized censors is briefly as follows: The National Board of Review is composed of men and women

Consensus of Trade Press Reviews

Here are extracts from available reviews printed in the five motion picture trade papers. It is the aim to present one sentence that will reflect the spirit of the writer's opinion. The papers are indicated as follows: Moving Picture World (M. P. W.); Motion Picture News (N.); Exhibitor's Trade Review (T. R.); Wid's (W.); Exhibitors' Herald (E. H.).

On With the Dance

(Mae Murray and David Powell—Paramount)

M. P. W.—The theme is not a big one, but the George Fitzmaurice production of the scenario by Ouida Bergere adds vastly to the picture's importance and brings out all of the entertaining qualities of the story.

N.—An impressive story well put together and logically developed is the outstanding feature of the production.

T. R.—The story develops naturally. The play on the whole is well cast. The interiors are for the most part magnificent.

W.—Extravagant and spicy; a sure winner in cosmopolitan houses.

E. H.—Is quite too big a picture for the usual review.

Smoldering Embers

(Frank Keenan—Pathe)

M. P. W.—The picture is wonderfully pleasing and artistic in development.

N.—The subject, as is natural with Keenan's offerings, is a character study, only this time it is an exceptionally simple one.

T. R.—Makes an appeal that assures it of success.

W.—The production averages well throughout.

E. H.—The story is one that should carry an appeal to both young and old.

The Shark

(George Walsh—Fox)

M. P. W.—Is strong in characterization and continuity. It contains a good deal of sheer brutality, but convinces by its realism.

N.—A vivid melodrama that carries a two-fisted punch.

T. R.—The production is above reproach if one can condone the theme.

W.—Rapid action sea story with any number of genuine thrills.

E. H.—Provides George Walsh with every opportunity to display his acting and athletic ability to best advantage.

Marked Men

(Harry Carey—Universal)

M. P. W.—Wonderful atmosphere and profound pathos. . . . It is a tale filled with sublime moments.

N.—This is a mighty good picture.

T. R.—As pretty a romance as any one could desire.

The Adventurer

(William Farnum—Fox)

M. P. W.—One of the best romantic dramas yet produced.

N.—Plenty of color in this costume play.

T. R.—A swashbuckling melodrama of early Spanish days. Gives William Farnum a splendid chance to indulge in all the little bravados and romanticisms which delight his fancy.

W.—It's a costume picture, but it is there with the popular wallop.

The Capitol

(Leah Baird—W. W. Hodkinson)

M. P. W.—Contains a fairly interesting situation, which has not met with the best treatment in its transition to the screen.

N.—Intrigue and politics burden this picture. Leah Baird assumes the burden of a dual role with admirable adaptability.

T. R.—Is rather meagre entertainment.

E. H.—An expert picturization of Augustus Thomas' stage play. . . . The picture will bear out promises made for it.

The Fear Market

(Alice Brady—Realart)

M. P. W.—Alice Brady in well acted society play.

N.—It is well acted and for that reason will make many friends. Its settings are gorgeous.

T. R.—Offers a story with a consistent degree of suspense, an abundance of action and a character exposition on the part of Alice Brady that makes of it an exceptional attraction for the exhibitor.

E. H.—Is sumptuously staged, well written and capably enacted society drama.

Beckoning Roads

(Bessie Barriscale—Robertson-Cole)

M. P. W.—Story of moderate strength, Bessie Barriscale covers herself with glory in the more dramatic moments of the play.

N.—A fair quota of dramatic situations. Bessie Barriscale's acting makes it rise above the average program subject.

T. R.—An unimportant bit of melodrama with Bessie Barriscale beginning as a child and finishing as a young woman.

W.—An average feature, with a fine performance by the star.

E. H.—An altogether satisfactory evening's entertainment.

The Birth of a Soul

(Harry T. Morey—Vitagraph)

M. P. W.—Has sufficient heart interest to hold the average spectator.

N.—May be classified as a mediocre sample of its kind. Has atmosphere and picturesque backgrounds.

T. R.—Interesting as a whole.

W.—Business of going all wrong on a good idea.

The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come

(Jack Pickford—Goldwyn)

M. P. W.—Vividly realistic. An attractive illustration of a novel by John Fox, Jr.

N.—Civil war period popular novel given fine production.

T. R.—It provides enjoyable entertainment. The scenic effects are admirable.

E. H.—Serves as an ideal introduction for Jack Pickford to the Goldwyn schedule. It should satisfy entirely.

In Search of a Sinner

(Constance Talmadge—First National)

M. P. W.—Is a delightful comedy of human nature.

N.—Highly entertaining comedy.

T. R.—An exceptionally attractive, sure-fire amusement hit.

W.—Amusing complications and star make this satisfy.

The Dangerous Talent

(Margarita Fisher—American)

M. P. W.—The average spectator will like it.

N.—A crook play with a good story and love interest.

T. R.—The story is strong in suspense, offers plenty of quick action, perfect continuity and a cleverly devised and satisfactory climax.

W.—Crook play treated with good taste, except in climax sequence.

Tarnished Reputations

(Dolores Cassinelli—Pathe)

M. P. W.—A very entertaining subject is this five-reel Pathe release, by Leonore Barrett, entitled "Tarnished Reputations," despite some rather abrupt transitions and some melodrama that approaches burlesque.

N.—Dolores Cassinelli burdened with shop-worn story.

T. R.—Five reels of anguish.

W.—Stereotyped plot given commonplace production.

E. H.—An interesting theme was obtained for the production, and the screen version holds interest throughout.

His House in Order

(Elsie Ferguson—Paramount-Artcraft)

M. P. W.—An artful frame-work for Elsie Ferguson, and by very reason of the enforced somberness of its scenes, it serves to enhance her scintillating beauty.

N.—Should be an acceptable picture wherever a high class attraction is ever played with success.

T. R.—As a photoplay it would be termed very mediocre were it not for Elsie Ferguson.

W.—Average program offering, with star and title in its favor.

E. H.—A good story, well directed and produced; it should satisfy generally.

Black Is White

(Dorothy Dalton—Paramount-Artcraft)

M. P. W.—The story is replete with tense, emotional scenes, quite successfully staged and well timed.

N.—Is based on a highly improbable theme and possesses an air of heaviness that cannot be denied.

T. R.—Does not appeal with the strength of some other Dorothy Dalton features.

W.—Story as reasonable as an attempt to prove that "Black Is White."

E. H.—Not a pleasing story, but has a unique climax, which should appeal strongly to people who like the heavier form of screen entertainment.

Six Best Cellars

(Bryant Washburn—Paramount)

M. P. W.—An amusing farce that will make many throats thirsty.

N.—Unquestionably the star's best expression since "Skinner's Dress Suit," and the role of the bond broker who defies prohibition fits him to a dot.

T. R.—Will make delightful entertainment for any audience that appreciates keen comedy.

E. H.—Ranks with the best of the Washburn pictures and gives an excellent opportunity for novel exploitation.

The Stolen Kiss

(Constance Binney—Realart)

M. P. W.—Has weak plot and shows hurried production. Miss Binney's acting is on a par with her fine work in "Erstwhile Susan."

N.—Picture of sickly sentiment and obvious coincidences.

T. R.—It might prove draggy and inconsequential were it not that Constance Binney is sufficiently delightful to make up for plot shortage and no continuity.

W.—Very episodic story, relying too heavily on coincidence.

The Street Called Straight

(Milton Sills and Naomi Childers—Goldwyn)

M. P. W.—While a pleasing feature, is in no way unusual.

N.—Can be recommended for nearly every class of theatre, both from box office and entertainment point of view.

T. R.—Not good screen material.

W.—This story would have registered better on a talking machine.

Deadline at Eleven

(Corinne Griffith—Vitagraph)

M. P. W.—Affords an animated and consistent view of the workings of a newspaper office.

N.—Story of a girl reporter is fairly interesting.

T. R.—Ranks as a pleasing program attraction and should prove a valuable box office asset.

W.—Melodrama of newspaper life makes average program feature.

Sidelights and Reflections

CATCHING Dorothy Gish in "Mary Ellen Comes to Town" brings the pleasant surprise that this bob-haired young person has a well-developed emotional strain that she keeps under perfect artistic control. Her gift for characterization is another of her good points. We are all familiar with the funny little mannerisms of her farce-comedy methods and the amusing way she gesticulates with her feet. In her latest release Miss Dorothy plays a small town girl after the fashion of Charlie Ray as a country boy—the sort that come to the city and get to be Supreme Court judges, financial leaders and editors of influential newspapers.

Just as young Mr. Ray avoids any suggestion of the grotesque, and depicts thoroughly human, if bashful, heroes, little Miss Gish makes Mary Ellen the type of simple village maiden that comes to the big town and turns out the reverse of a failure, by supplying her with sound sense and quick intuition. Turning her back resolutely on the easily won laugh that is the reward of exaggerated awkwardness, the younger of the Gish girls reveals a personality in Mary Ellen that makes belief in her adventures among the dangers of Broadway's theatrical life never a matter of doubt.

Not a week passes but we read in some magazine or illustrated Sunday supplement that little Miss This, That or the Other has taken advantage of an unexpected opportunity and stepped from the ranks of the chorus or from a minor role into a leading position as actress or dancer. And we generally find that the fortunate young woman was born and grew up in some quiet little burg a thousand miles or more from Broadway. Mary Ellen is another of 'em. When she is fired with an ambition to become an actress and the manager of a New York cabaret decides to put her on you feel, in spite of her inexperience, she is going to make good. Miss Dorothy Gish sees to that!

She just lends the little country girl her own personality, and you become fond of her and want to see her succeed from the start. She wins her audience in the same way the first time she steps out into the clear space among the tables and starts to sing. Small wonder that the next time you see Mary Ellen she is leading a number and no longer insists upon wearing her flannel chest protector when she slips on a low neck gown.

If you happen to hear anyone remark that no little country girl could advance so rapidly as that, just reply: "Oh, yes, she could!—if she happened to be as clever as Dorothy Gish."

I started off by referring to Miss Dorothy's fine brand of emotional ability, and then jumped to her feet. There are scenes in "Mary Ellen Comes to Town" that call for straight emotional work on the part of the star. They get it in full measure. Her gesticulating feet never get into the picture. Mary Ellen is merely a natural little small town body, quite as likeable and every bit as humorous as the preceding heroines in the Gish gallery of girls in their teens.

"Shore Acres"

Metro Production, with Alice Lake, Transforms Old Stage Favorite to a Splendid Screen Spectacle.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE outstanding feature of Metro's version of "Shore Acres" transforms much of the famous stage play of that name. Much of the homely life that once touched a universal chord is subordinated to new thrills of wonderment. The storm scene is no mere melodramatic situation artificially suggested. It becomes a real part and a prominent factor of the production. It breathes a new and artistic spirit of life into the old drama. More than that, it is probably the most intense and vivid portrayal of its kind ever shown on the screen. This thrilling visualization is in harmony with the action and reaction between brothers Martin and Nat Berry in the lighthouse, yet it stands alone in the matter of treatment. Its design and execution are concerned with picturesque effects for their own sake, quite as well as being adjuncts to the play. This new screencraft has splendidly done what new stagecraft has long been trying to accomplish.

With practically all the characterizations subordinated to imposing picture effects, and those of the Berry brothers made dominant, Alice Lake, as Helen Berry, has very limited opportunity. She utilizes it all with the skill of a true artist, her flashes of emotion shining like the beacon light because of the way she puts her heart into her work. The cast is generally good, in particular Frank Brownlee as Martin and Edward Connelly as Uncle Nat. Some of the old mood of the stage play is preserved, enough for contrast, but the highest realism is that of storm grandeur rather than of homely quietude. The Metro product is not for tender memories of old timers, but stands to win on its own intrinsic merits, and this it will surely do.

The Story.

The old Berry farm of Shore Acres is coveted by banker Josiah Blake. He also has an eye on pretty Helen Berry, loved by his clerk, Sam Warren. The banker induces Martin Berry, father of the girl, to speculate in oil, loaning him the money for that purpose and taking a mortgage on the farm. He discharges Warren for breaking a pane of glass in an office window. In order to lower Warren in the eyes of Helen the banker intimates that the clerk is dishonest. Martin Berry learns that he has lost in the oil deal at a time when his wife is preparing a little party to celebrate their twenty-fifth anniversary. At the party Blake openly accuses Warren of stealing. Warren has made arrangements to leave that night on the ship of Captain Ben. He is bravely defended by Helen Berry, and he is cleared by the confession of a mischievous boy. Helen is deeply grieved, however, and decides to leave home. Her uncle Nat, who keeps the lighthouse, arranges matters, giving up his savings to Warren and aiding Helen to escape. They are married aboard ship by Captain Ben.

Martin Berry suspects that his brother Nat had a hand in the elopement. There is a scene of high feeling between the two brothers. Martin has sacrificed the old farm; he knows he has done wrong at every step, but the bitterness he should feel against himself is turned on his brother. When the lantern of the lighthouse goes out, endangering those aboard the vessel of Captain Ben, Martin insists that it shall stay dark. He wants the vessel to go down with all on board because of the eloping couple.

On board the vessel there is anxiety. There is a rising storm as the boat puts to sea. They are to be guided by the lighthouse to keep them off a dangerous reef. The storm increases in fury, sweeping the decks with torrents of water. There is no sign of the lighthouse. Rockets are fired in vain. The vessel is wrecked on the reef, and all hands are called to man the boats. A great wave sweeps Warren and Helen overboard.

Next morning it is found that all are saved except the young couple. The two brothers search the shore. They find Warren and Helen clinging to each other and to some wreckage. They are carried to the old home. Martin sees the error of his ways. The banker is accused of dishonest dealing. Uncle Nat produces a claim for back pensions to relieve financial distress, and all ends happily for the dwellers of the old Berry farm of Shore Acres.

"Nurse Marjorie"

Israel Zangwill Story Adapted to Film By Realart Features Mary Miles Minter.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE clean, wholesome quality of the Realart production, "Nurse Marjorie," cannot be denied. Its star, Mary Miles Minter, as pretty as ever, is still the prey of a desire on the part of both director and scenarist to play up her winning personality, without sufficient concern for the dramatic values of the story.

The picture has a good opening, presenting an amusing group of English and Irish types, whose relationship provides a comic situation. Miss Minter's work is attractive by force of her beauty and youth; but she still adheres to mannerisms which are not a mark of professional proficiency. The picture is much at fault in construction, and is padded with unimportant details, which detract from the strength of the production. The scenes in the fish emporium are worked hard for comedy effects, some of which get over individually. Whether or not it is in accordance with Israel Zangwill's intention the matching of a member of the House of Commons with the supposed daughter of fish dealer, as presented in the unsavory fish kitchen of the picture, fails to be convincing.

The scenes in the lame boy's room in the nurse's home, are sure to please, and Frankie Lee is a clever little actor. On the other hand one grows out of patience with superficial attempts at comedy in the room of the "blind man," otherwise John Danbury who has had an operation to eliminate a squint. The production would be improved by cutting. Lydia Yeamans Titus, Arthur Hoyt and Frank Leigh do conspicuously good work.

The Story.

In the story of "Nurse Marjorie," the Lady Marjorie Donegal is the cause of much concern to her relations. With her democratic ideas she threatens the family dignity. When she decides to become a professional nurse, the last straw is added to the burden of disgrace. Her father, Lord Donegal, stands by her and enjoys the chagrin which Marjorie causes the remainder of the family.

It so happens that to John Danbury, "the people's John," as he is called and a labor representative in the House of Commons, undergoes an operation for squint, in the nurse's home. At the time of the operation he is in charge of a nurse of unprepossessing appearance, and is not apprised of the fact that Marjorie has been assigned to his case. On removing the bandages from his eyes he immediately falls in love with the nurse he has been treating so rudely, and he becomes desperately jealous of the occupant of room nineteen, not knowing that the object of his jealousy is a lame child.

On being forced to admit recovery, he proposes to Marjorie, and is rejected on the grounds that he is above her in station. She pretends to be the daughter of her old nurse, who now keeps a fish emporium. To test his love Marjorie has him call on her there, where she is found frying fish. Danbury sticks to his determination to marry Marjorie, in spite of unsavory surroundings, and the common type of her supposed relatives. Finally the secret of Marjorie's birth is unfolded, and after slight impediments in the course of true love, she promises to marry him.

"The Flaming Clue"

Vitagraph Presents Harry Morey in a Thrilling Story of Detective Against Master Counterfeiters.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

VITAGRAPH'S latest release, "The Flaming Clue," is good melodrama of the detective type, inasmuch as it demonstrates the persistency of chance in the serious concerns of life. It portrays the inevitable influence of accident upon character. It is better melodrama in that it puts one bright mind against another, and it has the element of suspense in a high degree. There is a running fire of incident along a straight line of action.

Harry Morey and his support are entirely satisfactory, but they are comparatively unimportant where interest in adventure is much stronger than in character. "The Flaming Clue" is very good detective melodrama, if one may judge from its reception at the Washington Theatre.

The Story.

Length, Five Reels.

"The Flaming Clue" is found by Ralph Cornell, a United States Secret Service man engaged in rounding up an expert gang of counterfeiters. It is an old note once made by a counterfeiter named Coddington. Cornell arranges to board at the old Coddington house, now occupied by Mrs. Quail and her daughter, Betty. His suspicions are directed to Aaron Prine, owner of the nearby lime kiln, and in love with Betty. It now becomes a duel of wits between the detective and the master mind of the counterfeiters.

The detective is provided with ingenious mechanical devices which greatly facilitate his work. They are a pocket periscope, a subterranean, a sound magnifying disc; even an automatic typewriter to work in his absence from a room, giving the impression he is there. Prine suspects that Cornell is a detective and sets a trap to get his finger prints; but the detective throws him off the scent by using false skin on his hand. Prine also tries to rouse sentiment against Cornell by a cleverly arranged plot to convict him of murder.

One plot after another is spoiled by the detective until he finds his way to the subterranean den of the counterfeiters. He informs his assistants and prepares for the round-up. Betty has stumbled upon an entrance to the den and is caught by the counterfeiters. Cornell goes to her rescue, but both are nearly overpowered, when his men arrive in the nick of time. The crooks are arrested. Betty and the detective are engaged.

"Youthful Folly"

Selznick Stars Olive Thomas in Her Own Story of Adolescence—Its Loves, Its Tragedies.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

"YOUTHFUL FOLLY," a Selznick picture, is entertaining because Olive Thomas makes it so. Her beauty and sensitive acting make her a welcome screen figure in whatever role she assumes, and her admirers will not be disappointed in this, unless they prefer a stronger story, one conceived and directed with more originality. Once more the heroine is a naive, artless, child-woman, much misunderstood by two elderly aunts, who supervise her marriage to one whose sophistication and "outside" interests make him an impossible companion. There is another woman, and another man who almost spoil things, but who agreeably disappear at the close, which consists of a he-fell-in-love-with-his-wife scene.

The close-ups of Olive Thomas and the far-offs of exceptionally beautiful scenes of nature are particularly appealing, and reveal a superior quality of photography. The supporting cast has been given but scant opportunity for acting, and scarcely any at all for winning sympathy. Interest starts, continues and ends in the star. Hugh Huntley, as her youthful companion of different fun-excursions has a boyish, likable personality; Helen Gill, as a cross between friend and foe does credit to her director and modiste; and a telling bit of comedy is achieved by Pauline Dempsey, the girl's genial mammy.

"Youthful Folly" is an inadequate title for the picture, which has a vein of seriousness that predominates over any other element. The sub-titles have a tendency to over-explain situations.

The Story.

Nancy Sherwin lives a monotonous life with her two unloving aunts on a southern plantation. Her cousin, Lola Ainsley, suddenly drops in on her from New York and then things begin to happen in Nancy's life. Lola, unknown to her unsophisticated cousin, has left her home and husband just in time to avoid a scandal which was brewing, and which linked her name with that of David Montgomery, with whom she is infatuated.

David follows Lola, and Nancy becomes his ardent worshipper. Lola believes that if David should marry Nancy, it would solve her own dilemma and distract public attention from herself. Nancy's aunts, anxious to get rid of the girl, consent, and so a marriage for the convenience of everyone except the bride is arranged. Nancy, however, believes that David loves her. But her extreme youthfulness and unworldliness lead to some social awkwardness and result in a seeming incompatibility between husband and wife.

Then Jimsy Blake, David's young ward, comes upon the scene and a close comradeship springs up between Nancy and him. Gradually David, who is still carrying on a flirtation with Lola, realizes that he has failed to win his wife's companionship and he begins to regret his mistakes. Hereupon Lola, afraid that she is about to lose David, whispers in Nancy's ear that David did not marry her for love—that it was all a joke. Nancy is hurt beyond words and decides to leave.

Lola's husband, infuriated by jealousy, comes to David's house prepared to shoot him. Nancy sees him just in time and rushes before her husband, and is seriously wounded. During her period of convalescence she confesses to Jimsy that she has always loved David, but doubts his love for her. David soon alleviates her doubts and decides to begin all over again.

"The Idol Dancer"

First National Attraction Produced by Griffith and Starring Clarine Seymour.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

ON the picturesque background of a romantic island Griffith has visualized "The Idol Dancer," a story of primitive emotions brought under restraint by spiritual influences. The picture is released by First National. There are entrancing vistas of coconut palms, tropical vegetation and dreamy seas, such as would cause a sentimental tourist to tarry. In an atmosphere of opulent beauty many of the comedies and tragedies of primitive life are brought into relation with the civilizing effects of religious teaching. Flashes of humor are show in the veneer of spurious civilization, such as the substitution of hideous calico wrappers for the picturesque native dress. There are elements of drama in the machinations of an unscrupulous and cruel adventurer. But the greatest interest aroused is largely personal. Much of it is attached to the charm and grace of Clarine Seymour, the bright young star.

Miss Seymour is of the new-woman type in graceful strength of form and movement. This does not mean that she is not spiritual. Her face lights up constantly with feminine thought and feeling, but her eyes do most of the talking. They are filled with wondering interest; they dilate with fear; they become limpid with provoking indolence and languor, all in expressive response to emotional interpretation. Interest centers on her throughout the story.

Richard Barthelmess has a limited role, that of a dull wastrel barely aware of emotions until his sensibilities are quickened. He is at his best when assailed by the remorse of conscience. As shown at the Strand "The Idol Dancer" is a picturesque and fanciful story of a girl's spiritual regeneration, with some melodrama added for high suspense.

The Story.

On Romance Island, in the tropical seas, the white idol dancer is known to her adopted father as "Mary," but there is mixed in her blood many a wild strain. Mary worships a wooden god, dances before it with all the strength and grace of her splendid youth, and she persists in wearing the fanciful costume of the natives, scorning the calico wrapper offered her by the Reverend Peter—it smells of the mission. First attack on her heart is that of a shiftless beachcomber, Dan McGuire, a dull and sotted youth of natural beauty.

Then comes Walter Kincaid to visit the mission in search of health. He succumbs to Mary's plainly revealed charms of person, his feeble pulse warmed by the mere sight of her. She plays sullen Dan against sickly Walter with a skill that is born rather than acquired. The sudden collapse of Walter brings both Mary and Dan to his bedside. His exquisite resignation and Christian spirit deeply affects the two young heretics. The beautiful young idol dancer throws her wooden god into the sea. Walter consigns his curse to the same watery grave, rises in spirit to a regeneration and becomes a man.

He is away from the settlement with the natives fishing when he hears the sullen boom of a great wooden drum warning of danger. A band of miscreants are burning the houses and carrying off the women. He returns and rescues them only to find Walter in the last throes of death from his exertions in beating the giant drum during the attack. Walter's death sanctifies the love between Dan and the Idol Dancer, and they are united in a Christian marriage.

"A Child for Sale"

Six-Part Graphic Film Production Tells Successful Heart Interest Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

PATRONS of the family theatre will be certain to enjoy this six-reel subject, "A Child for Sale," written and produced by Ivan Abramson. That classification may be easily stretched to include occasional "highbrow" theatres, if there are such things, for it is really surprising how many people are moved and affected by simple, direct heart-interest stories such as this when they are successful.

The sentiment in this story is good. It has an extravagant plot, and threatens more than once to break over into crude melodrama, but never quite does so. The result is that it keeps a strong grip on the feelings of the spectator. The producer has made some rather abrupt changes of scene in places, but he has kept on the whole a firm control of an unusual plot. He has rounded up the closing situations with strong dramatic effect.

The juvenile interest is very pronounced in this subject. Bobby Connelly and Ruth Sullivan play the children's roles well. The adult cast is also pleasing. Creighton Hale portrays skilfully the desperate, poverty-stricken young artist, who determines to sell one of his children in order to benefit both of them. Gladys Leslie, Julia Swayne Gordon and Anna Lehr have the leading feminine roles.

Cast.

Length, Six Reels.

The Story.

Charles Stoddard, in "A Child for Sale," is a struggling young artist, with a sick wife and two children. The wife dies and owing to a rent increase and high prices generally, he determines to dispose of one of the children to respectable people for a price, applying the money so received to the education of the other. He sells his daughter, Sylvia, to a rich widow for a thousand dollars, but quickly repents of the bargain as his son Walter cries for his sister. Stoddard goes to the widow and procures Sylvia, returning the money.

The son, Walter, decides to play a harmonica on the street in order to earn money for the family support. He is arrested for this and taken to a Boys' Protectors. Here he is questioned by the founder, Mr. Harrison, who turns out to be the rent profiteer who has been raising prices on Stoddard and other tenants.

Further connection between Stoddard and the Harrison families is brought about by the illness of Sylvia. She is attended by Dr. Gardner, Harrison's son-in-law. The doctor takes an interest in Stoddard's children and later Mrs. Harrison and her daughter do much for them. Through a surprising chain of circumstances it develops that Stoddard himself is the son of Mrs. Harrison by a previous marriage. After many altercations and misunderstandings the families are happily united.

"Molly and I"

Five-Reel Fox Production Presents Shirley Mason in Amusing Subject of Light Caliber.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

IN this five-reel Fox production, adapted from a story by Frank R. Adams, Shirley Mason is cast in a congenial role. She plays the part of a pretty young girl in a boarding house, who falls in love with a partially blind author. The latter is in a despondent mood and is about to kill himself, when the girl pleads with him to marry her, agreeing to give up half of her inheritance of ten thousand dollars, which comes to her with that happy event. The author agrees, as the five thousand he thus obtains will enable him to go to Italy and consult a famous oculist, who will be able to restore his vision.

The opening of this little romance piques the interest mightily. It drags considerably in the third reel, because of the slight plot interest, but later picks up again and reaches a satisfying climax. The humorous treatment is of varying strength. Some of the sub-titles get over with a laugh, but others rather miss fire. The "bull" head breaks the illusion and would no doubt go better in a straight comic.

Shirley Mason is a bright and animated performer, and though some of the business accorded her in this number is trivial, she holds the interest well. The dumb-waiter scene at the close is very good. There is an amusing array of boarding house types in the opening reel.

"The Girl in Number 29"

Universal Presents Sprightly Little Mystery Yarn from Novel by Elizabeth Jordan.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

NOT a comedy-drama, but a dramatic comedy, is the best way of describing this Universal production, "The Girl in Number 29," which, owing to skilful editing, runs a short five reels. There is a liberal dash of comedy at the beginning, followed by a series of tense dramatic incidents, with a return to comedy at the close. The concoction as a whole is one that will mystify and please an audience, and contains some original situations.

Frank Mayo, as the hero, Laurie Devon, carries the burden of the plot. He makes a good appearance, as usual, and gives a fine account of himself in the numerous fighting scenes. Into these latter, as will be remembered by those who saw him in "The Brute Breaker," he throws a great deal of realism; his battered adversaries at the close of this number did not have to make up greatly for their final appearance. Claire Anderson, as the girl of mystery, carries off her role very creditably, and it is one that would have suffered with less adequate treatment.

The opening scenes are amusing, picturing the agitated state of two young authors during the premiere of their first play. There is an adroit shift to the more serious business of the piece and the mystery is well protected up to the proper time for the denouement. The reflection of the girl in the mirror is a good bit of business.

The Story.

Laurie Devon, in "The Girl in Number 29," is a young playwright who has just turned out a successful drama, in collaboration with his friend, Rodney Bangs. After the success of his venture Laurie, much to the disgust of all who know him, settles down to an idle life. They make every effort to get him to work again, but he refuses.

One evening, glancing into his mirror, Laurie sees the reflection of a beautiful young girl, leaning from an open window in a nearby apartment. He calls the attention of Rodney to this vision and it seems more wonderful to them because it is the result of the double reflection of two mirrors, and her window is really around the corner. Later Laurie is greatly excited to see the girl raise a revolver to her head with the intention of killing herself.

He dashes out of his own apartment house and makes a rapid search for her abode. Finding this, he bribes the bell boy and goes up the elevator. He bursts into her door and saves the girl from her despondent act. Later he defends her from many enemies at the risk of his own life. It is only after many exciting events that Laurie learns that it was all a hoax on the part of his friends, but he is able to smile, as he has found love and happiness and a new interest in life.

Exploitation Angles: Get this over carefully. You have many opportunities for exploitation. Start off by a teaser asking "Can you see around a corner?" Then follow with the statement that it can be done at your house at a certain date. Frame a lobby display with pier mirrors to show how it is done. For another teaser announce in advance that your house will be known as number 29 Main street, or whatever it is, and fake huge gilt numerals perhaps a week in advance of your other advertising. Then drop into the regular stuff, with appeals on the leads and the story.

"The Woman in Room 13"

A Splendid Picturization of the Stage Play Made by Goldwyn.

Reviewed by M. A. Malaney.

GOLDWYN has turned out an excellent photoplay from "The Woman in Room 13," from the stage play by Max Marcin, Samuel Shipman and Percy Wilde. Pauline Frederick is the star, and the supporting cast is one of the best we have ever seen. Each player fits his or her particular type and none of the parts are overplayed. It is a mystery story, and yet the mystery occupies only a small part of the action. But this is the big punch and it is handled carefully and efficiently, Director Frank Lloyd deserving great credit for his work.

The story is about a woman unhappily married, who, a few years after divorcing her husband, weds another, and then, through a trick of fate, becomes the victim of her first husband's vengeance. It is melodrama with little comedy. It gives Miss Frederick the opportunity of doing a lot of good acting. The work of John Bowers is especially commendable. Others who are worthy of note are Charles Clary and Robert McKim.

The Story.

Laura Bruce is married to John Bruce, police commissioner. She discovers her husband is enjoying a drunken revel with another woman, and vows she will obtain a divorce. After doing so she weds Paul Ramsey. His employer, Dick Turner, a libertine, offers him a responsible position in the West, and she faces a long separation. Ramsey later learns that Turner is interested in his wife and engages a man to protect her, who happens to be her former husband. She finds this out, but does not know he is bent on vengeance. She is inveigled to go to Turner's apartment, where she meets Turner's former "flame." One of them leaves the apartment, which is "Room 13."

Returning from the West, Ramsey is taken to an adjoining room by Bruce, and listens through a dictograph to a conversation in "Room 13" between a man and woman. He is convinced it is his wife's voice. Maddened he rushes to the room and batters down the door. He confronts Turner and shoots him. At the trial Ramsey will go free if his wife confesses she was in the room. She does and he is acquitted. A reconciliation follows.

"A Woman Who Understood"

Bessie Barriscale in Familiar Role of Old-Fashioned Wife Does Good Work in Robertson-Cole Production.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

WE are familiar with Bessie Barriscale's convincing portrayal of the neglected wife, and must concede that she is indeed adept in handling a role of this type. In the Robertson-Cole production, "A Woman Who Understood," she gives a pleasing performance, and succeeds in winning sympathy for the woman whose keen understanding of human nature had helped to brighten the lives of would-be artists. The picture is well made, and is wholesome in sentiment. The lovable character of the young wife, who sacrificed everything for the sake of her children, presents a pleasing study; and the situation which arises through her apparent lack of interest in her artist husband's work is not unnatural.

The production is not a big one in any sense of the word. We are familiar with the woman who neglects both children and husband for the sake of making a plaything of somebody else's husband, and with the man who yields to her charms, out of his vain belief that she is the only one who understands him. There is nothing out of the ordinary in plot or direction, but the production is pleasing, and holds the interest from beginning to end.

The Story.

Madge Graham, a sculptress and heroine of "A Woman Who Understood," is the good angel of Greenwich when the story opens. By her helpful interest in those who frequent her tea room, she brightens many lives and wins herself a husband in the bargain. One day, when she is looking from her window, she sees a young man in an opposite rooming house about to shoot himself. She throws something into the courtyard, attracts his attention, and so diverts his mind from thoughts of suicide. This man, a violinist, she afterwards marries and after bearing him two children, on whom she lavishes every attention, she is accused of indifference to her husband's art, and finally is forced to see his affections transferred to Mrs. Alden, the wife of a rich neighbor.

The scene of her awakening is set in the home of Mrs. Alden. In a hurried departure from the room into which Mrs. Alden has lured Robert Knight into embracing her, a lamp is overturned and the house takes fire. In trying to prevent the spread of the flames Knight's hands are badly burned, and he is taken to a hospital for treatment. When it is learned that skin grafting will be necessary to save his hands, Mrs. Alden at first offers to make the sacrifice, but on second thought refuses, revealing to Knight the fact that he has been merely a plaything. His own wife, ill from the shock of finding her husband unfaithful, hears of his injuries, and goes to him and makes the sacrifice in place of the other woman.

"Lifting Shadows"

Pathe Releases Stirring Six-Part Leonce Perret Production, with Emmy Wehlen.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THERE is no lack of breathless action in this six-part Leonce Perret production, released by Pathe. It tells an anti-Bolshevik story, with its beginnings in Russia and the greater part of what follows in America. The heroine and her father are members of a group of revolutionists in Russia, fighting for a cause dear to their hearts, but later, after the death of her father, the girl gets a new angle on the activities of her father's friends, who have become Reds and hold views with which she does not sympathize.

Vania, as so attractively portrayed by Emmy Wehlen, is half Slav and half American. There is a great deal of charm in both scenes and settings in this picture, though some of the transitions are abrupt. The cast is very good all through and the story entertaining.

The Story.

Vania, in "Lifting Shadows," is the daughter of a Russian revolutionist, Serge Ostrowski. Her father is attending a meeting of the committee, when the building is suddenly raided by the police. From the basement of the building, which he has been sworn to blow up with all its contents, Ostrowski bids farewell Vania over the telephone. He also instructs her to flee with certain papers, outlying plans for a campaign in America. Ostrowski then ignites the bomb and perishes in the headquarters of the committee.

Five years later, in America, Vania is the wife of an artist, Clifford Howard, and the mother of a little girl. The latter is the only link binding the pair together, as Howard uses drugs and Vania fears him. He is killed during a drug-crazed attack on her. Vania is cleared of the crime by a young American lawyer, Hugh Mason, though she believes herself guilty of killing her husband in self-defense. It develops later, in a surprising way, that the bullet she fired penetrated only the leg of the artist.

Vania outwits the members of the Reds, with whose cause she has lost sympathy, and keeps them from obtaining the papers she brought to America. In this she is aided by her friend, Countess Lobanoff. Later Vania marries Hugh Mason.

"The Inner Voice"

E. K. Lincoln Does Best Work of His Career in American Cinema Corporation's Seven-Reel Production.

ONE of the swiftest moving dramas of the season is "The Inner Voice," made by the American Cinema Corporation and presented by the Planet Film Co. E. K. Lincoln is the featured player, and is surrounded by a wideawake, competent cast. In this production the star does the best work of his career, portraying three different stages of a man's life in a convincing manner. The picture is well made, and especially to be commended is its clearness of outline in telling the story and its genuineness of detail. It is excellent entertainment under any auspices.

It is based on a red-blooded story by Elaine Sterne, who has leavened its most bitterly passionate moments by means of a gentle character, presented as the Good Samaritan. When the favorite characters are about to commit uncharitable or criminal acts, his influence stays the hand of passion. Its dance hall scenes and tong war, in San Francisco's underworld, are well done and unobjectionable. A fight over a mining claim is one of the most realistic of its kind. "The Inner Voice" is a good alibi for those who claim that the length of a picture is not an important item, provided the quality is there.

Agnes Ayres plays the feminine lead and is charming as Barbara. Her interpretation is graceful and intelligent. Fuller Mellich as the Good Samaritan, and Riley Hatch as Mike O'Hara are only a part of the splendid cast.

The Story.

The hero of "The Inner Voice" is a young man, Mark Reid, who brought with him to the gold fields of California his dreams and his ideals. The turning point in his career comes when he discovers Mike O'Hara on his gold claim, and fights him almost to the death. The Good Samaritan, in whose cabin he has stopped over night, happens along just in time to prevent a tragedy. Reid, ashamed of his terrible burst of passion, shakes hands with his adversary, and decides that the claim is big enough and rich enough for both of them.

At the saloon that night O'Hara boasts of his partnership with Reid. Morrison, a promoter from San Francisco, overhearing him, seeks out Reid at the cabin of the Good Samaritan and makes an offer for the mine which meets the approval of the partners.

In the transaction of business in San Francisco, Reid is thrown much in the company of Barbara, Morrison's niece, and their engagement is made known to Morrison, just as he is planning to fleece Reid. He acknowledges the engagement, but proceeds with his plan, and hands Reid a check for $65,000 as his share of the mine, for which he immediately sells him some bogus oil stock.

Reduced to beggary, and led to believe by Morrison that Barbara never meant to marry him, he wanders about the slums of San Francisco, until he feels the call of Paradise Valley and the gold fields. Returning he finds O'Hara in possession of another rich mine, in which he has made him a partner. From this moment Reid begins his rise in the financial world, and finally is in a position to revenge himself on Morrison. He makes a run on the market. Morrison, unable to cover, is forced to admit ruin. The Good Samaritan again stepping into the breach, brings Barbara to Reid's home, and once again the evil passions of greed and revenge are conquered.

"The Virgin of Stamboul"

Universal Presents Priscilla Dean in a Picturesque Melodrama of Oriental Life.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE totality of effect in the Universal special, "The Virgin of Stamboul," is largely that of picturesque grandeur. It is conceived and executed by minds fascinated by the mystery of highly-tinted oriental existence. That many-sided, many-colored life grows in gorgeous costumes and decorative backgrounds. The color and gloom, the riches and poverty, the luxury and wretchedness of that older and narrower part of Constantinople known as Stamboul are skilfully visualized. They arouse sensations of romantic wonder as pictures rather than thrill with the excitement of tense drama. The Universal feature is a fine spectacle of generous treatment, with some stirring ensembles and a dash of melodrama to give it flavor.

Priscilla Dean impersonates a beautiful beggar girl, an unveiled seeker of alms in the streets, whose character has remained clean. Her characterization has the splendid animation of a bright American girl whose energy of youth is ballasted by brains. While this may be remote from the oriental, it is very attractive. More true to the environment is Wallace Beery as a wealthy Sheik with a choice harem. He is decidedly representative of the combined austerity and sensuality of oriental fanaticism. The balance of the cast is satisfactory without exception. With so much to its credit as a careful and interesting production, "The Virgin of Stamboul" should be as favorably received elsewhere as it was by a crowded house at the Broadway Theatre.

The Story.

Sari is a beggar girl known as the virgin of Stamboul. In the old quarter of Constantinople she asks for alms as if it were a joy and thus attracts the attention of Captain Pemberton, American soldier of fortune. He has just resigned his command of the famous Black Horse Troop. She becomes so infatuated with him that her spiritual nature is aroused. She dares enter a mosque, though such an act is forbidden to women. She there witnesses the murder of a young man who has incurred the deadly hatred of a wealthy sheik.

Circumstantial evidence leads Pemberton to think Sari committed the crime. He leaves on military duty, and Sari believes herself forgotten. She comes upon the sheik drinking coffee and lets him know that she can identify him as the murderer. In order to cover such a revelation, and partly because Sari is fascinating, the sheik decides to make her a member of his harem. Preliminary arrangements are made through Sari's mother, without Sari seeing the face of her future lord and master. Pemberton learns of the approaching nuptials and bribes an emissary to substitute his name for that of the sheik.

The ceremony is performed, but the sheik discovers the plot and carries away the young couple by force into captivity. They are at his stronghold in the desert when Sari makes a daring escape and rides to inform the Black Horse Troop of their captain's peril. There is a tremendous struggle to capture the stronghold. Pemberton escapes from confinement and enters upon a hand to hand conflict with the sheik. When the troopers, aided by mounted police, finally enter the fortress, Sari rushes to find her husband. The sheik falls mortally wounded at her feet, and Sari and Pemberton are united.

"Haunted Spooks"

A Crackerjack Harold Lloyd Farce Released by the Pathe Exchange.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

HAUNTED Spooks," the new Harold Lloyd release, is a most laughable farce-comedy, an instantaneous winner for good reasons. Foremost of these is the skill shown in all departments of production. To this fine workmanship is due the effect of spontaneity. Everything is done without apparent effort. There are no labored attempts to be comic. From a spectator's point of view the farce is "just naturally funny." This is really high art. It involves a good story well-constructed, with ingenious incidents of great variety and bright glimpses of weak human nature. It requires in addition a veritable artist of interpretation, cleverly supported by every member of the cast. All of these are provided with results that set a high mark for "Haunted Spooks."

Some of the most amusing incidents precede the spooky part of the farce. Harold Lloyd impersonates a disappointed suitor whose attempts at suicide are perpetually frustrated. The best incident of this kind is his elaborate attempt to jump from a bridge to find a watery grave. He makes the fatal leap only to stand up bewildered in water only three inches deep. He tries again, after sounding the channel and drops into a passing skiff. An attempt to be run over by a motor car brings him to the attention of a lawyer in search of a man desperate enough to marry in a hurry. He finds himself speedily united to a young lady who has inherited a haunted house. The rest of the story is made up of their screaming adventures among the ghosts. A crowded house at the Strand exhibited approval in constant laughter, so genuine and general as to establish "Haunted Spooks" as one of the liveliest farces shown on the screen.

"Edgar and the Teacher's Pet"

Little Goldwyn Comedy of Boyhood, First of a Booth Tarkington Series.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A SKETCH of boyhood comedies and tragedies as talented Booth Tarkington knew them in his own boyhood, when kids were more slenderly endowed with worldly wisdom than they are today. "Edgar and the Teacher's Pet" simply portrays the primitive hatred of a boy for school, his habit of getting there too late, his all-too-obvious excuses, and the workings of his active imagination. All the bitterness of his soul is aroused by a series of unhappy events. When he fails to do an example on the blackboard, up steps the teacher's pet and does it in a jiffy. Poor Edgar is compelled to sit on the platform, exposed to the derision of his schoolmates, and there he dreams. His heart is torn with anguish when his little sweetheart makes a face at him. His countenance wears an expression worthy of dying Caesar, "and this from you," just after the fatal stab from his best friend. Edgar dreams of a time to come when he will be marching down the street at the head of his troops. This is visualized. Forth from the crowd comes his sweetheart to beg forgiveness, but he repels her. When she implores him to pardon her, he orders her to be placed under arrest and gives the word of command to proceed.

The dreams of revenge by Edgar are elaborately pictured, but the real action is better. His fight with the teacher's pet and the three-sided conflict when the sweetheart joins in with a garden hose provides the best comedy material. The pleasant little sketch was kindly received at the Capitol Theatre, and it may prove well suited to matinee audiences of women and children.

Olive Tell Is Attractive Heroine of Murder Mystery in Six-Reel Jans-Rolfe Production.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE spook element of "Love Without Question," which is an adaptation of "The Abandoned Room" by C. Wadsworth Camp, will win for the production both favor and disfavor, according to the temperament of spectator. The picture was made under the supervision of B. A. Rolfe, and is released through the Jans Pictures, Inc. It exhibits careful direction for the most part, although in one or two instances psychological effects have not been gauged accurately. The mysterious atmosphere which the plot inspires is well sustained, and the players carry out the author's idea of the characterization well. There is, however, a slight lack of clearness in the outlining of the story, and the significance of certain scenes seem to lie in the establishing of a reason for the title, for which, otherwise, there would be little excuse.

Olive Tell plays the role of Katherine with charm and intelligence, and James Morrison as Robert Blackburn does well in a role that offers him fair opportunities. Mario Marjaroni as Silas Blackburn gives a good impersonation of a peculiar character. George S. Stevens and Ivo Dawson are also noticeable for good work. In fact, the entire cast is a competent one.

Length, Six Reels.

Story.

The story of "Love Without Question" is based on a murder mystery, in which the double identity of twin brothers serves as a bolster for the plot.

Silas Blackburn, an old man of wealth, lives alone with his ward, Katherine, and his butler. In the home of Silas is an abandoned room, in which three generations of the Blackburns have died. One day his twin brother, who has been cheated of a fortune by Silas, comes to see him. After a heated argument he is put to sleep in the abandoned chamber. In the night Silas enters the room and kills his brother with a sharp instrument, with which he pierces his neck. He then hurries away in fear to the house of a friend, where he stays for several days.

In the meantime his grandson, who suffers from fits of asphasia, is suspected of the murder. In an attempt to solve the mystery of the haunted room, a detective loses his life in the same manner as the first victim. On his return he is taken for a ghost, and on the appearance on the scene of his brother's daughter, Silas becomes suddenly terror stricken and shoots himself.

A love story between Blackburn's ward and his grandson, and the by-play of a rival is closely woven into the plot.

Exploitation Angles: Boom Miss Tell, but hook up to the craze for spiritualism. Use the spook suggestion in window dressings and on your stage or screen. The Story.

Colonel and Mrs. Gardner are giving a tea party at their beautiful mansion home in the Far West in honor of the seventeenth birthday of their daughter Pauline. The girl is angry because her youthful sweetheart, John Dumont, has not arrived. Colonel Gardner, glancing out of the window, sees young Dumont flirting with a girl in the street. Dumont gets into a fight later in a club room and injures another boy severely. Dumont tries to explain to Pauline, urging her to marry him. The girl's father protests but Dumont swears he will marry Pauline anyway.

Pauline goes off to a girl's school where she meets Hampden Scarborough. Dumont comes on the scene again, upsets the romance between Pauline and Scarborough, tells the school girl she alone can keep him from temptation and they are secretly married. They go to New York to live.

The bright lights of Broadway lure young Dumont from his wife. He becomes infatuated with a girl about town named Suzanne. One night Leonora Fanshawe, whose husband is associated with Dumont in business, invites Pauline to a musicale. Dumont is spending a lively evening in an apartment across the way with Suzanne. Despite her sorrow and mortification Pauline plays the organ and then goes home. Later Dumont comes home.

The next morning Pauline tells her husband that never again can they live together—as husband and wife. Hereafter Pauline spends most of her time in the western home of her parents. Dumont becomes head of the woolen trust. They plan to get political control of the western state where Scarborough is running for governor. They failed to buy Scarborough, however, and he is made governor. Money sent out by Dumont for political corruption is kept securely in the Gardner safe deposit vault.

Back in New York some years later Pauline learns that her husband has become infatuated with Leonora Fanshawe. Pauline leaves him for all time, she says. Fanshawe, in revenge, ruins Dumont. The former Wall street leader is on his sick bed. Pauline, hearing of his plight, comes to his aid. Dumont recovers long enough to wreck Fanshawe and his crowd and then dies. Pauline goes back to the west, her love for Scarborough is renewed and they are married.

"The Fighting Shepherdess"

Anita Stewart Has Excellent Story in Her Latest First National Release.

Reviewed by Jacob Smith.

IN "The Fighting Shepherdess," Anita Stewart again scores a heavy triumph and almost duplicates the success she attained in the role of Madge in "In Old Kentucky." The producers could have made no happier choice for a story than the novel by Caroline Lockhart. It not only gives the star an opportunity to show at her best, but it furnishes a picture that is novel, gripping and fast in action.

As Kate Prentice, Miss Stewart, fights her way to love and honor among the rough sheep herders of the western country. Questionable parentage makes her an object of scorn by the townspeople but an old recluse adopts her and champions her cause. An appealing romance enters into the story when Hughie Disston, visiting the cattle country, becomes enamored of the simple shepherdess and an engagement is effected. Little does the youth realize that when he revisits the sheep country after his years in college he will find a difference in the little shepherd girl, a difference that for a time causes him much pain. The story has a unique ending, with the shepherdess triumphing over the townspeople by financing their water project.

Aside from the acting of Miss Stewart, the outstanding feature seems to be its direction. Edward Jose has taken advantage of every opportunity to inject the little touches of humor and pathos that go toward a finished production. Wallace MacDonald as the hero; Noah Berry as the villain and Eugenie Besserer as the villainess take roles that are exceptionally well handled.

The Story.

Kate Prentice is the pretty daughter of the proprietress of a questionable roadhouse. Saved from the advances of Pete Mullendore, half Indian and half Negro, by Mormon Joe, a recluse shepherd, she leaves the tavern. She becomes Mormon Joe's protegee and partner in the sheep business. Kate is happy until she hears the gossips calling her "Mormon Joe's Kate." Hughie Disston, from the East, visits the sheep country, meets Kate and accepts a dare to take her to the Boosters' Ball. Kate is shunned, but on the way home Hughie tells her he loves her and that when his college career is completed, he will return for her. That night Mormon Joe is murdered, and suspicion points to Kate. Lack of evidence frees her, but the stain remains. Kate becomes wealthy. Hughie returns, but finds a change in Kate, and goes back to the city, heart broken. Mullendore, who has acquired large sheep holdings and political influence, orders Kate to leave the community, but fate intervenes. Dying as a result of a fight, he confesses murdering Mormon Joe. Those who scorned the fighting shepherdess learn to love her, not excluding Hughie.

Exploitation Angles: Hook this up with "In Old Kentucky" for all you can get out of it. Offer it as a vivid story of the west, the eternal struggle between the sheep and cattle grazers.

"Black Shadows"

Five-Reel Fox Subject Features Peggy Hyland In Crook Story of Pleasing Character.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

AN unusual feature of this five-reel crook story, and one that makes it more worth while than the average of its type, is the fact that it carries an explanation of the baser uses for which hypnotism might be employed. The scientific end has not been obtruded to the detriment of the plot interest, but the spectator cannot help getting a clearer idea of what hypnotism is and how it might be made to operate upon the mind of a willing subject.

Peggy Hyland is attractive in the role of Marjorie Langdon, the girl heroine who endures suspicion until the moment comes when she can clear both her own name and that of her friend, Janet Fordyce. Cornean Kirkham plays the latter role, that of the hypnotic victim, quietly and intelligently. Albert Roscoe has the role of the hero and Henry J. Hebert that of the villain.

The story is a simple one, but all the better for its purpose. It shows how the villain discovers that a certain girl is a particularly easy subject for hypnotic control. He gradually gains power over her, by repeated efforts, and eventually induces her to commit a series of thefts. In each case the girl disposes of the jewels to a fence, giving the name of her friend. The hero, her brother, assists in clearing up the mystery. The out-door settings, as well as the interiors, are pleasing all through this subject.

The Story.

Marjorie Langdon, in "Black Shadows," is a poor but well-bred girl, forced to accept employment as a companion to a young girl named Janet Fordyce. The latter has an admirer named Chester Barnard, to whom Marjorie takes an instinctive dislike.

During a reception given at the home of the Fordyces, a hypnotist appears, who is a friend of Chester Barnard. Through several interesting demonstrations on the part of the professor, Barnard discovers that Janet Fordyce is easily influenced by hypnotism. By the aid of the unscrupulous hypnotist Barnard gains control over Janet and gradually induces her to steal jewelry at his direction. Numerous thefts of rings, bracelets and necklaces are made, Janet in each instance selling these to a fence, giving as her name that of her friend, Marjorie. In due time Marjorie is charged with stealing a valuable necklace by a certain Mrs. James. The girl indignantly denies the theft, but does not immediately tell the truth, for she knows Janet is guilty. She suspects Barnard of having influenced her in some way, but does not know just how until the facts come out later. Barnard himself is caught while attempting to carry off a famous ruby. Marjorie becomes engaged to Janet's brother.

"The Woman and the Puppet"

Passionate Love-Drama Laid in Picturesque Spain Is Produced by Goldwyn.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

IN "The Woman and the Puppet," produced by Goldwyn, Geraldine Farrar has a characteristic role, that of Concha Perez, which she handles in her usual vivid, daring and suggestive style. Concha fights a woman in public, makes love in a sailor's hall crowded with spectators, displays her physical charms in a sensational dance, and manages to do the unwomanly thing at almost every turn. The story has no ideals to offer, and does not attempt to. It is frankly sensual in motive and form.

As regards setting and directing, the picture is an artistic masterpiece. A very intelligent, very successful effort has been made to get the spectator into the local atmosphere. Scenes are rich in detail, as well as splendid in a broad, panoramic way. The choice of players reveals the utmost discrimination and the costume display is a feature in itself. To Reginald Barker goes the credit for superb directing and to Percy Hilburn for clean, clear photography.

Lou Tellegen, as the "puppet" tossed about, emotionally, by a woman's whims and wiles, has an exacting role which he portrays with restraint and finesse. Mme. Rose Dione, who is seen as the girl's mother, contributes a skillful characterization, and Macey Harlam effectively delineates the lover of lowly caste.

Length—7 reels.

The Story.

Concha Perez, the fascinating daughter of a cigarette maker in Seville, is one of many beautiful girls at a flower carnival. Don Mateo Diaz, a handsome young nobleman, passes through the streets with Blanca Roman, a young girl who has given up everything for him only to find that she is losing his love. They urge a gypsy to dance for their entertainment. She declines, explaining that she cannot dance without music. Concha comes forward and offers to snap her fingers and sing for the girl that she may dance. Don Mateo is infatuated at once, but Concha only laughs and tosses her head. Then she makes an insulting remark about the gypsy's dancing and a spirited fight takes place between the two girls. Don Mateo manages to separate them and prevents the police from carrying Concha off to jail. He then follows her and she makes open love to him. Blanca, meanwhile, is suffering the agony of the rejected.

Several days later, Blanca goes to the home of Concha and begs her to give Don Mateo up. Concha treats her in her characteristic insulting, derisive manner and declines to have anything to do with Blanca's love affairs. Don Mateo arrives on the scene and the two girls, each in their individual way, strive to win him from the other. Concha, however, is successful and Blanca leaves. The two lovers then plan to leave the city but while Concha is gone for her belongings, her mother appears and Don Mateo pays her a generous sum of money, an act which enrages Concha who overrules this. She promises to meet him at the appointed time, but does not intend to keep her word, and goes to Cadiz instead.

Six months later he finds her in a sailor's dance hall where she is the paramount attraction. She appears in a daring gown and Don Mateo is furious. She openly scorns him, and accepts the attention of El Morenito who has for a long time been one of her suitors. Don Mateo then rushes up on the stage, throws his cloak over her and forces her to leave the hall. She confesses that she loves him and that she has remained pure for his sake.

He takes her back to Seville, but she continues to abuse him in her half-loving, half-resentful manner. Finally she adds one insult too many and he leaves her, determined to never see her again. He suffers an almost complete physical collapse, and then she comes to him, and, with agreeing to love him in a tender, devoted way, she becomes his promised wife.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines: Like Dolls on the End of a Wire Were Her Lovers—And She Laughed as They Dangled and Withred. "The Woman and the Puppet" Stars Geraldine Farrar in This Carmenesque Role.

He Consented to Be a "Puppet" Because He Loved Her. But She Insulted Him Once Too Many Times. He Left, As He Thought, Forever, and Then She Came to Him, Humbled, Contrite, Softened.

Swift, Fiery, Dangerous, She Lured Her Victims and Then Laughed at Them. But She Met Her Equal in Him.

In Pleasure Loving Spain Where Life, Love and Music Make Each Day a Holiday, Where Beautiful Girls Dance and Smile and Men Admire and Love.—That's Where "The Woman and the Puppet" is Laid. See Geraldine Farrar in One of Her Most Vital, Luring, Challenging Roles.

Exploitation Angles: Play up Miss Farrar and stress the vividness of the play. Use a cut out figure with real dolls dangling from the star's hand, if you can find a suitable figure. This can also be worked for a doll hook-up with toy and other stores. If you feel optimistic you might even advertise this as a new "Carmen" as the stories have the same coloring.

"Husbands and Wives"

Vivian Martin in Gaumont Production That Has Many Good Points.

Reviewed by Jacob Smith.

VIVIAN MARTIN in "Husbands and Wives," made by Gaumont, is by no means the best thing this youthful star has done, yet it has many good points about it. From the standpoint of the patron it will be termed "just fair." From the standpoint of the exhibitor, however, it has many things about it worthy of exploitation. There is the title, for instance.

The story is an adaptation of the novel, "Making Her His Wife," by Cora Harris. It visualizes some of the misunderstandings of matrimony. The husband's efforts to enforce the "obey" in the ceremony, and her determination to outwit him furnishes some very humorous and interesting situations. The photography is good, the subtitles are excellent, and there is some beautiful "shots" of southern scenery.

We repeat that it is not the best thing Miss Martin has done, yet it will no doubt please her admirers.

The Miles Theatre, Detroit, where it was presented the week of March 21, exploited the picture by using large newspaper space, hangers in street cars and large banners in front of the house, with the result that the management report one of the best weeks of the year.

Exploitation Angles: Exploit Miss Martin and use her personal appeal as strongly as you can, turning to the title for another good angle for sensational appeal, hinged upon the "obey" in the marriage service.

"The Evil Eye"

Benny Leonard Serial Released by Hallmark.

THE critical review of this serial appeared in last week's issue. The story is given below:

Story.

The story of "The Evil Eye" centers about certain Wall Street robberies, of which a mysterious, sinister recluse is the guiding star. David Druce, banker, has a million unregistered, and therefore negotiable, bonds which are entrusted to Frank Armstrong, bank messenger, to be carried through lower Broadway. Denton Drake, a cousin of David's, who is a junior partner in the firm, has secret connections with the mysterious gang of thieves, and carries on communications with the help of his fiancée, Marcia Lamar. An attempt to get the bonds from Armstrong proves unsuccessful, but Dora Druce, who happens along with her automobile at the time of the attack, hurries Armstrong and the bonds to her father's house, where they are placed in the family safe.

When David Druce and his wife and daughter are on their way to Chicago, Dora is kidnapped from the observation platform of the train, and taken to the house of the blind men, where the "evil eye" causes those who defy him to "drink of the waters of blindness." Here Dora is retained as a means of ultimately gaining possession of the bonds, and is rescued by Armstrong in a spectacular fight which ends in the house being set on fire.

In the meantime Maria Lamar in the bosom of the Druce family paves the way for the final theft of the bonds, and also inspires suspicion of his wife's relations with Drake, in the heart of David Druce. In the belief that Drake and Marcia have stolen her jewels Mrs. Druce pursues them by auto, and by a clever ruse of Drake's, which causes the driver to take the wrong road, Mrs. Druce's car goes over a cliff and she is killed. Drake makes a desperate attempt to get possession of the bonds. In the struggle which ensues Druce is killed. At the sound of footsteps Drake hides the body in the safe, and in the excitement of the moment Marcia Lamar closes the door of the safe, destroying the thieves' present chance of getting away with the bonds.

Dora, who is returning from school accompanied by Armstrong, enters just after her father has been killed, and finds the door of the library locked. When an entrance is gained, the lights are suddenly switched off, and when they are turned on again, Dora has vanished. So ends the third episode of the story.

Comments

THE HONEST JOCKEY (Fox).—A laughable Mutt and Jeff animated in which they give some of the elixir of life to a worn out nag and enter the races. Jeff heroically rides the animal to victory. The subject is very funny.

A LIGHTWEIGHT LOVE (Fox-Sunshine).—A two-reel comic directed by Roy Del Ruth, with Jack Cooper, Ed. Kennedy, Marvel Rea and others in the cast. The subject makes good all the way through, opening with some laughable scenes on a Pullman car which is flooded with water much to the discomfiture of all the passengers. The second reel presents an amusing boxing contest at Tugboat Tommie's training quarters. Some trick photography is employed in the latter scenes.

FIND THE GIRL (Rolin-Pathé).—A comic number, featuring "Snub" Pollard, assisted by a small colored boy and a Chinese kidlet. Some of the knockabout scenes are funny in themselves, but there is no particular connecting idea and a great deal of the action seems meaningless. This is but fairly successful.

FRESH PAINT (Rolin-Pathé).—There are some novel situations in this "Snub" Pollard subject. The messenger boys, of all sizes and ages, make an interesting crew. Snub's adventures with the artist's models are quite amusing. The models are a breezy group, minus stockings, but only the prudish will be shocked at this. The humor is fairly strong in this number.

Neilan Electrical Expert Invents Portable Generator

MARSHALL NEILAN'S electrical expert, Howard M. Ewing, has just perfected a new portable motor generator which, it is expected, will revolutionize exterior lighting in places where no "juice" is available.

Mr. Ewing is said to be the inventor of the first portable generator and his new machine is understood to be a great improvement over his first effort. The new generator, built at a cost of $20,000, is mounted on a trailer which can be drawn by an automobile truck and hauled to any location. It will produce enough power to furnish the same lighting effects that can be obtained at a studio. One of its features is the fact that a direct current of 2,200 volts can always be obtained instead of alternating current.

Mr. Ewing became associated with the business some seven years ago, coming to the motion picture studio after considerable experience on the "legitimate" stage, where he introduced several new effects. In motion pictures he is responsible for the use of a spot-light at the studio, and among his inventions for motion picture work is the Ewing Light.

Another recent invention, the perfection of appliance to the camera which makes possible the taking of a still picture simultaneously with the motion pictures, was made by Henry Cronjager, one of Mr. Neilan's cameramen.

Pick Directors and Players for Montgomery and Rock

EARL MONTGOMERY and Joe Rock, formerly the comedy co-stars of Vitagraph, who were recently separated in order to become each the head of a new Vitagraph comedy unit, are now well under way in their separate exploits. A strong staff of supporting players, cameramen and two capable directors have been organized for them.

"Chuck" Riesner, long recognized as a leading comedy film director, has been selected to direct the Montgomery productions. He has actively begun the filming of the first subject, which is declared to be based upon an unusual theme. Tom Galignan is the chief cameraman for this unit.

Grover Jones has been named to direct Joe Rock. Mr. Jones was the author of scores of farces for the screen before he became a director. Robert Hopkins, who wrote continuity and subtitles for the team of Montgomery and Rock, is retained to do this for the Rock comedies. Patsy DeForrest will appear as leading woman for Mr. Rock. Harry Fowler is chief cameraman for this company.

Bowers to Be Miss Minter's Leading Man.

John Bowers, who has appeared as leading man for many of the country's stars, has been engaged by Realart Pictures Corporation to play the principal male role in Mary Miles Minter's next production. It will be the first time he has played opposite Miss Minter.

His previous experience includes a number of important pictures with such stars as Geraldine Farrar, Madge Kennedy, Pauline Frederick and others.

Ince Signs Roland Lee.

Roland Lee, one of the best known personages of stage and screen, has been placed under a long-term contract by Thomas H. Ince.

Hardly beyond the teens in age, Mr. Lee's rapid rise in film circles has won for him the enthusiastic support and praise of both exhibitors and the picture public.

We Need a Legless Man, So Up Walks Lon Chaney.

This picture shows the noted film player in the act of making himself "legless." He plays the part of "Blizzard" in Goldwyn's "The Penalty."

BETTER EQUIPMENT

CONDUCTED BY E.T. KEYSER

"Come in Out of the Wet" Invites the Newman Canopy for Picture Theatres

COME in out of the wet" is the invitation that a picture house canopy extends to the passerby. And while he or she, having accepted the invitation, is resurrecting courage to face the downpour once more, the lobby display is getting in its fine work by suggesting that it is pleasant and more interesting inside.

Realizing that the canopy is first aid and chief advancement to the right kind of lobby display, the Newman Manufacturing Company of 717 Sycamore street, Cincinnati, and 68 West Washington street, Chicago, is illustrating in its new catalog a line of picture theatre canopies that may be shipped knocked down to the enterprising exhibitor and erected by the local tinsmith at a minimum of effort and expense.

Economical and Attractive.

The combination of stock designs with knock down construction permits of a degree of economy in these Newman canopies that places them in reach of the smallest house, while their attractive appearance and excellent workmanship renders them appropriate for the most exclusive.

Tell Us Your Troubles

WHENEVER any exhibitor or house manager runs up against a snag in the matter of equipment—its choice, use or installation; whenever you are in doubt as to just what you should do to make a new house attractive or improve an old one—ask the "Better Equipment" Department and we will dig up the dope for you. BUT don't forget to enclose a stamped return envelope with your inquiry.

The framework of these canopies is constructed of heavy plates, reinforced with angle iron on the inside and wood on the outside to which the sheet metal work is attached.

These canopies may be supported by chains, rods or wrought iron brackets, provided the canopies be not too large for such support, and may be made for either glass or sheet metal roofs or for steel ceilings in connection with the sheet metal roofs.

A Complete Line.

In the illustrations shown, Design 14 is a simple but pleasing design with a sufficient space beneath the moulding for display of the house name. Design 4 possesses the advantage of presenting more advertising space and its panels may be of either leaded or plain glass.

Canopy No. 8 is of comparatively plain design but is massive in appearance. As shown in the illustration, it may be equipped with electric lights in globes on top of the cornice.

No. 18 is a plain and inexpensive style possessing almost unlimited advertising possibilities.

No. 20 is rich and attractive in appearance and at the same time rather conservative in design. In No. 10 we have a canopy the lambrequin of which is designed to admit of the house name in large letters.

No. 40 is designed to fill requirements for a canopy which, while heavy in appearance, will give the maximum of light. The appearance of massiveness is characteristic of No. 7 also and this impression may be increased or decreased by varying the depth of the cornice.

For low buildings canopy No. 11 is well adapted. It is neat and inexpensive and the side brackets, shown in the illustration, may be omitted if desired.

Assembling and Erecting Made Easy.

These canopies are completely constructed in the factory, all parts are indicated, then taken down, painted if desired, crated and shipped to customer, who is furnished with complete drawings and details on which are indicated the different markings as they appear on the parts of the canopy, and their relative position when erected.

Comprehensive erecting instruction is furnished with canopy that begins with the unpacking of the goods and carries the purchaser through step by step until the work is finished.

These instructions are plainly written and so clear that any "handy man" may erect the work without experiencing either trouble or delay.

These may be obtained in various sizes and designs to correspond with the dimensions and architecture of the picture theatre to be equipped.

TYPHOON COOLING SYSTEM

Summer Will Soon Be With Us and unless your theatre is cool and comfortable you are bound to experience a big falling off in receipts. Your rush hour crowd will be about as big as that shown in the sketch at the right. Don't depend upon pictures and music alone to fill a hot stuffy theatre—it can't be done.

TYPHOON COOLING SYSTEM

Prepare to start the summer season early. Advertise your TYPHOON SYSTEM—play it up big—feature it in your lobby, and before you realize it people will be crowding into your house on the hottest days to get away from the heat—to cool off. This is the reason why such people as Saenger—Lynch—Loew—Signal—Crandall—and many other big theatre owners use TYPHOONS.

MACHINE PARTS

Some exhibitors evidently think that parts for Edison machines are no longer obtainable. To correct this impression we beg to advise that some time ago we purchased the entire Edison motion picture machine business and have in stock a line of parts for all models. As the demand for some articles is limited, we will not manufacture any more of them so beg to suggest that owners of Edison machines anticipate their requirements and order sufficient repair parts to keep their machines in good condition for a long time to come, as when our present stock is exhausted it will be impossible to obtain such parts.

We also carry repair parts for all models of Power machines and a line of theatre supplies. The above articles may be obtained from any dealer in the United States.

How the Typhoon Company Will Aid Its Patrons to Fill Their Picture Houses

IN the March 6 issue, there appeared in this department an article headed "Beat the Health Board to It" which advocated the installation and use of ventilating systems, disinfectants, vacuum cleaners, sanitary paper drinking cups, liquid soap dispensers and individual paper towels and then vociferously advertising the fact as an added house attraction.

One of the Typhoon Slides.

These colored slides come in sets of three and are furnished free.

The Typhoon Company of 281 Lexington avenue, New York City, builders of the Typhoon ventilating system, saw the value of the suggestion and we are in receipt from them of samples of slides, and advertising banners prepared by them to further the publicity campaigns of picture theatres in which the typhoon system is or will be installed.

Slides Are Artistic.

The slides furnished are of glass or celuloid as the exhibitors may prefer and as may be perceived from the specimens, extremely pleasing without permitting their artistic qualities detract from their forcefulness.

They are in colors and a set of three slides is furnished free to each Typhoon ventilated house requesting same.

All the designs shown may be arranged for electric lights if desired.

The Newman engineers and draftsman are at the exhibitors' service at all times and will give correct information covering all conditions, and the best method of overcoming all obstacles relative to the erecting of the canopies.

The banners, for which a moderate charge is made are of paper, backed with linen for lobby display or of canvas for outdoor use. These are in two or three colors as the exhibitor may desire and may be obtained in various sizes to fit lobbies and house fronts.

Poster Displays Also.

And the Typhoon Company is not stopping at slides and banners. They have now in course of preparation a series of one sheet lithographed posters that will enable the progressive exhibitor to blow about his Typhoon outfit in connection with his regular out-door display and, a little later on, a series of twenty-four sheet posters, also lithographed, will be added to the good air publicity campaign.

Going still further into the matter, the typhoon publicity department is now preparing a supply of breezy items, explaining the comfort of attending a Typhoon ventilated house and these items, for publication in the exhibitors' local papers, will be supplied to the systems' patrons without charge. Furthermore, the Typhoon

The two slides illustrated furnish a "Beauty and Beast" combination.

Company is now prepared to co-operate with its exhibitor patrons in the preparation of advertising copy and methods for exploitation by newspaper and out door methods of the combined attractions of a good program exhibited in a well ventilated theatre.

A Concrete Example.

As a concrete example of the high regard in which the Typhoon ventilating system is held, we reproduce a car card of the Empress Theatre, of Omaha, in which it

Recent Installations.

It looks as if the company's publicity department would be on the jump from now on in furnishing the co-operative advertising campaigns as the sales branch reports contracts having been closed during the past week for the following houses: Lincoln Square, Decatur, Ill.; Oasis, Wilson, N. C.; Strand, Rochester, N. Y.; Rialto, Rochester, N. Y.; Victory, Salisbury, N. C.; Hippodrome, Herrin, Ill.; Victory, Tampa, Fla.; Bijou, Springfield, Mass.; Suffolk, Holyoke, Mass.; Rialto, San Juan, Porto Rico, and Havana, Havana, Cuba.

Utah; Wasatch Store Company, Sunnyside, Utah.

One Plant Uses Twenty-Four.

Among the firms listed are some that are using from one to three Simplexes, while one industrial plant uses at least twenty-four of these popular projectors, both on the road and at the plant itself.

The number of Simplex installations in the mining districts are greatly increasing, many of the lumber, coal and coke companies using the motion picture not only as a source of amusement but for the teaching of lessons in efficiency, safety and Americanism as well.

Since the recent Prohibition Legislation has gone into force the number of hotels that are installing projectors has also greatly increased.

There Is No Sech Animal.

"Strange as it may seem," says Mr. E. S. Bowman of the Automaticket System, 1780 Broadway, New York, "there is something in connection with the government tax, which appears to have been entirely overlooked by everyone connected with the amusement business.

The Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company print billions of tickets yearly, yet it was only a few days ago that they learned there can be no such thing as a one dollar admission ticket, including the tax.

It appears that one of their customers ordered tickets printed, Admission 90c., tax 10c., total $1.00, and he was very promptly advised by a government inspector that the public was being overcharged one cent, as the tax should be 9c. on a 90c. ticket.

This inspector said the government would not accept the extra cent which was shown as part of the 10c. tax. The proprietor could not keep his price at $1.00 by charging 91c, as the tax would then be 10c. and the total admission $1.01.

The final result was that he charged $1.00 and added the tax, so the Government has no kick coming, and neither has he.

HERTNER ELECTRIC CO.

West 114th Street Cleveland, Ohio

Be an Early Bird; an Outfit at Hand Is Worth Several on a Freight Train

APPROXIMATELY five hundred picture houses are constantly in course of construction or renovation in this country. And just as soon as some of these are finished, along comes another bunch of blueprints and the architects and builders get busy with them.

Well, not too busy, you understand; just moderately active because, since the war stopped, real hustling, as we once understood it, has become unpopular and unpracticed.

The exhibitor understands this and makes allowances in accordance, when he is informed that his house will be ready at a certain date, he mentally places the event as due to transpire some sixty or ninety days later. He understands that the men who are doing the work require more time off to feed and curry the six cylinder joy wagon and for other household cares, such as winding up the phonograph and cutting coupons.

But what he does not appear to realize is that this condition is not confined to the building trades, but applies to every manufacturing industry as well. That the volume of production has been sadly cut down and that the manufacturer of picture theatre equipment and accessories is just as much up against it as is the building contractor.

Cash in on Preparedness.

This is probably why the exhibitor who could cash in on placing advance—well in advance—orders for the equipment that he knows perfectly well he must have, delays until just before the house is advertised to open and then places a rush order with the request that it be filled "yesterday."

Sometimes—with the aid of the perspiring and perplexed manufacturer and supply dealer—the order gets in just under the wire and the exhibitor does not have to explain why the grand opening was postponed on account of the weather, prohibition or the income tax law.

Sometimes he does not make it and both manufacturer and dealer receive telegrams that should be transcribed on asbestos paper and which only make things harder all around.

You exhibitors are good scouts and would not intentionally ball up a manufacturer or knowingly bawl him out for something that was really up to your own delay. But that is what is occurring quite frequently, these days, with the additional trimmings of delayed performances and last minute deliveries or deliveries too late to save the day.

You Can Figure It Out.

You can figure out, a long way in advance, just what you will require. Put in your orders early. Get a nice place, well up on the waiting list and see how easy it will be to get what you want when you want it. There's a lot more satisfaction and peace of mind connected with a bunch of equipment, all ready in a local storage warehouse than can be extracted from that same equipment somewhere between you and the shipping point when the builder turns the keys of the house over to you.

Equip the Projector with a Self-Starter; It's a Cinch

IN these days when one appeals for domestic help with seductive advertising emphasizing the presence of vacuum cleaners and electric ranges and the absence of children, it is hardly reasonable to expect to secure and retain the best grade of projectionist unless one's projector be equipped with a self-starter.

And, it is nothing of a feat to attach a motor to the projecting machine if one goes about it correctly. As an illustration of this fact, here's an outfit that Erker Brothers of St. Louis have supplied to hundreds of picture houses, both large and small and regarding which they state that they have never experienced a comeback by reason of any projectionist's inability to make the attachment.

The motor is of one-tenth horse power, built by the Fidelity Electric Company of Lancaster, Pennsylvania, and is equipped with a variable speed control lever that permits of a speed variation of one hundred per cent. at the will of the projectionist.

For Direct or Alternating Current.

This motor is constructed to operate with either 110-volt direct current or 110-volt, 60 cycle alternating current as may be ordered. It is of the enclosed type and all outside live parts eliminated.

As shown in the illustration, the motor is hitched to a Power's 6A, by altering the position of the motor support. It may be attached to a 6B.

The drive attachment meshes into the lower gear of the Power's mechanism and attaches to the projector frame by means of three small screws supplied with the attachment. A belt, as shown, connects the motor with the drive attachment.

The outfit as supplied is all ready to attach to projector without special machine work or fitting.

None of These Picture Theatres Will Cost Less Than $100,000

THE following list of picture theatres now under contemplation, construction or renovation covers but a fraction of the present building activities in picture circles. It will be observed, however, that in no instance does the proposed expenditure fall below one hundred thousand dollars. On the contrary, in many cases greatly exceeds that amount.

PENSACOLA, FLA.—Ernest Boehringer, New Orleans, will erect theatre, with seating capacity of 2,500, to cost $250,000.

CHICAGO, ILL.—Thomas P. Penniman has plans for brick and concrete theatre to cost $2,000,000.

BALTIMORE, MD.—Greater Baltimore Theatre Company will erect one-story theatre, 75 by 150 feet, on Fayette street and Philadelphia road, to cost $100,000.

LANSING, MICH.—W. S. Butterfield, Battle Creek, Mich., will erect two-story brick, reinforced concrete and terra-cotta trim theatre and arcade building, 99 by 165 and 54 by 165 feet, to cost $200,000.

MEXICO, MO.—Orpheum Theatre Company will erect four-story reinforced concrete, brick and steel theatre, concrete floors, to cost $100,000.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—Rochester Hotel Company has plans for alterations to theatre at 75 West Main street, to cost $100,000.

SHARON, PA.—Strand Theatre Corporation, 58 South Railroad street, has plans for a one-story brick and terra cotta trim theatre, 70 by 145 feet, to cost $200,000.

NORWICH, CONN.—H. M. Land has plans for one-story brick steel and reinforced concrete moving picture theatre at 31-35 Broadway, to cost $100,000.

CHICAGO, ILL.—W. T. Pierce has plans for two-story theatre, with seating capacity of 1,100, to cost $150,000.

CHICAGO, ILL.—R. Emerman, 110 South Dearborn street, has plans for large theatre and hotel building to be erected on Sheridan road and Lawrence avenue, to cost $7,500,000.

WICHITA, KANS.—Arthur Ford, Maple Hotel, has plans for theatre and hotel building at Williams and Emporia avenues, to cost $350,000.

MEXICO, MO.—S. C. Thompson will erect two-story brick, stone and terra cotta trim moving picture theatre, 50 by 120 feet to cost $100,000.

DEAR LODGE, MONT.—Jens Hansen, manager of Orpheum Theatre, will erect large moving picture and vaudeville theatre, with seating capacity of 900, to cost $100,000.

CLEVELAND, O.—M. Silverberg, Seventy-third street and Hough avenue has plans for theatre with seating capacity of 2,000, to be erected at 152nd street, and St Clair avenue, to cost $200,000.

CAYUHOGA FALLS, O.—I. S. Myer heads company which will erect theatre on Portage street, to cost $150,000.

ATLANTA, GA.—Sig. Samuels has leased property at Broad, Luckie and Forsyth streets, as a site for a six-story fireproof theatre and office building. The theatre will be known as the Metropolitan and have a seating capacity of 2,250.

PERRY, IOWA.—J. C. Atkins Land Company has plans for four-story brick, reinforced concrete and stone theatre and office building, 190 by 140 feet to cost $150,000.

PADUCAH, KY.—D. Harvey Jamieson is preparing plans for brick and fireproof theatre, with seating capacity of 200, to cost $150,000.

BALTIMORE, MD.—David Schwaber, 809 Pennsylvania avenue, has plans for one-story moving picture theatre, 92 by 200 feet, with seating capacity of 2,500, to be erected at 888-19 Pennsylvania avenue, to cost $125,000.

DULUTH, MINN.—J. B. Clinton, 16 East Superior street, will expend $100,000 remodeling Lyceum Theatre at Sixth avenue and Superior street.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—General Theatres Company 301 Brisbane Building, for one- and two-story brick fireproof moving picture, store and office building, to be erected at Genesee street and Fillmore avenue, to cost $200,000.

FRESNO, CAL.—Kinema Investment Company will erect theatre to cost $200,000. Pipe organ to cost $15,000 will be installed.

BOONE, IOWA.—A. H. Blanke, 326 Iowa Building, Des Moines, has plans for a large up-to-date theatre to cost $300,000.

Camera Outfit Furnished by Inter-Ocean in Record Time

EUGENE H. KAUFMAN, manager of the Accessory Department of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, has concluded arrangements for the equipment of a complete motion picture outfit for use by the research department of an extensive exploration expedition which will soon penetrate the undeveloped and unexplored regions of British Honduras.

The apparatus in the outfit consists of a motion picture camera, two "still" cameras, negative raw stock, and the services of a high grade camera man. It may be interesting to note that the entire outfit was furnished by Mr. Kaufmann within forty-eight hours' notice.

Master Projector Agencies Opened.

Exclusive agencies for the distribution of master projectors have been established in Switzerland and Nicaragua by the Accessory Department of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation who are the exclusive foreign distributors of this projector.

During the same week, a large number of Master projectors were shipped to London for distribution throughout the United Kingdom.

QUANTITY AND QUALITY!

THE greatest master of the English language living couldn't write advertisements that would continue to sell razor blades that wouldn't shave, soaps that wouldn't wash, or pencils that wouldn't write.

For it is absolutely true that every great and long successful business is based upon the fact that it is producing and selling an article of genuine merit! Which is particularly true of the RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. whose success depends not upon its initial sales, but rather upon the volume of business that follows them. Its success is essentially based upon the quality of its posters,—their advertising quality,—their ticket selling quality.

The fact that there is an ever increasing tendency to use more, and ever more RITCHEY posters is sure and positive evidence as to the quality and efficacy of our product.

I HAVE FOUND THEM!

The right group of moving picture Brains with the Power, Ambition and Financial Strength, combined in an organization to give me the life-time opportunity I have sought.

THE DOMINATING FIGURE

in this strongly-welded company is a Producer in whose make-up is blended the genius of Art and Showmanship; a Man of reputation and talents, with Vision and Creative Ability; a Director of the highest rating, schooled in the craft of picture-making; a Man who has been consistently responsible for successful pictures, and who thoroughly understands Commercial Value.

D. N. SCHWAB PRODUCTIONS, Inc.

have brought this man forward, and I throw my lot with them.

They have the most modern equipped studio, a progressive and able business management, skillful camera men and clever scenario writers, that are preparing the best material to be obtained for my purposes. We are already working.

Who is this big man associated with such a company that has made me the happiest artist in the world?

His name will be ready for release to the public any day now.

Wonderful Story. Excellent Stellar Performance and Extravagant Production

Louise Glaum in
"SEX"

DIRECTOR..... J. Parker Read, Jr.—Hodkinson
AUTHOR..... C. Gardner Sullivan
SCENARIO BY..... C. Gardner Sullivan
CAMERAMAN..... Charles J. Stumar
AS A WHOLE..... Very lavish and rich production containing a lot of dramatic and moral force.
STORY..... Very well worked out and all sequences handled with real dramatic skill.
DIRECTION..... Puts the dramatic as well as the spectacular scenes over with fine effect.
PHOTOGRAPHY..... Fine
LIGHTINGS..... Very effective
CAMERA WORK..... Various scenes show skilful camera placement.
STAR..... Role runs wide range and she handled all phases very impressively.
SUPPORT..... Shows to fine advantage
EXTERIORS..... Few used
INTERIORS..... Rich and appropriate
DETAIL..... Shows of players lighting and smoking cigarettes too plentiful.
CHARACTER OF STORY..... Roof garden queen comes between husband and wife and later, married, finds herself confronted with same situation.
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION..... About 6,000 feet
C. Gardner Sullivan conceived and developed with his uncanny skill, a dramatic and morally forcible theme in "Sex," which also serves as a wonderful vehicle for Louise Glaum. All the dramatic sequences, and there are many, have been handled with fine effectiveness both in the writing and the production of them, and the final sequences contribute a faithful touch to the story that will make it the subject of much conversation. In fact "Sex" is a picture blessed with a BIG story.

The story opens showing Adrienne, a roof garden queen, in all her artificial glory. Her philosophy is to look after herself alone. Believing brazenly in this selfish outlook she laughs at the plea of the wife of her most ardent admirer to give him up. As a result there is a divorce. Later, however, Adrienne marries Dick, a millionaire, and finds herself really in love with him. And not until her successor at the roof, Daisy, once a chorus girl whom Adrienne had tutored to become a gold-digger, comes between her and Dick does she realize the utter falsity and cruelty of her former act. Unable to hold Dick she takes passage for Europe, and on the steamer sees her former admirer happy in his reunion with his wife. Happiness is all about her but she has none.

The very simplicity of this story is the key-note to its power. The placing of Adrienne in the same situation two times, only at opposite corners of the eternal triangle, is a very forcible stroke and one which, besides being responsible for tremendously effective drama, affords Miss Glaum splendid opportunities to display her emotional versatility.

The picture has been very lavishly produced. The roof garden scenes are startling in originality and effectiveness and the wild party in Adrienne's home is reckless in abandon. But Director Fred Niblo has shown himself a master of the dramatic sequences as well as the spectacular scenes. In fact these are handled to such effect, for the spectacular orgy is marred several times by vulgar incident which should never been pictured. These scenes and shots of the players lighting and smoking cigarettes could well be eliminated.

Irving Cummings as Dick, Peggy Pearce as Daisy and William Conklin and Myrtle Stedman as the husband and wife lend exceedingly valuable assistance to the star.

Wouldn't Be Able to Keep 'Em Away From This With a Small-Pox Sign

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

"Sex" is a wonderful audience picture. The title, star, story and production unite in making it the wonder it is in this respect. And as far as advertising value goes you wouldn't be able to keep the crowds away from this if you displayed a small-pox sign over your door. Naturally that title is going to draw them in and a few catch-lines concerning the story and the star will serve to make it even more alluring. And word-of-mouth advertising will do the rest.

People surely like this sort of a story dealing with the Broadway underworld. Tell them about it by using such reading notices as these in your copy. "Adrienne, the toast of Broadway, laughed and profaned the bonds of matrimony but then love came to her and her selfish philosophy boomeranged on her with terrible consequences." "The sanctity of marriage meant nothing to this selfish queen of the roof gardens but the day came when she was to pay!"

Directed by Fred Niblo. Story by C. Gardner Sullivan.

Anyway, the picture has a nice, frank title. An epigrammatist, speaking of the current trend in art, remarked that it is "sex o'clock." And because the sex interest is absolutely the sole interest in C. Gardner Sullivan's story, it is kind of him to come out and brand it so openly.

There is nothing especially shocking or daring about the plot. Louise Glaum plays what we would term a vampire role if Lovella Parsons hadn't told us that Miss Glaum doesn't want to be called a vampire. She has the part of a siren who doesn't see anything unethical about breaking up a home. However, when she marries and has a home and husband of her own, she finds that her philosophy doesn't work. And the sting of the situation comes in the fact that the girl who does the home-wrecking learned her tricks from the reformed siren.

Like most of Mr. Sullivan's stories, it is logical, dramatic and consistently interesting. The action moves leisurely, but it

Not All Is Melodramatic and Emotionalism in This Absorbing Picture, and the Star Varies Her Serious Work With Light Scenes of Coquetry and Abandonment in Which She Is Quite Fascinating—Tale of Retribution Is Powerfully Told.

That old and true adage about reaping what one sows, even the wind and the whirlwind, is the basis of the latest the whirlwind, is the basis of the latest J. Parker Read-Louise Glaum picture which, not very happily, is entitled "Sex." A fine piece of work this feature is, from whatever angle it is viewed, and, if appropriately renamed, it should have as wide success as its predecessor, "The Lone Wolf's Daughter."

When sex is the trunk, root and branches of nine-tenths of the trees in the vast forest of motion pictures, no one photoplay has the right to use it as a title. In this instance, the picture has so many striking aspects that a name reflecting its real dramatic quality would be particularly valuable, and the soft pedal on the sex question and the advertising would not do the family, trade a bit of harm. REVIEWED BY HELEN ROCKWELL.

"AND I learned about women from her"—the oftquoted line of Mr. Kipling's—might have been inspired by Louise Glaum had the famous British poet seen her in her newest photoplay "Sex." For Louise Glaum reveals a few things about the feminine mind and a little more, perhaps of the feminine figure. She does it in typical moving picture vampire fashion—obviously and seductively. It is amusing to note that C. Gardner Sullivan who is responsible for the story shows more acumen and more real intelligence in his writing of the character than the star shows in her rendering of it. Nevertheless, "Sex" is a lavish, arresting and at times startling piece of entertainment which will serve nicely in any theatre where the exhibitor desires to make his audience "sit up and take notice."

There is no lack of the demon rum in "Sex" and—there is no lack of sex. The picture lives up to its title and no one can complain of being lured in under false pretenses. It is chock full of wild scenery of revelry, chorus girl laxities, merry intoxicants, divorces and short skirts. Husbands openly set up chorus girl establishments and tell their wives to go hang. Wives sit at home and brood while the darlings of the Frolic give midnight suppers and dance on the tables. One particularly wild party in the first reel is truly enlightening and deliciously full of thrills.

A good story with an original twist accompanies the revelry. And the logic of it is so sound, and the moral so sure that the end justifies the means. But just the same the realism could be tempered to some degree and give quite as much satisfaction in a more genteel fashion. The settings are lavish and in harmony with the general theme of the picture, and it is evident that expense meant not a thing

J. Parker Read, Jr., Seven-Real Production for Hodkinson Features Louise Glaum in Unsavory Story.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IT is difficult to believe that a screen writer of such fine repute as C. Gardner Sullivan could turn out as tawdry a story as that on which the J. Parker Read, Jr., production "Sex" is based. It is not only tawdry, but immoral, as presented in its seven-reel visualization, which is being released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. Louise Glaum, the featured member of the cast, works overtime in trying to put across the salacious character of Adrienne Renault, but compels admiration in the contrast which she draws between the dancer's personality governed by the loose instincts of her earlier life, and the more demure requirements of decent wifehood.

It is reasonable to believe that in making the picture the director, overly anxious to create an impression, has trusted too much to the spectacular possibilities of the story; for, what might be considered the biggest blot on the picture, occurs when at least a quarter of the first reel of the picture is consumed with the staging of a midnight orgy.

It was a mistake to cast Miss Glaum as a dancer—her attempts to make good in an art at which she is evidently a novice, are a detriment to her otherwise clever performance. Faults in the construction of

When William Fox presented Tom Mix in "THE DAREDEVIL" there were enthusiasts who insisted that it would never be equalled as a production of action and thrill.

It is with pardonable pride, therefore, that Mr. Fox directs the attention of exhibitors everywhere to the newest and indeed the finest drama in all of Tom Mix's history.

This play, "DESERT LOVE," carries you with it, first inviting your interest, then seizing you and holding you by its extraordinary charm and power.

FOX ENTERTAINMENTS

There have been several exceptional examples of the so-called "thrill pictures" which are worthy of long life but in "DESERT LOVE" the play, although abounding in the most amazing daredeviltry, goes beyond mere stunts and crowns all the previous successes of Tom Mix with genuine drama.

This tale of the west was directed by Jacques Jaccard and it has been wonderfully contrived.

We commend this picture to you and ask only that you see it and form your own judgment of it.

FOX ENTERTAINMENTS

In presenting Gladys Brockwell in a new play, "THE MOTHER OF HIS CHILDREN," Mr. Fox has given this really great actress a vehicle which gives full opportunity for her genius to display itself. And, what is quite as important, Miss Brockwell has made the most of the chance afforded.

This story by Barbara LeMarr Deely is in all respects unusual and Edward LeSaint has superbly directed the production.

FOX ENTERTAINMENTS

Mr. Fox takes this occasion to call attention to the richness and beauty of the background of this exciting and absorbing drama of Parisian high life.

In "THE MOTHER OF HIS CHILDREN," it can safely be said, Gladys Brockwell is at her very best and the play itself has high quality and supreme power which makes it one of the greatest productions of the year in point of drama and box office values.

WILL ROGERS in THE STRANGE BOARDER

BY WILL PAYNE

Directed by CLARENCE BADGER

*Star---*The quaint rope-throwing philosopher and humorist, Will Rogers.

*Author---*Will Payne, whose Saturday Evening Post story was read with delight by millions.

*Cast---*An excellent group of contrasting types, including Jimmy Rogers, Irene Rich, James Mason, Lionel Belmore and Doris Pawn.

Jimmy, the four-year old son of Will Rogers, plays his first screen part with a delightful lack of self-consciousness.

*Story---*Will Rogers is seen as Sam Gardner, who, with his little boy, leaves his Arizona ranch to embrace a wonderful "business opportunity" in Chicago.

He loses all his savings to confidence men, and, desperate, attempts to recoup his losses by gambling.

It is here that the strange friendship takes place between Sam Gardner and "Kitty" Hinch, a flashy sport of the underworld. Later, when "Kitty" kills his boss in a fit of jealousy, Sam Gardner proves that a man can risk death and disgrace rather than give up his faith in a friend.

Sam Gardner gives his hand to the man who saved his boy's life—the same man who later brought him into the shadow of the gallows.

*Comment---*This picture is easily the most realistic Will Rogers has ever had.

The star with his wide grin, his homely, intensely likeable personality and general air of sun-tanned, hard-bitten Western honesty, will endear himself to your patrons.

It is a real picture, with a man's-size plot and every element that makes for box-office success.

The Westerner loses his last dollar in Chicago—but wins the priceless love of a splendid girl.

The fires of jealousy burned into his heart and the melody broke into a jangling discord.

The Blackbird had overpowered the white girl when a bullet brought him to his knees.

"Look what I found by the sea. Shall we let it live or drown it?"

The gin-soaked derelict listened in wonder to the words of hope.

Her senses reeled when the giant black caught her in his arms, for she felt all hope was past.

The naked savages traded their pearls to the white men for gew-gaws.

"You love the mission boy, for I am a nobody," accused the Beach-comber bitterly.

The Beach-comber felt for his knife when she smiled bewitchingly at his rival.

She flew at her lover and struck with all the fury of a little savage.

"I don't want to wear smelly mission clothes. I want to dress like the flowers of the fields."

"You never will gain the Promised Land, if you let Pansy's smiles beguile you."

Silently they paddled to the island and waited for the signal to loot the mission compound.

Summoning all his strength he crushed the skull of the cannibal with a blow.

"I am facing the greatest adventure of all," he whispered—
"death."

Violently seizing the Idol Dancer, he crushed her fiercely in his arms.

After the battle the white boy and the black emerged from the cupboard unharmed.

She kissed a Jasmine blossom and placed it on his lips to betoken her love.

The New England boy came to the islands of pleasant dreams in the hope of regaining his health.

A Picture That's Different

The wonderful dancing girl is a unique screen character and a cinch to advertise; you can't help packing them in.

The band of savages, led by the Blackbirder, began to batter down the door of the women's quarter.

The Blackbirder led his savage head-hunters against whites in the village.

There in the shadow of the mission hut, the Scoffer and the Idol Dancer realized their dream of love.

Pansy forsook the path of the righteous when the Head-hunter roared his savage love call.

The sullen blacks awaited the call of the Blackbirder, their master.

The cannibal seized the white girl and dragged her from the mission quarters to his hut.

Sullivan Going Abroad

MOTION PICTURE followers everywhere will say "Bon voyage" to C. Gardner Sullivan, the scenarist, who, on March 31, started on a trip around the world. Offhand we recall no writer who has contributed more to the entertainment of the millions who throng the motion picture houses than has Mr. Sullivan. His work has been along original lines. He has created rather than adapted. He has demonstrated to the world at large—and to a world partly critical and partly hostile—that the screen can thrive on its own literature, that it is not dependent entirely on the efforts of those whose writings originally were intended for exploitation through other media.

The statement of Mr. Sullivan that he likes to write "desert stuff" will cause no surprise among his admirers. His ability to portray the lure and the fascination of sandy wastes constitutes one of his strong points. Fortifying this ability is the facility with which he merges his characters in the atmosphere of the old West. These "men with the bark on" stand out as rugged human beings, not as caricatures of the dime novelist's conception. The author's journeyings into Africa should supply him with a mass of material for future screen stories, and we may be sure that when these reach the public they will be as colorful as were their predecessors of American locale.

Getting a Real Concession

THE Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, an organization of theatre men doing business within the metropolitan district, has demonstrated that it is something more than a "luncheon club," meeting each week to discuss a bill of fare. Through an arrangement with an insurance company the premium on 230 houses has been cut in two—from 22 cents a seat to 11 cents. This means that a thousand-seat theatre will be saved in overhead the sum of $110 annually. President William Brandt and his associates convinced the insurance men that there was no equity in imposing on houses of up-to-date construction the same rates that years ago were levied on "store shows." To prove their case they compiled a list of fifty first-class houses, no one of which had had an accident since the day it was opened.

The achievement again demonstrates the truth of the saying that some things are as easy as others—provided you go after them in the right way and have the goods to back you up.

Don't Expect Too Much

ONE of the high lights of the discussion Sunday evening before the Society of Arts and Sciences was the insistence that the followers of the motion picture must not expect too much, that they must not look to the screen as an art to yield more than has flowed from literature and music.

"All you ever get in a work of art is the one great moment," declared Rupert Hughes. The author went on to say that if in a picture you find five or six hundred feet that strike you as sublime don't expect or demand the continuous run of the height of human endeavor. John Emerson spoke along somewhat parallel lines when he said that "Great works come singly and not in groups." He was speaking in refutation of a recent magazine screed in which a writer had inquired why Griffith didn't make another "Birth of a Nation." "It is given to few people to do more than one great thing," he urged.

The occasion was one of genuine interest to the picture men and women present, and also without doubt to the other diners. Just to give a slant as to the personnel of the members of the society possibly the names of the three vice-presidents will serve. They are Bainbridge Colby, Secretary of State, and Job E. Hedges and John B. Stanchfield.

High Cost of Stage Plays

THE possibility that the Loew-Metro organization may be compelled to produce stage plays on Broadway as a step toward reducing the high cost of screen material is suggested by Richard A. Rowland in a statement printed elsewhere this week. Time was, Metro's president says, when stage producers were quite contented with sums like $5,000 and $10,000 for screen rights to stage plays. Now, he declares, the average is nearer $30,000 to $50,000, and in some cases $50,000 to $150,000.

Another live matter touched upon by Mr. Rowland is that of percentage booking. The statement is made by the Metro chief that the exhibitor will be met half way and that percentage will not be forced.

Kansas Backs New York

AT a convention in Kansas which is said to have included more than half of the exhibitors of the state it was unanimously decided to affiliate with the New York league as the foundation of a national organization. The body further recommended the holding of a national convention at an early date. It may turn out that the recent Utica convention made exhibitor organization history.

The members of the convention also went on record as opposed to percentage, the deposit system and the prevailing contract. R. G. Liggett, of the Gene Gauntier Theatre in Kansas City, was elected president. Mr. Liggett is a brother of the one time well-known motion picture player for whom his house is named.

It is reported the national convention may be held in Cleveland about June 1.

As to Projection Equipment

IN these days of delay in manufacturing and still further delay in freight and express shipments the importance of being fully supplied with spare parts of projection room equipment is magnified, especially to the manager whose house is far from the center of supply. An official of a projection manufacturing concern points out that forehandedness in this respect may save the picture man much time and possibly many dollars. Also he calls attention to the desirability of keeping in reserve parts that were made for the machine of which ultimately they may become a piece; in other words, of the disadvantages that follow from an attempt to incorporate in one machine replacements designed to fit one of another make and design.

Pickford-Fairbanks Wedding Celebrated in Los Angeles

MARY PICKFORD and Douglas Fairbanks were married in Los Angeles on Sunday, March 28, by the Rev. J. Whitcomb Brounger, pastor of the Temple Baptist Church. Present at the ceremony were the bride's mother, Mrs. Charlotte Smith; Robert Fairbanks, a brother of the bridegroom; the Rev. Henry Miles Cook, assistant pastor of the Temple Baptist Church; Margery Daw, and R. S. Sparks, deputy county clerk. Mr. Fairbanks was best man and Miss Daw was bridesmaid.

The license had been issued at a dinner party at the Fairbanks home in Beverly Hills the preceding Friday night. The occasion was in honor of the prospective bride, with the minister and license clerk as guests.

On Monday evening a dinner was given to close friends at the Fairbanks home, followed by a reception, at which the bride and bridegroom received the congratulations of their Los Angeles friends, including many of the members of the motion picture colony.

Couple will sail for Europe May 19 and return in September. Mary has no intention of quitting the screen.

Indianapolis Showmen Laud Defeat of Daylight Saving

INDIANAPOLIS exhibitors are elated over the fact that the city council, by a vote of six to two, rejected a proposed daylight saving ordinance which, had it passed, would have meant a loss of many thousands of dollars to the owners of motion picture houses.

One of the chief opponents of the proposed ordinance was Gustave Schmidt, owner of the Crystal Theatre and president of the city council.

According to information received by Ralph W. Abbett, manager of the Universal Film exchange, of Indianapolis, exhibitors generally throughout the city were opposed to the proposed ordinance.

Representatives of Indianapolis civic organizations appeared before the council in support of or in opposition to the proposed measure, and at the conclusion of their arguments for or against, a majority of the council expressed an opinion that the people of the city do not desire such a measure. They said also that attorneys had advised that the city charter does not give the council the right to pass an ordinance of the kind.

Burglars Loot Indianapolis and Connorsville Theatres

FOUR neighborhood motion picture theatres in Indianapolis were entered on Tuesday night, March 23. Only lenses and other parts from the projection machines were taken. The theatres entered are the North Star, operated by A. C. Zaring, at Twenty-fifth street and Central avenue; F. W. Neal's Theatre at 2201 Shelby street; the Alacazar at 2174 North Illinois street, and the Garrick Theatre at 2961 North Illinois street.

Detectives have learned that the burglaries were committed by four men, visiting the various theatres in an automobile. The men were seen entering the Garrick Theatre by persons in the neighborhood, but made their escape before the police could be notified. The aggregate loss has been estimated at approximately $1,500.

The safe in the box office of the Auditorium Theatre, Connorsville, Ind., which is operated by J. C. Schilling, was blown open early Monday morning, March 22, and the yeggmen escaped with approximately $1,500—the receipts of all the Sunday moving picture shows and the advance receipts of a stage production which was scheduled for Tuesday night.

The cracksmen gained entrance by forcing open an alley door. They ripped down some costly new velvet draperies and used them to muffle the sound of the explosion. A heavy charge of nitroglycerin was used.

Massachusetts Legislature Considers New Censor Bill

A MODIFIED moving picture censorship bill has been presented to the Massachusetts House of Representatives by the legislative committee on mercantile affairs. The vote of the whole committee was nine to three, with three members not recorded.

The plan for a state board of censors, provided in the measure presented by the state committee on motion pictures, was discarded by a sub-committee of the whole legislative committee. This sub-committee drew up a new bill which in turn was handed to the house. Censorship powers under the new bill would be placed in the hands of Col. Alfred P. Foote, of Holyoke, state commissioner on public safety.

Every motion picture desired by exhibitors to be shown in Massachusetts would be censored under the terms of the new bill. Col. Foote or a committee from his department would do the censoring. The censorship fee would be $1 for 1,000 feet or less and $2 for a reel of more than 1,000 feet. The commissioner of public safety would have power to appoint a subordinate at an annual salary of $3,500. This subordinate would take immediate charge of the work.

Shortly after receiving the new measure the House of Representatives referred it to the House ways and means committee. This committee later will hold hearings on the new bill.

Already two hearings have been held by the mercantile affairs committee. It looks as though the fight over the measure will be so prolonged that it will not be possible for the legislature to act on it in these closing days of this session and that it may "die a natural death," as many hope it will.

Bill Would Let Little Tots Attend Shows Unaccompanied

A BILL has been introduced in the New York State Legislature by Senator Salvatore Cotillo which if passed will permit children between the ages of 10 and 16 years to attend motion picture theatres in the state unaccompanied during certain hours of the day and evening. After school hours and before 8 o'clock at night, unaccompanied children are to be permitted to attend such houses as have a space set aside for children and which have a matron selected by the local society for the prevention of cruelty to children, or some other equally as well qualified society.

The bill was introduced only last week and has been sent to committee following the usual course of proceedings. There has been quite a little sentiment already manifested in favor of the bill and it is expected that it will shortly be reported out of committee and go to a vote.

District Showmen Protest Against Express Conditions

Kansas Exhibitors to Join with New York in Establishing a National Organization

(By Wire to Moving Picture World.)

THE Kansas State Exhibitors' Association at its annual convention in Wichita on Monday, March 29, went on record as opposed unanimously to percentage, the present deposit system and prevailing contract. The organization also passed a resolution endorsing the Utica convention and recommending the holding of a national convention at an early date. It was unanimously decided to affiliate with the New York State Exhibitors' League as the foundation of a national organization.

More than one-half of the exhibitors of the state attended. R. G. Liggett, of the Gene Gauntier Theatre, Kansas City, was elected president after R. M. Miller declined the position, which he has so ably filled for two years. P. S. Harrison, editor of Harrison's Reports, of New York, was the principal speaker of the day. He dwelt on problems of the industry today and bitterly attacked the percentage plan.

"enjoyed" is somewhat less speedy than that afforded by the railroads' freight cars. "The situation is intolerable," declare officials of the association. "Merchants report that it takes anywhere from three to ten days to get matter by express from New York to Washington, where it should take but one day. If we are to have express companies, they should live up to their name. We have been told by many merchants in the city that matter sent by freight reaches them as soon as does express matter."

Coincident with the announcement that an investigation of conditions is to be made on behalf of the merchants, the American Railway Express Company announced that new efforts are to be made to improve the standards of the express service throughout the country. In a statement of its aims the company urges shippers to be patient and to lend their co-operation in bettering the service. It is declared that a great many changes in methods are being introduced, which it is expected will eventually show results very satisfactory to shippers.

Booth Tarkington to Write Scenarios for His Cousin

BOOOTH TARKINGTON has signed a contract whereby he agrees, during the current year, to write directly for the screen. Tarkington Baker, who has just resigned as general manager of production for Universal to start his own company, is the man who signed up the famous novelist.

Up to the present time Mr. Tarkington has been averse to writing for the screen. Not many months ago he, with other prominent authors, expressed himself as dubious of the screen as a medium of expression. He believed then that producers were too much inclined to sacrifice all other considerations to plot alone.

Thereafter Mr. Tarkington turned a deaf ear to all efforts on the part of producers to induce him to write for them. Eventually, however, he was persuaded to write a series of two-reel "boy" stories for Goldwyn. But there his yielding ceased.

When Tarkington Baker decided to make pictures for himself he hurried out to see Tarkington, who is his cousin. It is related that Baker arrived in Indianapolis at 10 o'clock at night. At 10.30 o'clock he was in conference with Mr. Tarkington. The conference ended at 8 A. M., when the pair had breakfast.

Mr. Baker, it is announced, will sign similar contracts with at least three more authors of world-wide prominence.

Screen to Show Serbians' Most Up-to-Date Methods

THROUGHOUT Serbia there are few moving picture houses. That is an art that has not yet been generally introduced to that country. In Belgrade and a few other larger cities continental companies have set up their machines. Recently Famous Players has taken out a license from the Serbian Board of Trade.

Motion pictures are utilized by the Serbian Child Welfare Association of America, through its National Birthday Committee, 7 West Eighth street, New York, to show Serbian families how approved scientific methods require up-to-date methods.

The greatest difficulty has been to procure electric current in some of the small outlying towns. The Red Cross has solved this problem by sending its projector in an auto truck which is touring the country in the interests of better health.

Hugh Woody Heads Capitol, Succeeding S. L. Barnhard

AT a special meeting of the board of directors of Capitol Film Company, held March 29, Hugh Woody, a prominent Indiana banker, was elected president to succeed S. L. Barnhard, who also retired from the directorate. B. Herbert Milligan, of Chicago, treasurer, takes the place of former President Barnhard in the directorate and also assumes the duties of general manager relinquished by C. E. Eckels, who has also left the employ of the organization.

As an indication of their desire to place Capitol in the front rank of the aggressively independent and enterprising producing companies, the directors voted the new management $150,000 to be immediately available for the proper development of Capitol's new policies and the production and exploitation of super-special Capitol features recently determined upon. With all of these important questions the new president, Mr. Woody, is thoroughly familiar, as he has spent the past month in the general offices of the company in Chicago making a certain study of rapidly increasing business and of the broadened policies of the original company.

Mr. Milligan, whose experience as vice president of the Creation Films and managing director of the Kalem Studios has been of great advantage to the Capitol, brings to his new duties a high reputation as an organizer gained by his experience as the executive head of one of Chicago's well known financial institutions.

Jake Wells Rehabilitating Richmond Theatrical Field

PRESIDENT JAKE WELLS, of the Vany Realty Corporation, Richmond, Va., has announced the acquisition of sites for two new theatres, the purchase of the Bijou Theatre and plans for its enlargement, as part of a $2,000,000 plan for the complete rehabilitation of the Richmond theatrical field. The Bijou and Isis theatres will be eventually combined into a large motion picture house to seat more than 2,000. The Isis was bought recently for $80,000. The selling price of the Bijou is said to have been about $14,000.

The first work will be the erection of a new home for Keith vaudeville on North Fifth street to seat 2,500. At First and Clay streets a theatre for colored productions and people, with a seating capacity of 1,400, will be built. The Academy of Music will continue as the principal entertainment house and the Strand may possibly become a repertoire stock or musical comedy and picture house. Mr. Wells also proposes to make the Odean Theatre, a picture house, an ideal "family" theatre.

When the proposed work is completed, Richmond will have three theatres seating more than 2,000 each and seven seating more than 1,000 each.

Containers Must Be Securely Fastened.

A note of warning has been issued to the officials of all film companies in the form of a bulletin which has been sent out by Chairman P. H. Stilson, of the transportation committee of the National Association, calling attention to a recent order of the president's office of the American Railway Express Company, which provides that covers of motion picture film conveyors must be sealed or otherwise securely fastened so as to prevent the covers from becoming unfastened in transit.

It is important that all distributors should thoroughly acquaint themselves with this ruling in order to prevent controversy with express company employees and to avoid the possible refusal of express shipments.

Federated Film Exchanges Is Formed at Independent Producers Convention

Great Gathering in Chicago Also Organizes Film Clearing House and Agrees on What Each Shall Produce—Joseph Brandt Delivers Keynote Address—To Wage Publicity Campaign—J. L. Friedman Is President

By JAMES S. McQUADE.

THE independent producers opened their convention at the Congress Hotel, Chicago, Wednesday afternoon, March 24, with Joe Brandt, of the National Film Corporation, of New York, as chairman.

Wednesday's session and Thursday's forenoon session were mainly devoted to the discussion of the number of reels that could be produced by their combined efforts for independent exchanges; also as to whether or not they would guarantee the product outlined and whether they were ready to form a Film Clearing House, similar in many respects to the old Sales Company of about eight years ago. All these matters were fully decided upon and adjournment was made after Thursday's morning session to submit the plans adopted to the independent exchange convention, at Thursday's evening session.

List of Subjects Agreed Upon

Following is the list of subjects which the independent producers agreed to make for independent exchanges, after careful deliberation:

Louis Burston, Burston Films, Inc., New York City, six to eight features of at least five reels each; twelve two-reel drawing room comedies and one serial.

C. L. Chester Productions, Inc., New York City, one travel picture or scenic and a one-reel comedy.

Murray W. Garsson and Charles Scherlin, eight features.

Capital Film Company, Chicago, a two-reel railroad drama, a two-reel slap-stick comedy, a two-reel western and eight five-reel westerns.

Jack Cohen, New York City, twelve educational one-reel pictures, twenty-six two-reel comedies and twenty-six two-reel slapsticks.

Harry Sherman, Los Angeles, eight to ten features, of five to seven reels each.

Marion Kohn Productions, San Francisco, a two-reel comedy drama, western, a one-reel novelty digest, a two-reel slap-stick comedy and a one-reel straight comedy.

National Film Corporation, Hollywood, Cal., one two-reel society comedy, one two-reel slap-stick comedy, six five-reel features and three serials.

A. H. Sawyer; six features, of five to seven reels.

Arrow Film Corporation, New York City, four super features.

Sidney L. Cohan Film Corporation, Los Angeles, ten five or seven-reel features.

At Thursday night's joint session, in the Congress Hotel, which was held after the banquet given by J. L. Friedman, president of Celebrated Players, to the assembled independent producers and exchangemen and other guests, Joseph Brandt, of the National Film Corporation, New York, read the following address, which is a summary of the deliberations of the independent producers and the plan outlined by them for the consideration of the independent exchange men:

"In order that your organization may have before it in its deliberations the facts which have been brought out at a meeting of the producers of pictures for the independent market, we respectfully desire to submit to your organization the following:

"The independent producers have for some time past endeavored to formulate a plan whereby the independent exchanges could secure negatives immediately after they had been finished at the studios, and for that reason they welcome the opportunity of meeting this organization and expressing their views at a time when this discussion is probably the one topic that will be most important in your deliberations.

Fair Division of Negative Cost.

"The independent producers are more than anxious to produce pictures especially for the independent field, if they can feel that there is an organization that can buy pictures regularly and at a fair price. At the outset the producers want to go on record by saying that they do not favor, nor have they ever countenanced, any movement that would tend to make the independent exchanges bear the burden of an excessive negative cost. Every producer who has sold his goods in the independent field has made an honest attempt to schedule his price, per territory, fairly, but unfortunately the number of territories that remained open made it necessary for the producer to charge an additional amount in some of the territories that were particularly anxious to secure his product.

"The producers believe that if this organization of exchangemen can be perfected, a stipulated cost for pictures can be established and a legitimate profit guaranteed to the producer, based upon the acceptance and the sale of his product in all of the territories in the United States and Canada. The producers are sure that a proportionate charge can be made which will be fairly distributed among all of the exchanges in all territories and that through a co-operative exchange organization the amounts required for the unsold territories can be satisfactorily distributed, or the territory disposed of, so that the members collectively will bear a proportionate share of the negative cost.

"With this idea in mind and anticipating that your organization will become perfected and that you will underwrite a sufficient amount of money that will guarantee the financial stability of your organization, the producers have decided to perfect an organization which for the time being shall be known as the Film Clearing House. The sole purpose of this organization shall be to act as a clearing house for all negatives that you may desire, these negatives to be acquired for you at a price which will enable you to make a reasonable profit and which guarantees to the producer the necessary profit for him to remain in business. You will find attached the product that has been offered by the various producers and it is for you to decide exactly how many of these subjects you want and how often you will want them. The Film Clearing House will have sufficient financial backing to guarantee every contract that is made with it by your organization, and under the contract, which will be executed by each producer, your organization will be assured of a standard product of the necessary quality for a period of at least three years.

No Threat of Compulsion.

"Heretofore, you have been obliged to seek your product in any field that you could find. The money that you had spent to exploit these pictures was practically wasted and you honestly felt that you were taken advantage of by the producers. Under the present plan it is intended that you shall have a subject featuring a star, acceptable to you, just as long as you desire and just as long as you feel it is profitable for you to keep that star on your program.

"There is nothing in the plan which is proposed that will compel you to take any series of pictures that are not profitable for you to handle. By a vote of your purchasing committee or your general finance committee, the Film Clearing House, upon proper notice being given, will be obligated to cancel contracts providing for the distribution of subjects featuring a star who is not making money for you, and will provide for the substitution of a star who will.

"One of the big factors that has made the big program organizations so profitable is the fact that they have spent money regularly in the consistent and persistent advertising and exploiting of their stars and their subjects, so as to keep them prominently before the public and before their exhibitors.

Special Attention to Publicity.

"Under the plan of the Film Clearing House, a stipulated amount has been set aside for advertising and exploiting every star and every picture released through the Film Clearing House. Under their contract with the producer they will employ the best person or persons available to exploit and give publicity to all products released through the Film Clearing House and will send these special exploitation men into various local exchange territories, whenever needed, to bring the product properly before the public and the exhibitors.

"The advertising and exploitation campaign referred to, particularly provides for the continuous advertising of all subjects contracted for by you and the inclusion of the names of individual franchise holders in each territory. This campaign is to be continuous, for fifty-two consecutive weeks in each year, during the period of years provided for in the contract. The subjects you are distributing and the individual franchise holders will be kept prominently before the trade and the public.

To Sell Accessories at Cost.

"You know, only too well, that a great many producers have very often stopped their advertising and exploitation campaign immediately after the territory for a picture had been sold, and it was a rare occasion when your name was included in the advertising. It is the intention of the Film Clearing House to make your subjects so well known in each individual territory that 50 per cent. of the sales work will have been done before your sales force gets in the field. And further than that, the continuous advertising and exploitation will keep the product in front of the public, so that your customers will derive the benefit and in return you and the producers will profit thereby.

"The subject of advertising accessories will also be one of the important service and money-saving features of the Film Clearing House. All advertising accessories will be sold at cost, plus a normal profit, and a great saving in cost can be effected because the Film Clearing House will know exactly how much material to order. This will eliminate the waste which has been prevalent heretofore and will enable the Film Clearing House to buy supplies at a minimum figure. A plan will be perfected whereby advertising accessories will be sent to you far enough in advance so as to absolutely avoid the delays which have so often resulted in the cancellation of service.

"The financial conditions and purchasing ability of each producer is guaranteed by the Film Clearing House, and under its contract with each producer it will be impossible for them to switch to any other program or any other field for the period of years they have agreed to supply their product to the Film Clearing House.

Guarantee Required of Producers.

"The Film Clearing House has also made it obligatory upon every producer to guarantee that he will pay the damages that have been incurred by an exchange on account of the failure to deliver negatives and prints on time, and the Film Clearing House will see to it that any loss that you may suffer by reason of the cancellation of contracts or any moneys you referred to exhibitors, on account of failure to deliver subjects to you on time, will be repaid you.

"It is for you to determine what subjects you want because the Film Clearing House is not going to release pictures that are not satisfactory to your entire organization. It is for you to determine whether or not the independent exchanges are going to secure a regular supply of subjects of the standard you want and at the time you want them. The producers stand ready to sell their product to you on a fair basis, but you must be prepared to guarantee them that, collectively, you are able to back up your demands by an organization that is financially sound and able to carry out its obligations.

Have Finances to Aid Independents.

"You must realize that self preservation is the first law of nature. The independent producers, with such a combined output as the Film Clearing House will be able to offer, are in a position to help materially those men in the independent field who are sincere in their desire to stay in it. In territories where such men cannot be found, the Film Clearing House will be prepared to finance any person or persons you may select, who will creditably represent your organization and profitably handle the subjects of the producers.

"If such a man cannot be found by you, the producers will secure one. You gentlemen must get together, because the independent producer cannot continue to make pictures knowing that he is constantly gambling with from 40 to 50 per cent. of the territory, on account of men who haven't the nerve to handle better, bigger pictures and who do not know how to exploit pictures properly in order to get the greatest maximum gross out of them.

Guarantee Perfect Representation.

"There is nothing that the big program organization can produce that you cannot have, if you can guarantee to the independent producer that you have the money to pay for it and, furthermore, the ability after you have paid your money to make a profit on your investment. There is no security for the producer, if he is to make pictures for you, unless you are prepared to exploit them properly and get out of the picture all that should be gotten out of it in the territory. The Film Clearing House has perfected plans that will absolutely guarantee 100 per cent. representation in every territory where their subjects are released.

"It is for you to decide whether you, (Continued on page 252.)

Screen Has Elevated Public Taste, Says Emerson at Arts-Science Dinner

IN six years the motion picture has elevated public taste to the point where a first-class play will be supported, declared John Emerson at the dinner of the Society of Arts and Sciences at the Biltmore on the evening of Sunday, March 28. Motion pictures had been selected as the sole topic of the evening, and present as the guests of the society were many representatives of the industry. Mr. Emerson said that if David Griffith never made another picture his fame was secure by reason of "The Birth of a Nation." He further said that "Great works come singly and not in groups."

Rupert Hughes previously had declared that "All you ever get in a work of art is the one great moment." The author stated that we are living in an age which people a thousand years from now will look back upon with envy, that the men who now are making pictures are doing a work as great as was that of those who staged Shakespeare's plays.

The evening was one of marked interest. The great ballroom of the hotel was filled with the members of the society and their guests and the speakers were followed with close and appreciative attention. Augustus Thomas was toastmaster, and he was his own inimitable self. He introduced in turn, besides Mr. Hughes and Mr. Emerson, Whitman Bennett, Roi Cooper Megrue, Charles C. Pettijohn and Anita Loos.

There was another speaker, Dr. Edward Rolt-Wheeler, former clergyman, announced as "The Devil's Disciple," whose mission it was stated was to say as many bad things about motion pictures as he could collate and utter.

Screen Financing Show Business.

The Disciple was not an enthusiastic success. Apparently he aimed to be smart and by employing an attempted facetious style to be able to get over matter that uttered seriously would be laughed at. While a few of his listeners were inclined to take him at his own value the majority were mildly amused when they were not bored. Mr. Thomas remarked as the advocate sat down that the most promising things said by him were that there would be a moving picture theatre on every corner in hell and that the Disciple would be on hand to greet the picture men on arrival.

Mr. Bennett said in opening that the picture business to no small degree is financing the show business. "The motion picture is not going to replace the stage nor the stage the motion picture," he said. "Three or four organizations of great wealth undoubtedly have done a great deal to develop the picture. Within the last year there has come into our trade a new individualism. It is leading to specialization. One of the elements of progress in the picture business in the next two years is going to be individual attention on the part of capable men to the making of comparatively few subjects."

"I have been working on a hundred five-reel pictures in the last year. That is too many. I don't want to talk business politics to a general gathering, but I look forward to a new era in motion pictures when there will be a limited production."

Megrue Envy the Plumber.

"In my experience in the legitimate theatre I have found that not only does every one feel capable of rewriting a play but that they insist on it," said Mr. Megrue. He paid his respects to the plumber as a representative of a trade the followers of which never were told they did not know their business. In closing he gave a bit of statistical data which he had prepared. As an example he quoted: "Number of eastern studios projected in 1919, 1204; number built, 2."

The One Great Moment.

Mr. Hughes expressed a mild curiosity as to why the Society of Arts and Sciences was discussing motion pictures. "Motion pictures are not an art, they are not a science," he went on, "and those who have invested in them know they are not a business." The speaker outlined some of the hardships he had experienced at the hands of the continuity writer, telling of one instance where he discovered on viewing the finished work of the producer that the continuity writer had "screened him very prettily."

"All you ever get in a work of art is the one great moment," said Mr. Hughes. "When you go into a motion picture theatre and you see a production of five or six reels or more and there are five or six hundred feet that strike you as sublime don't expect or demand the continuous run of the height of human endeavor." The speaker said sometimes he was disappointed in a picture because he had entered the theatre with his hopes too high.

Picture of Today Is Not Bad.

"I am willing to risk my reputation in saying we are living in a period which people a thousand years from now will look back upon with envy," Mr. Hughes continued. He enumerated a number of men, including Shakespeare and his contemporaries, who were not appreciated in their own time. "The picture men today are doing as great work as did the men who put on Shakespeare's plays," the speaker went on. "Don't let anybody fool you that the picture is bad today. So was Shakespeare in his day. He was compelled to cater to the whim of his period by injecting matter foreign to his story. You read 'Julius Caesar' and you will find local kinks for the benefit of the Broadway of his day."

"One thing people resent a great deal is censorship. I don't believe it ever accomplished anything for the morals of the world. Girls have gone wrong and always will go wrong, using the word wrong as we use the word right—I don't know."

When a Play Is Not Bad.

Mr. Hughes entered upon a discussion of morals, to the evident concern if not dismay of some of the diners. Reverting to the incident of the bathing girls comedy in the small western town—a subject introduced by Mr. Thomas and which kept cropping up during the evening—the speaker declared if all men and women in the world went stark naked there would be less vice in the world.

Mr. Thomas complimented Mr. Hughes at the conclusion of his speech. "I always have had great admiration for you," he said, "but it has been increased this evening." Mr. Thomas related a story of Thomas Clarke, to whom some one had remarked that a certain production was a bad play. "No, it is not," declared Mr. Clarke. "There was a moment in it when I forgot I was in a theatre. It is not a bad play.

John Cumberland Is Seen Here Enacting the Policy of Watchful Waiting.

In this particular instance it paid too. See what he is getting in the last picture. These are a few society "shots" from Pathe's new release, named "The Stimulating Mrs. Barton."

Exhibitor the Backbone, Says Pettijohn.

"I have always been impressed with the fact that the man who runs the theatre is the backbone of this industry," declared Mr. Pettijohn after paying his respects to the Devil's Disciple. "The day when the exhibitors will be organized is coming, in fact it is almost here. In New York State it already is here, and the movement is extending to the South and Southwest. These groups soon will be formed in one compact organization.

"No one denies that pictures have a great power, but the large question is the employment of that power for good or evil. Let me point out some things pictures have done. The day after war was declared pictures were organized for our government. I don't know how many people are aware that the first ammunition sent into France was not in the form of powder and bullets but in that of motion picture film. The morale of the allied troops was so low they had been led to believe we were a race of people who would not and could not fight and were not going to France, but when these films outlining the many activities of the government were shown in the front lines the soldiers over there knew Uncle Sam was coming. So you see pictures did their small bit in the work of the war."

Screen Has Helped Stage.

Mr. Emerson prefaced his remarks by suggesting that as films were made of celluloid he was curious to know how the devil had been able to see any pictures. The speaker immediately plunged into a reply to a recent article by George Jean Nathan in Smart Set in which it was alleged among other things that pictures were responsible for the decline of the stage.

"Not in eighteen years of closely following the theatre in New York have I seen so many worthwhile plays as in the last twelve months," Mr. Emerson declared. He named twenty-three subjects that in one year to April 1, 1920, had been successfully produced in New York City. "I am counting as a success," he said, "any play that people will pay their money to see. Now this means that the taste of the public has been raised to the point where it will support any first-class play. I know of only one play in twelve months that was well written and well produced that failed—and that was because it had a war angle and came just at the close of hostilities when people were tired of plays of that sort.

"I say thank God for the movies and more power to their good right arm. It is said that three-fourths of the movies are dull and stupid. The same proportion holds good in the case of plays, of music. But that proves nothing except what we all know—that three-fourths of the people produced in this or any other country are dull and stupid. Of course, we all belong to the other fourth.

Tribute to Griffith Film.

"We have only had six years to work. Do you know I would like to pick out a jury of thousands of people throughout the world and ask them what evening in the theatre gave them the most continuous thrill and enjoyment. I venture to say a majority of them would say 'The Birth of a Nation.' For intensity of emotion, for power, for great, broad sweep, there never was anything within four walls to equal that production. The writer in Smart Set asks why Griffith doesn't do it again. It is given to few people to do more than one great thing. Homer wrote only two poems that we hear much about." Mr. Emerson went down the line of men who were great by reason of a single achievement.

"Take the most extraordinary man that ever lived in this world," he said, "a scientist, an architect; a builder of bridges, of engines of war; a supremely great painter and a sculptor; a philosopher, a great inventor; he invented a flying machine—it couldn't fly much, but it could plane down from a height; the busiest man in the world—take Leonardo da Vinci. He worked on an equestrian statue and it took him seventeen years to build only the horse; and you want Griffith to make another 'Birth of a Nation.'"

"Great works come singly and not in groups. Dozens of good pictures have been made since that time. The work of those at this table gives us an honorable place in the fine arts."

Anita Loos Makes Mirth.

Anita Loos said that while she had been asked to speak on scenario writing she had decided to read one that had been submitted for consideration, in the belief the diners should understand what the public is missing. The tale was entitled, "The Hereditary Taxidermist," alleged to have been given to the world by a California maiden. A sub-title indicated the story was "A tragedy motion picture." A sub-subtitle set forth also that it was educational in that it showed taxidermy.

The script traced the evil influence of the taxidermist strain on the daughter: "All day long she stuffs chickens." Even the dog of a neighbor is the victim of an irresistible impulse to transfer the inside of a sofa to the interior of the canine. "When her child is born it is born with this hereditary taint—it wants to stuff everything." Miss Loos' effort made one of the hits of the night.

"River's End" Does Weekly Gross Business of $75,000

WHAT is conceded by motion picture sales experts to be the record on the weekly gross business of a photoplay after the first runs have been completed was reached last week by Marshall Neilan's first independent production released through First National, "The River's End." In its fourth week after release date, contracts for the production were approved by the Marshall Neilan organization aggregating $75,000.

This total sale for one week, it was pointed out at the Neilan offices in New York, is not the result of a concentrated sales drive for a given period to attain a record amount, as is often done by companies desiring to make an exceptional showing, but comes as natural sales resulting from the exceptional business to which the photoplay is playing wherever booked.

It is claimed that never before has the fourth week of a film booked into motion picture theatres achieved such an amount in weekly sales. The contracts approved during the past week include bookings in some of the smallest towns in the United States at record rentals. Extended bookings have been the rule and many exhibitors have seen the advisability of holding the film over for another week.

An instance of how the picture is overcoming all obstacles in hanging up new records for exhibitors is pointed out in a telegram received by C. R. Beacham, manager of the First National exchange in Atlanta, from the Fashion Beaux Arts Theatre, Palm Beach, as follows: "You might like to know that although the closing week of the season, when the population is dwindling, Marshall Neilan's 'The River's End' broke all house records for attendance in history of Beaux Arts today. I unreservedly state it to be one of the very finest pictures it has been my privilege to present."

Rowland Denies Loew Is Interested in or Affiliated With Any Other Firm

Says Company May Be Compelled to Sponsor Shows on Broadway Stage Owing to Mounting Cost of Play Scripts—Will Not Compel Percentage Booking but Will Adopt It with Showmen Who May Desire It

IN a statement of Loew-Metro policy Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, emphatically denies that Marcus Loew or the Loew-Metro affiliation is interested in or connected with any other producing and distributing organization.

Mr. Rowland's denial was in refutation of recent rumors, reaching exhibitors of the country and the trade in general, that Loew-Metro has entered into a combination aiming to secure a monopoly of the producing and distributing ends of the motion picture industry.

That Loew-Metro may be compelled to produce stage plays on Broadway as a step

"The same protection which he secured for himself Mr. Loew is now willing to extend to others. In other words, he offers to exhibitors everywhere, and particularly the smaller exhibitors, the opportunity to bring to their theatres the Loew-Metro specials under a protective franchise arrangement. This protective franchise would not only insure a steady supply of quality pictures that would build up the business and prestige of these houses against any opposition, but Mr. Loew would willingly arrange to extend vaudeville bookings to such theatres as wanted that form of amusement to supplement their screen entertainment."

"Will Not Force Percentage."

Touching upon the much discussed question of percentage booking, the Metro president's statement has this to say:

"We have given the subject of percentage booking considerable thought. It presents a situation, however, in which we have no axe to grind; we are willing to let the cat jump either way it will. Loew-Metro will not force percentage booking upon the exhibitor. We shall, as in the past, continue to accept a flat rental for our releases wherever that method is the wish of the exhibitor himself.

"While we will not force the percentage system of payment for subjects, we will meet the exhibitor half way and adopt it with individual showmen who find that it is the more desirable of the two. By co-operative experiment both producer and showman will eventually arrive at a satisfactory basis of agreement."

"The present exorbitant prices asked for stage scripts amounts to nothing short of a hold-up," the Rowland statement continues. "In the last six or seven months the valuations placed on stage plays—so soon as it is discovered that picture producers are after them—have soared to almost unbelievable heights. Where we used to be able to get a screen story for from $5,000 to $10,000, theatrical producers now think nothing of charging from $50,000 to $150,000, and in some cases more than these fabulous sums for the rights to a stage success.

May Produce Stage Plays.

"This condition may force us into the field as stage producers. If we should it would be on the theory that it would actually save money on the gross overhead cost of a film production of the play later. When it is considered that now a screen producer must pay an average of $30,000 or $50,000 for a bare script, and that he could produce an original play in the theatre for about $10,000 to $15,000, stand to recover his initial outlay on the success of the play and still retain it as a screen vehicle, the reason for such a move becomes apparent."

"We will make approximately fifty major releases during the ensuing year, beginning early in the fall," said Mr. Rowland, in speaking of production policy. "In the majority, the special productions will be all-star cast pictures. We will, of course, retain our present stars, and we expect that the all-star productions will develop new screen players of outstanding merit, who, if they demonstrate their fitness and popularity, will be given early opportunity for further conquests as featured players with notable surrounding ensembles.

"In the making of our specials, our studios in the east and west will be utilized. The western studios in Hollywood will be in charge of Joseph W. Engel, as general manager. Our Sixty-first street studios in New York will be under Maxwell Karger. Moreover we will erect new studios, somewhere in the close vicinity of New York; but our plans for this modern establishment are not now ready for announcement in detail.

"Before long we expect to make known the name of an important addition to our list of stars. This player is an actor who toward reducing the mounting cost of literary material for the screen; that the company will not force the percentage system upon exhibitors, but will adopt it if they desire it; that the coming year will see an output of approximately fifty Loew-Metro specials, mostly with all-star casts, and that a popular male star will soon be added to the Loew-Metro roster are some of the highlights in the Metro president's statement.

Production Cost Much Higher.

In addition, Mr. Rowland points out that production costs have risen all around to such an extent that they have become almost prohibitive. Loew-Metro will make every effort to prevent waste in any quarter and curtail expenses wherever possible, without stinting the quality of its productions, but the Metro president makes it plain that this increasing expense may ultimately fall in some measure upon the exhibitor who should be prepared to meet it.

"Mr. Loew is not interested in any producing or distributing organization other than Loew-Metro. We reiterate what Mr. Loew made public when he acquired the controlling interest in Metro Pictures Corporation—that he did it to protect himself.

occupies a position in the very forefront of the American stage.

"In the matter of short subjects we will distribute some two-reel comedies. Buster Keaton, who has achieved considerable of a name for himself in Roscoe Arbuckle comedies, has been engaged for a prominent part in our forthcoming production of 'The New Henrietta.' He will be featured in eight of those two-reel comedies to be made by Joseph Schenck.

"All of the forthcoming Loew-Metro specials will be quality productions in every sense of the term," he says. "They will be as fine as it is humanly possible to make them. We are prepared to go to the limit of liberality in money expended, and will allow our directors ample time to turn out artistically developed products.

"I know it to be a fact that several motion picture producing companies have been seriously affected because the inflated cost of production has been too much for them. The exhibitors must realize that ultimately some of this increased cost of producing pictures must be borne by them.

"Without neglecting any necessary artistic detail Loew-Metro will conscientiously endeavor to pare down wastage to overhead expenses for the exhibitor's benefit; but it cannot control an economic condition that has the whole world guessing."

Combing Moving Picture World Ten Years Ago

SO modest are present day "grown ups" in an industry reported to be only in its infancy that we must, despite our pleas for "dope" on the present generation, rely upon Moving Picture World dated April 9, 1910, for the history here to be recorded. Almost are we tempted to repeat: "News was scarce then days."

The Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company (likened to the Patents Company without patents) had just been formed—first "Big Bertha" discharged in a fight that was on to the death between "Independents" and "Dependents." The Executive Committee of the National Independent Moving Picture Alliance was in session at the Hotel Imperial.

Remember Those "Imperial" Sessions?

Whenever the "ins" or "outs" drew moving picture men of America into session, all hands hurried hither and the Imperial put on extra help to accommodate the rush to the mahogany. It was a great gathering—no matter who called the factions to "line up" and be served! It is believed the expression "exhibitors service" originated at these Imperial sessions.

The Motion Picture D. & S. Company had named Carl Laemmle, president; Adam Kessel, Jr., vice-president; Charles O. Baumann, treasurer; Thomas D. Cochrane, secretary. The active management of the Sales Company was delegated to Mr. Cochrane and Mr. Baumann.

Carl Laemmle announced that he had "dispatched an agent to establish depots for Imp films in the leading European cities." Just that much of an announcement that would be press-agented to a couple-a pages in these mature days of trade-paper usefulness.

The First "Unit Program."

Sam Rothapfel, in another contribution to Moving Picture World, mailed from far-off Pennsylvania, told how he would have picture theatre managers look-alive to "better picture programs." Roxy had the "Unit Program" bug ten years ago as witness:

"In most cases the exchange will assort the program in such a way that it will require only a little extra work to achieve success. This I consider an ideal program"—and he named:

"Industries of Southern California" (Selig).

"Ranson's Folly" (Edison).

"The Newlyweds" (Biograph).

"Another thing I want to call attention to," said Roxy, "is the fact that not one minute during the entire performance should your music cease."

Consistency Thy Name Is "Roxy."

Ten years ago Rothapfel was "talking over the heads of his audience." Four years later he "was wild and visionary" when he opened the Strand. The history of THE industry will set forth that Roxy was a man of vision rather than a visionary man.

They'll tell you at the Strand—will the crowds—and they'll echo it at the Rivoli and Rialto (which same means all the Strands, Rivolis, Rialtos and Capitols throughout the country) that Roxy was right ten years ago when he first broke into print through Moving Picture World with ideas and not visions that made THE industry what it is in 1920.

Adding a "Personal Touch."

For this week's "Personal Touch" see elsewhere and Sam Spedon. For ten years ago look here:

P. P. Craft was selling Mirror Screens at 416 Ninth street, Washington, D. C.

"Montgomery" was a name that was "rocking the exhibition business" in the South. He was building up a chain of theatres and giving distributors "circuit-wide bookings."

Paramount Film Company, 61 West Fourteenth street, New York, just reorganized, was proffering "Everything Moving Picturesque."

Motographs were advertised in Moving Picture World. Whatever became of that machine? It was made in Chicago—but we never hear of it now.

George Kleine, Pioneer Educator.

Editorial mention and extensive comment was made concerning a 336-page "Catalogue of Educational Motion Pictures" issued by George Kleine of Chicago and 19 East Twenty-first street, New York. "It is a trite remark," said the editor, "to say this catalog fills a long felt want."

Atlanta, Ga., had passed an ordinance compelling women to remove their hats in theatres. Just for that the ladies are now getting the vote.

"Plethora of Picture Dramas from Purile Dramatists" is a caption that looks as though "ye editor" was taking a crack at the script writers. Mention this to show that such was done even in the early days.

Pulling Out of Winter Quarters.

Santa Barbara, Cal., was all right for Essanay in winter. But come Spring they must move to Denver and a great ranch nearby to picture films of Western life. G. M. Anderson, yclept "Broncho Billy," took ten lines of space to tell what would be a continued story these days.

E. E. Fulton, of Chicago, had just been appointed Western representative of the Lubin Manufacturing Company.

Carl Theodore Goldenberg resigned as New York office manager for Pathe.

J. A. Berst had appointed Kurt W. Linn, from the New Orleans office, to succeed E. H. Montagu as Pathe's Chicago manager.

Frank A. Tichenor had just organized the Manhattan Slide Company at 136 West Thirty-seventh street. The first thing he did was to slap an advertisement in Moving Picture World. In those days, as now, business suicide was painlessly committed by not doing so.

Louis J. Gasnier Comes to America.

Charles Pathe, without making any "statement," sent Louis J. Gasnier to America for the purpose of directing, supervising and producing Pathe pictures. We believe his ticket read: "Paris to Bound Brook."

"Imitators will always trade on the reputation of the best" was set forth by the Berlin

Aniline Works. Just imagine it! Anything based on Berlin, Germany, talking that-a-way!

F. H. Richardson's Projection Department was just getting under way. The first then and still the best. "Writers cramp" never touched Richardson. He was killing off from three to five pages ten years ago!

Making a Date by the Clock.

American Badge Company was selling a novelty button to theatre managers. "Meet me at the Bijou" was printed on the face of a time-dial and the hour hands were moveable. It was a cute plot:

The fellow would set the hands at an hour, meet a girl and point to the button in his lapel. If she had sense she wouldn't "meet him at the Bijou"—but enough were sans sense to make the button business profitable.

Michigan avenue (which is Chicago's combination Board Walk and Fifth avenue) looked like a parade of watches with all the frogs pointing to their lapel buttons. It was a great life—ten years ago!

Film Titles With a "Punch."

"As It Is in Life; or, The Story of a Father's Selfish Love" (Biograph, 1910).

"Children Not Wanted" (Republic, 1920).

David Horsley, of Bayonne, N. J., announced: "About May 15 I will commence export shipments and am prepared to place exclusive agencies for all foreign countries."

And would you believe it? He added this "Notice: Trade publications please send full particulars as to rates."

Archie Mac Arthur, Jr., hurried to Bayonne the next morning.

Authors Were Then Eminent.

Edison was releasing "Her First Appearance," adapted by Richard Harding Davis from his "Van Bibber" stories. Years before Robert Hilliard had vaudeville the same subject as a sketch, under title of "The Littlest Girl."

"The Gypsy Girl's Love" was thrilling Kalem film.

Song slides were renting for "two bits" the week.

Scranton, Pa., and Albany, N. Y., were "Key Cities" ten years ago. Novelty Slide Company had branch agencies in those seething centers.

The Hix-Gravely Cigar Company, Montgomery, Ala., were Southern agents for Mirror Screens. Then, as now, cigar stores sold everything but good cigars!

Frieda Klug was sole American representatives for a lot of moving picture machinery—Braro Machine Works, Turin; J. Debie, Paris, etc. She was advertising for Americans to take away the Debie. Ouch!

Nat I. Ehrlich was managing Dixie Film Company, New Orleans, and E. T. Peter was manager of Texas Film Exchange, Dallas. They both liked the newly-born Thanhouser Films. That pleased Bert Adler. He wrote the adverts that sold 'em.

Houdini Serial Going Strong.

An announcement from the offices of the Republic Distributing Corporation states that the bookings on the serial, "The Master Mystery," are mounting in number at a rapid pace. The serial, which stars the internationally famous handcuff king, Houdini, was one of the productions taken over from the World Film when the Republic company assumed control of the World interests. The Republic organization has the distribution rights in the states of Washington, Oregon, California, Nevada, Arizona, Montana, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, Missouri, Minnesota, North and South Dakota and a section of Idaho.

Marshall Neilan and Albert Kaufman Form Co-operative Producing Alliance

ONE of the most important announcements of the year in producing circles is that of a co-operative production alliance just formed between Marshall Neilan Productions and Albert A. Kaufman Productions. Details of this alliance, which is the result of a lasting friendship and the fulfillment of the mutual desires of sists of two separate units, each unit comprising a light and dark stage and set of individual dressing rooms.

The producing, technical and executive staffs have been merged into one and by carefully following a working schedule the different departments will be at the disposal of both companies.

Mr. Neilan is a member of the Associated Producers, who when their present contracts expire will release their productions as of one organization. His current pictures are released through the First National Exhibitors Circuit.

Kaufman Plans Not Announced.

Mr. Kaufman, who recently signed Allen Holubar to direct a series of special productions starring Dorothy Phillips, has not yet made known his plans for distribution, but announced that work on the first Holubar-Phillips feature will begin at the Neilan-Kaufman studio within a few days.

Five years ago Mr. Kaufman was studio manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Company and under his supervision were numbered the productions of such famous stars as Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark, George M. Cohan, John Barrymore, Pauline Frederick and many others. At the same time Marshall Neilan was a leading man of considerable renown and most of his work was opposite the stars under Mr. Kaufman's charge. Mr. Neilan had previously shown directorial qualities and his ideas on production were very much in common with those of Mr. Kaufman, who shortly afterward engaged him as director for Famous Players-Lasky.

An admiration for each other's ability and a strong personal friendship arose between the two young men who were later to become so prominent in the motion picture world. It was mutually agreed that should they ever branch out for themselves as independent producers a lot could be accomplished by their aligning themselves together.

Promotions came rapidly for both, Mr. Kaufman becoming general manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Studio in Hollywood and later filling the same position in that company's New York studio. Mr. Neilan's worth became recognized more with each succeeding picture he directed until his achievements made him one of the most sought after directors in the country.

Then came the war and Mr. Kaufman's two year period of war services in which he served as captain in Uncle Sam's Army overseas. Upon his discharge he was entrusted with the work of organizing and building the Famous Players-Lasky studio in England which he accomplished in a manner which reflected more credit on himself.

In the meantime Mr. Neilan had severed his connections with Famous Players-Lasky. He organized a producing staff and made many pictures for various companies, including such notable successes as "Daddy Long Legs," with Mary Pickford; "The Unpardonable Sin," with Blanche Sweet, and "In Old Kentucky," with Anita Stewart. Later he formed his own independent producing company, and the results so far achieved with his first picture, "The River's End," indicate that Marshall Neilan Productions is destined to take its place as a producing organization of prominence.

Skouras Brothers, St. Louis, Purchase Grand Central and Central Theatres

CONCLUDING several weeks of negotiations, a deal for the purchase of the New Grand Central Theatre, the Central Theatre and the Grand Central Film Company, of St. Louis, the local First National exchange, has been consummated by the Skouras Brothers, of that city. The properties were purchased from the Grand Central Theatre Company and the Grand Central Film Company, corporations. The principal owners were William Sievers, Edmund Koeln, Theodore Rassieur and Harry Troll. The consideration was $350,000.

Spyros Skouras, Charles Skouras, George Skouras, E. H. Brient and Leo Rassieur, Jr., conducted the negotiations for the purchase of the properties. The New Grand Central will be continued as the first run house for First National attractions in St. Louis. Richards & Flynn, of Kansas City, who have a sub-franchise for First National productions in Northern Missouri, will not be affected by the transfer.

By the purchase of the Central and New Grand Central Theatres, the field of house ownership in St. Louis was narrowed considerably and two interests now virtually dominate the first run field. The Skouras Brothers, and those interested with them, now own and operate the following theatres: the New Grand Central, Central, Pageant, Crystal, Airdome, Arsenal, West End Lyric, Downtown Lyric, Shaw and the Lyric Skydome.

Spyros Skouras, who is named for the presidency of the new concern, will actively manage the West End Lyric. Charles Skouras will manage the New Grand Central. George Skouras will supervise the Downtown Lyric and the Central, Brient will be managing director of all Skouras theatres.

The present plans are for all First National attractions to have their initial St. Louis presentation at the New Grand Central and, on some occasions, to run day and date at the New Grand Central and West End Lyric. Pictures that are first shown at the New Grand Central alone will follow at the West End Lyric, then at the Downtown Central and then back to the West End for a run at the Pageant.

Canadian Mounted Police Protest Flowing Locks of Actors in Stories of Force

OFFICERS and constables of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police have raised an objection to one detail in connection with the portrayal of an R. C. M. P. character in some of the recent moving picture releases. They do not say that representatives of the famous force should not be shown on the screen in connection with stories of the Canadian West and they are quite pleased to note that a real attempt has been made to duplicate the official scarlet and gold uniform for the pictures.

They point to one mistake that has been made a number of times, however, and that is the manner in which the screen constables "wear" their hair. According to Mounted Police regulations, the hair must be cut close. For a member of the force to appear otherwise would result in disciplining by the officers in charge. The flowing locks of actors portraying Royal Canadian Mounted Police characters do not meet with the approval of actual members of the force.

Since the establishment of the headquarters of the Mounted Police at Ottawa Ontario, the words "North West" in the name of the unit have been replaced by "Canada" because the activities of the police have been extended to the whole of the Dominion. It is also pointed out that references to the force as "Mounties" is also a misnomer.

President of Nicholas Power Company.

Earl Gives Welcome Home Dinner to S. S. Cassard

THE get-together dinner on March 31 at the Old Colony Club, New York City, given by President Earl of the Nicholas Power Company to heads of the departments was turned into a welcome home reception to S. S. Cassard, sales manager, and T. F. Uhlemann, works manager. Both of these have recently made extensive trips for their company, and came back all pepped up regarding the outlook for the Nicholas Power Company and general trade conditions. The significant point established at the dinner was for "looking ahead" by everybody.

The demand for American machinery throughout the world is enormous and everyone should learn to order supplies well in advance of the real need for them. The slogan of the times is—"Place orders now for future delivery."

Among those present were E. E. Earl, A. D. Bell, W. C. Smith, S. S. Cassard, S. R. Burns, E. E. DeHart, F. J. Bird, A. L. Raven, T. F. Uhlmann, Herbert Griffin, P. A. McGuire.

Universal Western Exchange Heads Hold Chicago Meeting

ANOTHER Universal get-together was held on March 28 and 29, when exchange managers from the middle western Universal branch exchanges, assembled in the Congress Hotel, Chicago, and discussed Universal prospects for the fall campaign.

Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges, was on hand from New York to take charge of the convention. He was assisted by W. A. Chase, one of Universal's district managers in the middle west. J. H. Mayer, director of publicity, also was present.

An opportunity was taken to show "The Virgin of Stamboul" to the out-of-town managers and to instruct them how to handle the big new Priscilla Dean picture. The production opened on April 4 for an indefinite run at the Chicago Playhouse.

Among the exchange managers present were I. L. Leserman, Chicago, and others of his office force; George Levine, Milwaukee; Edgar B. Haines, Des Moines; H. F. Lefholtz, Omaha; Joe Roderick, Minneapolis; Sam Benjamin, Oklahoma City; Barney Rosenthal, St. Louis; and J. H. Calvert, Kansas City, Mo.

How C. S. Jensen Solved Censor Problem and Made Clubwomen Friendly to Films

IN February, women of Portland, Oregon, were meeting daily, yea, even twice a day, with their various clubs and organizations to resolute. And in all their resolutions, which were numerous and which collectively and individually found their ways into the columns of each and every local paper, the motion picture industry was condemned as showing films harmful both from the moral and intellectual standpoints.

In March, scarcely one month later, a new form of censorship provided for in an ordinance drawn up by the motion picture managers themselves, had been adopted by the city council. The women of the city under the various organizations belonging to the city federation of women clubs, comprising more than 200 associations, were using the motion picture houses for civic purposes.

C. S. Jensen, senior member of the firm of Jensen and Von Herberg, owners of first run theatres in Portland, Seattle, Yakima, Bremerton, Butte and Tacoma, and holders of the First National franchise for that territory, was responsible for the change of public sentiment. He attacked the proposition of saving his interests in Portland and possibly other Pacific Coast cities from general disfavor by using modern business methods. In no detail were his plans not entirely successful.

Cuts Created False Impression.

Censorship became a vital issue in Portland with the showing of the film, "The Thirteenth Commandment." Two scenes, one in which Ethel Clayton is shown selling various pieces of lingerie and one of a "close-up" were ordered eliminated. The film was cut according to orders given by the secretary of the board of censors, but because he believed the censor had not been impartial in making the eliminations, A. C. Raleigh, manager of the Columbia Theatre in which the production was booked to show, had the cuts made exactly as ordered and not as probably intended. The result was that in the close-up scene the public was left wondering what had happened and believing perhaps the worst, whereas if more had been cut as the exhibitor would ordinarily have done of his own accord, the matter would have caused no great alarm to either manager or censor.

Retaliation was immediately obtained by the secretary of the board, who issued warrant for the arrest of C. M. Hill, branch manager for the Famous Players-Lasky corporation in Portland. The warrant was issued because she found Mr. Hill had released the film without the signature of the censor board as the law required, a practice which during recent months had been entirely overlooked. Mr. Hill asked for trial by jury and after a long and tedious court session in which a score of prominent club women testified as to the immoral effect of "The Thirteenth Commandment" and other pictures, he was declared not guilty. Such was the censorship situation in Portland when C. S. Jensen returned after a six weeks' trip to the East.

Jensen Opened Campaign.

A newspaper and screen advertising campaign was immediately devised. Through the editorial columns of the daily newspapers Mr. Jensen stated the cause of the motion picture industry. He described the present system as a one woman regime, obviously unfair, and proposed a new method whereby the city appoint one person, the film men another and these two choose a third, making a board of three to settle the question of censorship.

Slides stating this stand and asking the expression of the public on the question of censorship were run in each of the five Jensen and Von Herberg theatres. Several score replies were received and these the daily newspapers incorporated into news stories. Just one change was made in the original ordinance as submitted by Mr. Jensen to the city council. Club women appearing en masse at the meeting of the city council demanded that the third member of the new board as provided by the ordinance in question be appointed from one of their number. Their request was recognized by the city council which agreed to choose from three names submitted to them by the club women the member of the board which the city has the authority to appoint. This person with the representative of the film men will then choose the third member of the new board.

Friendship Now Prevails.

By the middle of March when the ordinance was formally and finally adopted the question of motion picture censorship was a dead issue. Through its president, Mrs. Roy Bishop, the city federation of clubs which had before resolute so intolerantly, had accepted the offer of Jensen and Von Herberg to use the loges seats of the Peoples Theatre, one of the largest and finest cinema houses in the Northwest, for a series of benefits. In accepting this offer made by Douglas Jarmuth, manager of the Peoples Theatre, the club women put themselves publically on record as endorsing motion picture entertainments.

Were they not, themselves, selling tickets, and would they be connected with anything but a worthy cause? Decidedly not. At the same time, friendly relations have been established between club leaders and managers who a month ago were intolerant and antagonistic toward each other.

Cosmopolitan Engages Burton.

Frederick Burton, well-known stage and screen favorite, has been engaged for the part of Heliotrope Harry in "A Whiff of Heliotrope," the Richard Washburn Child story, now being picturized for Cosmopolitan Productions by George D. Baker. Burton's stage experience dates back to 1900, when he was a member of the old Grand Opera House Stock Company, of Indianapolis. His first motion picture was "Rugles of Red Gap," in the same role which he had played on the stage.

"Keerful, Silas! Don't Hit the Pump!" Cautions Nazimova, with Victor Potel Wrestling with the Wheel. Excellent views of Metro's latest special, "The Heart of a Child," in which the Russian star is afforded great opportunity to display her many emotions. The title for the last picture may be "Everything Comes to Those Who Wait."

First National General Manager Visits Charles Ray in Studio at Los Angeles

IN order to extend a personal welcome to Charles Ray, the latest addition to the ranks of First National stars, General Manager J. D. Williams has paid a special visit to the Los Angeles studios where the popular actor is commencing work on the first picture in which Arthur S. Kane is presenting him.

At the completion of his contract with Thomas Ince, Mr. Ray began to make films for release by First National, and the visit of Mr. Williams to the star's own studios on the West Coast represents the official welcome of Mr. Ray into the First National fold.

English Executive Delighted.

General Manager Williams, following his survey of the situation in the Ray studio, gave out the statement that in his opinion Charles Ray was slated to break all records for newcomers to the First National releasing organization. Such is the impression gained by Mr. Williams in his conference with exhibitors along his route, that the First National official stands sponsor for the prophecy that the industry will see one of the most unusual and sweeping successes from the independent films which the already popular actor now commences to produce.

Mr. Williams expressed great satisfaction at the progress made by Mr. Ray's newly incorporated company, and great admiration for the splendid body of officials and co-workers with whom Mr. Ray has surrounded himself. With the star's old associates, Jerome Storm, director, and Chester Lyons, cameraman, to watch over the technical end of picture production, and with Richard Willis, the capable general manager, supervising the destinies of the local organization, the First National executive prophesied great things to come from this aggregation of talents.

The First National official was accompanied by Colonel H. A. Browne, of the Walturdaw Company, London, England, the oldest releasing concern in Europe. The British film executive was particularly pleased to find Charles Ray such an altogether delightful character in real life, and he assured the star that he would do all in his power to see that he achieved premier popularity in the British Isles.

Among others in the gathering at the Ray studios was Sol Lesser, the well-known Los Angeles exhibitor, who holds the First National franchise in Southern California territory. Mrs. J. D. Williams, who accompanied her husband, gave a dinner at the Alexandria Hotel to Mr. and Mrs. Charles Ray, Colonel Browne, Albert A. Kidder, Jr., Gus Inglis and Richard Willis.

Kane Corporation Moves to New Offices at 25 West 43d Street for Permanent Home

THE Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation has moved to its new offices in the National Association Building at 25 West Forty-third street, New York. The lease to these quarters was signed several weeks ago, but delay in construction work on the new building prevented moving sooner. The young corporation has had its temporary quarters in the Knox Building at Fortieth street and Fifth avenue.

Although the producing company was established only a month and a half ago by Arthur S. Kane, organizer and former president of Realart Pictures, its progress has been such that the original offices of the concern became insufficient for the needs of the growing institution. With increased facilities for carrying on its business the Kane company is now in a position to further expand its activities.

The new home into which President Kane and General Manager J. C. Ragland took their cohorts is four times the size of their previous location, and in addition is so situated that the requirements for continued expansion can be immediately satisfied. Such have been the demands upon President Kane and his colleagues in the brief life of their company that the removal to the new National Association Building comes as a relief to all departments.

The permanent home of the Kane company is now situated on the eleventh floor. The suite of offices occupies a total space of more than two thousand square feet, with windows looking out on Forty-third, Forty-fourth street and Fifth avenue, half a block away.

Although President Kane and the staff of the company are busily engaged in the task of getting accustomed to the new home, they extend a cordial invitation to their friends in the trade to stop by and pay the new Kane offices a visit.

Veteran Thespian Relates Anecdote of Days When "Shore Acres" Went Begging

AT the outer portals of one of New York's biggest newspapers sits an old actor who played with the late James A. Herne in "Griffith Davenport," and who recalls an interesting fact in connection with "Shore Acres," the famous Herne drama of New England coast life that Metro has just produced on the screen with a notable cast featuring Alice Lake.

The veteran thespian, whose daily task now is to guard the editorial sanctum of the metropolitan daily, tells the story of the first appearance of "Shore Acres" before the public and of its discouraged author's sale of a half interest in the production for $5,000. The offer was originally made to Charlie Mitchell, brother of Maggie Mitchell, who thought favorably of the purchase of a half interest in the Herne drama as a gilt-edged investment.

But Mitchell's wife thought otherwise. When her husband mentioned parting with such a sum of money for what she considered a gold-brick, Maggie Mitchell waxed hysterical and threatened to leave Mitchell if he closed the deal. While he hesitated, torn between his conflicting senses of business acumen and conjugal loyalty, Harry Miner, of drug store and theatre fame, stepped in and accepted Herne's offer.

It proved to be a fortunate investment for Miner. "Shore Acres," that had been so slow in finding a producer, had at last reached the boards through the influence of Mr. Field, of the Boston Museum, and after two weeks of indifferent business had captured public favor and settled down to its famous run of 100 nights—at that time a record for any play in one house.

Of All Oriental Lands, Japan Affords American Films Greatest Opportunities

JAPAN represents the greatest opportunity for development of American motion pictures in the Orient, according to Horace P. Clarke, Oriental representative for David P. Howells, Inc., who has left New York on another trip through the Far East for the Howells organization.

This will be Mr. Clarke's second trip to the Orient within twelve months. It will take him from six to eight months to cover again the territory in which he and David P. Howells personally have pioneered with American films. In addition to a large number of big productions and a selection of short length subjects Mr. Clarke takes with him motion picture equipment for distribution throughout the Orient.

Mr. Clarke is thoroughly familiar with the territory which he visits on this trip. His itinerary takes him to Japan, China, the Philippines, Straits Settlements, Dutch East Indies, India, Burmah and Ceylon.

Howells Watches Orient Closely.

Few if any, film traders in the world have given the attention and thought to the Orient which that market has received from the Howells organization. It is more particularly with the idea of keeping intimately in touch with picture conditions in the Orient that this trip is being made by Mr. Clarke. His journey is in line with the policy of David P. Howells in sending representatives constantly into the territories in which he is interested, to develop a fuller understanding of American picture product, to keep in close personal touch with conditions abroad and to take to the foreign market not only the best pictures the American market affords, but to take also new ideas for distribution, presentation and exploitation.

"Only by sympathetic treatment of the film renter in the countries of the Far East can the future possibilities of the Oriental market be developed to their fullest," said Mr. Clarke in discussing the purpose of his trip and the conditions of the far eastern market.

Exorbitant Prices Out of Question Now.

"The American producer must, for the time being, not expect exorbitant prices for his pictures from the Orient. There is a prevailing notion that the Oriental territories are worth considerably more than they are. This is probably due to the fact that the various countries of the Far East have such tremendous populations. It is true that there are millions upon millions of people in the Orient, people who will, no doubt, become patrons of the motion picture eventually, but at the present time only a very small percentage has ever seen a motion picture, and until picture house construction develops there is little possibility that pictures will become a popular amusement in anywhere near the sense that they are popular entertainment in America and in some of the European countries.

"With considerably less population than many of the neighboring territories, Japan will become the best market for American pictures and will develop the possibilities of motion picture quickest. The possibilities in Japan are almost limitless. The development must be gradual, for the Oriental is not as quick to absorb new ideas as the American and the European.

"The most important contributing factor in the development of pictures in Japan and the popularization of the American productions is the fact that the study of English is now compulsory in the primary schools of Japan. This means that the coming generation of Japanese will be familiar, to an extent at least, with literature written in English, and before he becomes old enough to be a picture fan he will have grown familiar with the writings and the customs of the western world. The educational system of Japan, improved remarkably in the last few years, will better the working class of the island to a remarkable degree.

"As I see it the development of motion pictures in Japan now depends, in a large measure, on the erection of modern picture theatres. Already the ever increasing demand for cinema entertainment is taxing the capacity of the Japanese picture theatres.

Now in Missionary Stage.

"The present stage can be described as the missionary stage for motion pictures in the Orient. In the next few years the Oriental picture fan will be better acquainted with western ideas and will more readily comprehend the plots and themes of American made pictures. At the present time the most popular picture in that territory is the production in which the action can easily be followed, regardless of subtitles. The majority of the audiences are not able to read English and many read their own language with difficulty because of the variety of dialects, so that they are considerably handicapped in following the action of a story which relies on a complicated plot."

Horace P. Clarke

According to Mr. Clarke, one of the most aggravating problems of Oriental film trade is the pirate. He has given much attention to the question of defeating the duper and the film thief as that individual operates in the Far East, and he believes that a solution lies only in a boycott of disreputable renters as well as distributors.

To Fight Pirating.

"Pirating and duping have been one of the sores of Oriental film trading," said

Mr. Clarke. "The time has come when it can be stopped, although drastic steps will be necessary. We are going to see that every possible protection is given the reliable and responsible dealer. Any renter in the Orient who contracts to run pirated films is going to be blacklisted and his supply shut off. The foreign distributors in this country can do much to help rid the Far East of pirates by co-operating to see that the duper is cut off from his supply, and the renters in the Orient by getting together to put an end to the practice."

Mr. Clarke's trip will take him more than 50,000 miles and will require a minimum of six months. He sails via Vancouver for Yokohama on April 8. Mr. Clarke is a native of Sydney, Australia. He was Australian representative for the David P. Howells organization for two years before coming to the United States. Prior to his entrance into the motion picture industry he was connected for ten years with the mining business with some of the largest concerns in Australia.

Prints of "Heart of a Child," Nazimova's Latest, Arrive East

FIRST completed prints of Nazimova's newest picture, "The Heart of a Child," have arrived at the New York offices of Metro, in the Longacre Building, from the coast studios at Hollywood, where this screen production of the most famous of Frank Danby's novels was done. "The Heart of a Child" is ready for immediate release, it is understood.

The film world has been especially eager to see "The Heart of a Child" put on the booking market for the reason that it resembles in some respect the general character of one previous Nazimova sensation, "The Brat," from Maude Fulton's play of an irrepressible chorus girl waif.

In the case of the Danby story, Nazimova is not a chorus girl, but a child of the London slums, born and raised to girlhood in a sordid, poverty-stricken environment as devoid of ideals as of clean collars. As Sally Snape, one sees on the screen the star go through a series of wonderfully human adventures, some tragic, some half so, others pathetically funny and still others that really are glorious; and all of them are tremendously interesting, especially to the girl of the gutters who later becomes Sarita Mainwaring, premiere danseuse of the Verandah Theatre in London.

Charles Bryant, also depicting in the production the important role of Lord Kidderminster, adapted the story for the screen and constructed the scenario, from which the director, Ray C. Smallwood, worked.

Dakota Showman Praises "Honey Bee."

"When an exhibitor hears his audience continually chuckle throughout a picture, and when they hunt him up in his office to thank him for securing such high class entertainment, there must be a reason for it." So says H. W. Derthick, of the Auditorium, in Rapid City, S. D. Hear his further comments on "The Honey Bee": "In my opinion, Mr. Briggs (this is E. P. Briggs of "Flying A" fame, making headquarters at the Denver office of the company) you have one of the best specials of the year, both as to theme, story and character. Such films do more to get new patrons for an exhibitor than anything else I know."

"Midlanders," Jackson's Famous Novel, Will Be Bessie Love's First Vehicle

FOLLOWING the announcement last week that Andrew J. Callaghan Productions, Inc., has formed a company to star Bessie Love in big story vehicles, with high class direction, comes the news from Los Angeles that the star has already begun work on "The Midlander," the widely read novel by Charles Tenney Jackson. Joseph de Grasse and Ida May Park, each of them credited with the successful direction of such stars as Dorothy Phillips, Priscilla Dean, Sessue Hayakawa, Dorothy Dalton, Lew Cody and others, have undertaken supervision of Miss Love in her first picture.

Calling for an initial outlay of thousands of dollars for picture rights to "The Midlander" and for the services of the distinguished pair of directors, the Callaghan organization is fulfilling its published intention of placing his talented young actress in surroundings which will bring out in a bigger way than ever her undisputed dramatic ability.

"It will be evident at once to discerning exhibitors," said Mr. Callaghan, "that the business men who are placing unlimited capital at the disposal of Miss Love, and her directors have tremendous faith in her ability to do something for the screen that will surpass by far anything she has ever done previously. Our faith is being expressed in dollars and cents devoted to the purchase of the best directorial talent, the most suited vehicles adapted from first class novels and plays and the highest class production all around.

Tale of Mississippi Valley.

"As our first step in this direction we have secured the picture rights to the famous American novel, 'The Midlander,' by Charles Tenney Jackson. This dramatic narrative of pioneer society in the colorful Mississippi Valley is tense with action, and running through it is a human story of love that hurdles the obstacles of the years and finds itself dramatically triumphant in the end. Miss Love has been dreaming of such an opportunity for years, to find herself in a character that requires the expression of every human emotion, a character with the depth of real life and placed in a narrative alive with action."

The novel is one of the most famous pieces of dramatic fiction that has been written around the life of the Mississippi Valley. Miss Love will play the part of Aurelie Lindstrom, a waif with a destiny, a child stolen from the procession of orphans in the New Orleans Mardi Gras, raised up-river in Iowa, who has become a beautiful, primitive young woman living in a squatter settlement.

Republic Distributing Names Releases for April; Serial Scheduled for the 25th

A VARIETY of subjects declared to be of excellent quality are to be found in the April releases of the Republic organization, a statement from that company informs. A complete program suitable to the small town and city exhibitor is found in the list of releases, which includes three feature productions, the release of the first two episodes of a new serial and the continuance of the release of short detective dramas.

The three feature releases are "An Adventuress," "Common Sense" and "Children Not Wanted." The month of April marks the release of episode one of the first Republic serial, namely, "The Whirlwind," featuring Charles Hutchinson, the well-known daredevil. Although the step into the serial field is new to the Republic organization, Briton N. Busch, president, is authority for the statement that this serial has not only all the elements needed in a successful box-office attraction, but that the Republic organization has undertaken the work of assisting the exhibitor in the successful running of the entire serial.

Will Release Other Serials.

"The month of April," Mr. Busch said, "finds the Republic organization widening its scope to the field of serial distribution. We will release more serials, and in view of the fact that we expect to sell a serial exhibitor other serial productions, we have made it a point to assist him in making a success with the first one which we are releasing."

The new Pantages Theatre in Salt Lake City, nearing completion, will be opened formally to the public on June 2, according to announcement made by Manager Frank R. Newman upon his return from Los Angeles, where he conferred with Alexander Pantages.

Mr. and Mrs. Pantages will be present and the latter, an artist, will appear on the opening bill. The new theatre will be artistic throughout.

Arrangements have been made whereby the old Colonial Theatre, which for several years has been the home of Pantages, will be opened on August 29 by the Wilkes Stock Company.

Two more of the William Flynn detective dramas are included in the release schedule for the month. They are titled "The Phantom Butler" and "The Kalda Ruby."

The feature production, "The Adventuress," stars Julian Eltinge, famous for his female impersonations. The Republic statements contends that Julian Eltinge is one of the best drawing cards of the country.

The feature release for April 20 is "Common Sense." This production was directed by Lewis William Chaudet and the featured players are Vola Vale and Ralph Lewis.

Edith Day is the star of "Children Not Wanted."

Stonehouse and Palette in Cast of Big Metro Special

METRO announces that it will picture the stage comedy, "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," by C. W. Bell and Mark Swan, as a big special production with an all-star cast, instead of, as at first planned, using it as a starring vehicle for Viola Dana. As two of the featured players in this special, officials at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood have engaged Ruth Stonehouse and Eugene Palette, both of them seen prominently in recent Metro productions.

Miss Stonehouse will play the leading feminine role of Polly Hathaway, a society reporter. Eugene Palette has had a long and varied career in the silent drama. He has appeared in a number of recent Metro productions, among them "Fair and Warmer," with May Allison, and "Alias Jimmy Valentine," with Bert Lytell. He interrupted his screen career to join the army, qualifying as an aerial machine gunner, although he did not get overseas.

A. P. Younger prepared the scenario, and Edward Dillon, a new acquisition to the Metro directorial forces, will direct.

Gordon Signs Popular Organist.

Arthur Martell, wizard of the organ, has signed a contract with Nathan H. Gordon, president of the Olympia Theatres, Inc., of Boston, to play for the Olympia chain for ten years.

At present Martell is playing the new Hope-Jones organ at Gordon's Olympia, Washington street, Boston. Many noted musicians have paid tribute to Martell's remarkable art. His accompaniment to motion pictures has long been a drawing card at the Olympia theatres.

In Corner of Auerbach Drawing Room Is Up-to-date Projection Installation

UP in the East Eighties in Manhattan, behind the stately front of a large dwelling, there is in operation a most complete and remarkably compact projection installation. The address is 9 East Eighty-second street and the location but a stone's throw from Central Park and the New York Metropolitan Museum of Art. It is the home of John H. Auerbach, a member of the New York Stock Exchange.

Mr. Auerbach is something more than a follower of the screen. Although a frequent visitor at the Broadway motion picture houses he nevertheless takes keener pleasure in personally putting on a picture, incidentally providing entertainment for his family, his household and his friends.

And when we say "putting on a picture," just that is meant, for Mr. Auerbach does the whole thing himself. Projection is his hobby, and so completely and consistently does he ride it that he has taken the New York City examination and secured a license as a full-fledged projectionist. Both by legal right and by right of ability Mr. Auerbach could take charge of the projection room of any theatre in New York City. For a long time he has been an active contributor to the Projection Department of this journal, and, quoting Mr. Richardson, "The head of the house at 9 East Eighty-second street is very much better grounded in both the theory and practice of the finer arts of the projection room than are a large majority of professional projectionists."

Projector in Drawing Room.

The Moving Picture World, in its issue of last December 13, in an article written by Mr. Richardson, described the two-projector installation Mr. Auerbach has in his home in Hewlett, L. I. Here a spacious carriage house has been converted into a Little Theatre, with comfortable cretonne covered wicker armchairs for the guests.

The particular thing which puts the East Eighty-second street installation in a class by itself is the fact that it is all permanently placed in the main drawing room.

The projection apparatus is concealed within steel walls six and a half feet high and in a compartment five by eight feet in size. In spite of the forty square feet it occupies the projection room is not nearly so conspicuous as one might imagine. It is in a corner of the room and all around its two exposed sides are rich draperies, dark green in color, of material identical with the other hangings of the room.

ture World recently visited "9 East 82" at the invitation of Mr. Auerbach. Following dinner and a seasonable time devoted to cigars and conversation, Mr. Auerbach took from its hiding place a long rod with a metal hook at one end, stepped to a window and from behind the hood of the drapery unrolled a Mirroroid screen.

Crossing to the projection room Mr. Auerbach slipped back the draperies on the side facing the screen, disclosing the lens and observation ports, and then drew away those on the other side, revealing the projection room door.

"J. H. A. Presents."

The buzz of the arc was succeeded by a gradual dimming and final extinguishing of the room lights, and the show was on, with the host as projectionist. The initial presentation was complete. Just as in the high class "regular" theatre there was an introductory scene in which a curtain was parted by two figures, disclosing a woodland scene. The figures proceeded to chop down a large tree, the removal of the top of which revealed the words "9 East 82." This ran for a few feet and then changed to "Bids You Welcome," following which came "J. H. A. Presents." Then appeared the main title of the feature. The subject was Wally Reid's "Double Speed," and the manner of its presentation was, under the conditions, distinctly high class.

At the ending of the feature, two figures advanced into view, closed a door, and then came a novelty subject in which cigarettes apparently by voluntary action formed the words "Good Night," which closed the screen entertainment.

From every viewpoint the evening was one to remember. Mr. Auerbach is as thorough in the role of host as he is grounded in projection. He showed his visitors through the projection room and rounded out the demonstration with a visit to the cellar—where he has installed the resistance apparatus.

It is not within the domain of this writer to describe the actual projection equipment at "9 East Eighty-second." That is the province of Mr. Richardson, who will take up the story at this point.

The Equipment.

The editor has said the nice things, all of which are even more than amply justified, and has left me to do the work. Well, anyhow, it is a work of pleasure to describe so marvelous an installation—marvelous when one considers that it is, as has been said, all contained within a five by eight-foot room, situated in the drawing room of a private home.

First, the screen is hung on a spring roller, located just under the hood of the window draperies, so that it rolls up, like a window shade, entirely out of sight, yet may be placed in position for business in ten seconds.

The interior of the projection room is painted black. The observation port is of goodly size and the lens port stopped down to actual requirement of the effective light beam.

All Accessories of Latest Model.

The projector is the latest model of Simplex, on which Mr. Auerbach has had placed a special chain take-up drive, a special one-and-a-half-to-one revolving shutter, "extra lite," of course, and one of the new lens arrangements for projecting the arc on the floor, wall or ceiling at will. The lamphouse is of the latest model and is entirely surrounded by sheet asbestos curtains also, specially made, over which, as an outer covering, is some sort of crinkly black cloth material, fireproofed, to prevent the asbestos rubbing off on the clothing. This prevents undue radiation of heat from the lamphouse walls. The air is drawn out from the lamphouse interior and the interior of the asbestos shield by means of a suction fan, and is discharged outside the building.

Air is forced into the room by means of an electric fan, and the temperature ordinarily is kept down to 70 degrees.

At the right of the observation port, one above the other, are a large voltmeter and ammeter, precisely the same as those used on power plant switchboards, which means they are the best instruments of their kind that money can buy. Just under the observation port is a small automobile clock and to its left a Robin speed indicator, or speedometer, as they are called. In the corner, under the ammeter, is a small pyrene fire extinguisher. All projection room openings are suspended by fuse links.

Clever Ground Testing Apparatus.

The resistance, a large grid rheostat, is situated in the basement, but by a clever arrangement, described in the projection department recently, the entire resistance of the rheostat is cut in when the arc is first sprung and afterward some of it cut out. This is accomplished by means of a special machine table switch and a special wire from the rheostat which connects thereto. The switch is a single throw, three-pole, so arranged that when it is closed only part way it contacts with wires which "cut in" all the resistance, but when the switch is fully closed it makes a third contact which eliminates a part of the resistance. This may not be so very clear, perhaps, but it is the best I can do without a lengthy description.

Mr. Auerbach has installed a three-light tester, by means of which he can instantly test his fuses in the basement and both the upper and lower carbon arms for ground. It is a clever arrangement and works perfectly.

Complete Projection Library, Too.

There is a film cabinet, of approved pattern, and a steel tool cabinet with several drawers and compartments in which are kept spare machine parts and tools, even to a wire gauge and micrometer caliper. There is even an extra intermittent movement, complete and ready for installation, as well as an entire extra mechanism. And we nearly forgot to mention the fact that there is a rewind, the motor of which may be governed in the matter of speed.

On the projection room wall is a Moving Picture World lens chart, neatly framed, as well as framed diagrams showing the entire wiring of the plant. In a rack in Mr. Auerbach's "den" are the following books, all supplying ample evidence that they are there for use, and get it: Richardson's Handbook, Hallberg's Motion Picture Electricity, Optic Projection, the Hawkins Electrical Guides and one or two others, the names of which we are unable to recall. Beside these are piles of Moving Picture Worlds kept for reference.

A Full-Fledged Installation.

Taken as a whole, we can say that, barring the fact that lack of space prevents it being a two-projector installation, Mr. Auerbach's town house projection installation is more thoroughly complete than is that of any theatre in this country, of which we have knowledge.

After the visit previously described the writer again had the pleasure of enjoying Mr. Auerbach's hospitality, this time in company with Samuel L. Rothapfel, John F. Chalmers, general manager of the Moving Picture World; Will C. Smith, general manager of the Nicholas Power Company, and Edwin S. Porter, vice-president of the Precision Machine Company.

Mr. Rothapfel became enthusiastic. He intends assisting Mr. Auerbach in working out some refinements in the auditorium end of the "show." All four of the men comprising the second party heartily indorse the statement that Mr. Auerbach is a splendid host and that his installation is something much more than remarkable.

Whitman Bennett Leases Yonkers Studio; Lionel Barrymore Begins Work April 12

WHITMAN BENNETT has leased the former Triangle Studio on Riverdale avenue, Yonkers. It is his intention to make this a permanent institution for the production of his special pictures to be released through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. The first series of these pictures, for which arrangements have been completed, will be four subjects in which Lionel Barrymore will star.

In order that the Barrymore productions may be made under the very best conditions Mr. Bennett has completely refitted the studio, installing modern lighting apparatus and all known conveniences and helps for director and artist. The studio, which has been operated on alternating electric current, will hereafter be operated on direct current, for which purpose an elaborate motor generator has already been put into service.

The laboratory attached to the studio has also been completely overhauled so that the negatives will be developed and the sample prints made on the premises from day to day while the pictures are in work.

Although Mr. Bennett made his arrangements with Mr. Barrymore only a month ago, work has progressed so rapidly that Mr. Barrymore will begin his first picture on Monday, April 12. Although the pictures are to be made strictly under Mr. Bennett's direct supervision, he is taking toward his work the attitude of the regular theatrical manager and is fortifying himself by employing known experts in every department. The director for the first two Barrymore pictures will be Kenneth Webb, who has been favorably known in connection with the direction of Vitagraph and Famous Players subjects with important stars. His assistant will be his brother, Roy Webb, who has been associated with Kenneth in many undertakings.

The head of the technical staff will be R. E. Wortham, formerly the head technical man in New York for Goldwyn. The chief photographer will be Tom Griffith, who dates from old Biograph days and has been for some four or five years one of the main members of D. W. Griffith's photographic staff. The art director will be Miss Phyllis Dodson, who has been for several years connected with the School of Interior Decorating at Columbia University.

Doris Keane Has Received Many Tributes to the Great Popularity of "Romance"

By EDWARD WEITZEL

INSIDE the Griffith studio one of the property men was spraying water on the fir trees growing in an Italian garden. Contiguous to the garden was the front of the villa with its marble terrace, where Cavallini passed the happy days with the man of her choice. The scene was bathed in purple moonlight. From the opposite end of the studio it seemed a long distance away. The place was strangely quiet. Occasionally from behind a screen inside of a palace "set" near me came the sound of low voices. When I looked again the property man had gone and apparently I was alone. The scene before me had the spell of reality; the moonlit garden and terrace breathed of romance.

Presently the figure of a man appeared on the marble flagstones. As he approached the doorway a woman came out of the villa and waved to him over the rail of the landing at the top of the steps. She was clad in the ample skirts of the early sixties and was all pink and white loveliness save for her dark hair and the dash of contrasting color in the scarf about her waist. It was evident the pair were lovers from the way he bent and kissed her hand and the ardor of their glances as they strolled toward the moonlit garden.

The Play's Beautiful Sentiment.

I have watched many moving picture scenes being taken in a studio, but never under the same conditions as this bit from "Romance." If Director Chet Withey called out any instructions during the time I was not aware of it. To all intent and purpose I alone beheld this lovers' meeting, and nothing occurred to disturb their happiness or to break the illusion cast over me.

It is not difficult to understand why the stage play ran nearly four years in London during the war. "Romance" breathes the very soul of its title, and the remembrance of its beautiful sentiment was one of the treasures that many a soldier boy carried with him into the trenches in France. And now Doris Keane is acting Cavallini for the screen and, under the United Artists' trademark, the picture will travel all over the world because if the American actress who first captured New York and then made a remarkable conquest of London with the Edward Sheldon play should live a thousand years it is evident she would still lack sufficient time to appear in the stage version before all the audiences that are anxious to see it. The play was first produced in New York in 1913, and only Chicago and Boston were the other cities that had the good fortune to be visited by it in the next three years. Then followed the three and a half years' engagement in the British capital. And when Doris Keane finishes her scenes in the picture version she is going back to England and resume the London run. Decidedly that thousand years age limit for Miss Keane is much too short.

Why Miss Keane Said "Yes."

Around a table in one of the sets for the Washington Square mansion where most of the scenes of "Romance" are laid gathered a group of players as the clock marked the hour sacred to afternoon tea. Miss Keane had lived long enough in the land of her adoption to revere its cherished customs. Here at the table I met Norman Trevor and Basil Sydney. The latter gentleman is Doris Keane's husband. A glance at the picture accompanying this article will answer any questions as to his looks. Whether we Americans are going to forgive him for making one of our most admired actresses a citizeness of the United Kingdom may not be answered so satisfactorily. I am free to admit that before the introduction was over I commenced to understand why Miss Keane said "Yes" when Mr. Sydney said, "Will you, Doris?" After five minutes conversation with him I am strongly in favor of a petition signed by all good Americans asking Mr. Sydney to renounce his allegiance to the British crown and restore his wife's relationship to her native country by himself becoming a citizen of the United States. And if that isn't speaking the gentleman fair, I have no conception of how the thing is done.

The story of the London run of "Romance" has been told so often in print that I did not trouble Miss Keane with any questions about it. Incidentally the last night of the engagement was spoken of, and I asked the impersonator of Cavallini how she felt while she waited for over an hour and a half in the theatre for the cheering mob outside to thin out a little before an attempt to reach her carriage could even be considered.

"I don't think I could describe my feelings," she replied. "It all meant so much more than just the appreciation of a lot of people whom I had entertained by my acting. I had gone through the war period with them and I knew that among that crowd were soldier boys who felt I had done my bit by keeping on playing 'Romance' when the country was in need of its sentiment and the relief it brought from the thoughts that were uppermost in everyone's mind. I had known this for a long time, because I had heard it from so many different sources and so many of the returned soldiers had told me so and spoken about how they had talked the play over with their comrades in France, and that it had helped them by reminding them of their loved ones and the tender moments in their lives."

"How did you fare when you finally left the theatre that last night?" I asked.

"I haven't a very distinct recollection," was the answer; "I was too overcome by my feelings. But it was all so straight from the heart that I don't think I would have minded if they had torn me to pieces. They all wanted to get near me and show me just how they felt. But it was the soldier boys I cared most about. They came from all over the world, you know, and the boys from the colonies have told me how anxious they were to have their folks at home see the play. That will be a long time from now, if ever, and so the picture is being made. The sweethearts and mothers of these boys will be able to see 'Romance' on the screen, and to understand why it meant so much to them."

The Soldier Boy's Tribute.

Doris Keane is the owner of a unique book. Only one copy has ever been printed and it contains poems written to her from the trenches by soldiers that knew and loved her acting and her play. The verses all voice the appreciation of the writers for the help "Romance" brought them. The last poem in the book is printed below. Shortly after Miss Keane received it the writer's chum sent her a package containing the war cross and service ribbons of the soldier. He had been killed in battle.

TO DORIS KEANE.

FROM THE TRENCHES.

Because, when long ago I heard your glorious voice
Whose tender, tragic accents thrilled my being through;
When I was tired, disheart'ned, all alone,
You gave me joy, before, I ne'er had known;
Because once more I hoped, I sing this song to you.

Of, 'midst the darkness of the ghastly night in France,
In trench and dug-out, when in sound of cannon's roar,
I've heard your spirit-voice, triumphant, sweet,
Urging, inspiring victory complete,
My heart has taken courage from it o'er and o'er.

And so tonight, in fancy, when I see you in your play,
Those memories of old come crowding fast and strong—
When back from death you brought my soul to live, Because I've nothing else that I can give Please take my gratitude, accept my little song.

Jans Pictures Completes Second Starring Vehicle for Olive Tell

The second of the Jans Pictures Inc., production starring Olive Tell has been completed under the supervision of B. A. Rolfe. It is an adaptation of "Nothing a Year," a novel by Charles Belmont Davis, and is to be called "A Woman's Business."

The feature is now being cut and assembled. Olive Tell is the star. The supporting cast includes Edmund Lowe, who plays opposite Miss Tell, and Lucille Lee Stewart. Minor roles are said to have been very satisfactorily filled. "A Woman's Business" will soon be given a special showing for the benefit of exhibitors, exchangemen and the motion picture reviewers.

Brady Is Buffalo's Republic Head.

Thomas W. Brady, veteran film man who has been connected with the General Film Company in New York and who formerly managed the Buffalo Fox exchange and latter represented National Pictures in this territory, has been appointed manager of the Buffalo Republic office, succeeding J. E. Kimberly, who recently resigned the position. Homer Howard, upstate representative for National Pictures, takes Mr. Brady's place as manager of the Buffalo office. O. E. Florine, formerly of the Pathe sales staff, will be Mr. Brady's assistant at Republic, having special charge of the short reel department.

King Baggot Plays Lead in "Thirtieth Piece of Silver"

KING BAGGOT, "the star of a thousand romances," who is Margaret Fisher's leading man in "The Thirtieth Piece of Silver," has a past in motion picture experience which tells something of the history of the business itself. For instance, after nine years on the speaking stage King Baggot transferred his big following of admirers to the pictures, and there can be no doubt that such men as he, through their own personal popularity, added much to the prosperity of the growing industry.

Friends Knew His "White Streak."

In those days, when the name of the player was not announced on the screen, King Baggot was known as "the Man with the White Streak," a conspicuous streak of grey over the temples always marking him through any disguise. Realizing the actors' need of getting together for mutual interests he founded the Screen Club and was its first president.

King Baggot has appeared in over 300 pictures, and during his career he has written, directed and starred in his own pictures. He has played everything from comedy to tragedy, from western to society parts, with such well known actors as Thomas H. Ince, George Loane Tucker and Mary and Jack Pickford.

"Hunting Trouble" Is New Title of Warwick Picture

AFTER considerable debate "Hunting Trouble" has been chosen as the title of the latest Robert Warwick picture for Paramount-Artcraft, which is an adaptation of the story, "The Man from Blankley's," by F. Anstey, which was dramatized by Charles Hawtrey for the speaking stage. Walter Woods, who wrote the scenario, was obliged to make some radical changes, owing to the fact that the story was originally laid in England and some of the situations would not be clear to the American audiences. However, it is said that he has retained all the best features and the picture will be exceedingly humorous, according to report.

Major Warwick appears in the role of a man who is possessed of innate chivalry which results in getting him into trouble continuously. Joseph Henabery is directing. Bebe Daniels is leading woman. The big prize fight scene, in which Major Warwick is pitted against Kid McCoy, who plays the heavy role; some picturesque scenes in Scotland, wherein the doughty star appears to advantage in kilts, are among the notable and novel features of this Paramount-Artcraft offering.

Floyd Lewis with St. Louis Realart.

Floyd Lewis, formerly operating the Arrow Film Corp. offices in St. Louis, is now the manager of the Realart Exchange in that city succeeding Joseph Desberger, resigned to guide the destinies of the Robertson-Cole exchange.

Two First National Committees Discuss Distribution and Chicago Convention

CONSIDERATION of the details of the distributing arrangement sought by Associated Producers, popularly known as the "Big Six," decision on the date and place for the 1920 annual convention of First National members and exchange managers, a final survey of the percentage allotments determined by its statistical department for every independent theatre in the country on its new sub-franchising plan, and conferences in which several new producer offers were debated, were the features of a special joint meeting of the executive committee and the Exhibitors' Defense Committee of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., held in New York on March 29 and 30.

According to the announcement there has been no final action taken by the First National executives which in any way terminated the negotiations which have been in progress for weeks between the Associated Producers and the Circuit, or which the director members of the "Big Six" have had with other distributing organizations. Two meetings between members of the executive committee for First National, with its attorneys, A. L. and S. F. Jacobs, and Nathan Burkan and Nathan Vidaver, chief counsel for the Associated Producers, resulted in an exchange of terms and conditions favored by the exhibitor members of the Circuit and sought by the directors, but without any concluding action resulting, it is said.

Annual Convention on April 26.

Pending a definite settlement of releasing arrangements, members of the "Big Six" are continuing their work on present contracts or planning in advance production work to be included in the output through whatever distributing affiliation finally is made.

The annual convention of exhibitor members of First National and the managers of the Circuit exchanges will be held at the Congress Hotel, Chicago, beginning on Monday, April 26, and continuing throughout the week. This convention will be the biggest of the annual affairs held by Circuit members since the organization of First National as an exhibitor co-operative body three years ago. As in 1919, it will be a joint meeting of the franchise owners and managers, but on this occasion, it is announced, many of the important exhibitors throughout the country will attend, in addition to the present members of the organization.

Coincident with the transaction of organization affairs by the members, the most important feature of the convention will be a complete explanation of all details of the new sub-franchising arrangement, which will become effective immediately after the convention.

Several new production propositions, fostered by independent directors, stars and producers, which have been submitted to First National in the last four weeks, were discussed by the members of the executive committee, and will be made public at the convention, when they will be taken up for final action by the membership at large.

Get Big Volume of Orders for Sennett's Big Comedy

IF a producer's past performances may be accepted as prophecy of future achievements, it would appear that Mack Sennett's "Down on the Farm" is destined for a tremendous success. In the language of film fans, "it is bound to be a clean-up."

The exhibitors throughout the country are exemplifying their belief that such will be the case by the large amount of contracts that have already been signed by them and accepted by Hiram Abrams of United Artists Corporation, which is releasing the production.

"Down on the Farm" is distinctly different from anything Mack Sennett has heretofore done. It has individuality in characterization and treatment and is a five reel comedy sensation which develops characters consistently and unfolds the plot in a screamingly funny manner and brings about entertaining complications to a merry, laughing climax.

We Have with Us To-day

C. Gardner Sullivan, Whirlwind Scenarist, Off for Africa and Everywhere

By WILLIAM J. REILLY

NO, C. Gardner Sullivan didn't ask us to deny it, but it's so obvious on the fact of it that he did not say it that we voluntarily project ourselves into the denying breach. Let it be known worldwide, as far as the super special feature is distributed, that the paraphrase, "Percentage is the thing wherein I'll catch the mazzuma of the king," is no brain-child of Mr. Sullivan's.

But be it known, however, that C. Gardner Sullivan is a strong advocate of percentage—not the kind about which distributors and exhibitors cudgel each other so lustily each week in the well-known trade papers, but the kind, for instance, whereby the playwright draws the checks for his share of the net returns at the box office. In other words, in these days of democracy and rumors of democracy, Mr. Sullivan is a royalist—beg pardon, an advocate of royalties.

But laying aside the facetious ribbon of the reportorial Underwood and turning into the concrete eight point, let it be said that this discussion on percentage grew out of tracking down the rumor that C. Gardner Sullivan, whose pen has turned out so many colorful screen stories for Thomas H. Ince, was enjoying a yearly salary of $100,000.

The trail led to the Hotel Algonquin, where, with Mrs. Sullivan, Mr. Sullivan was staying, preparatory to sailing two days later around the world. Asked to tell how much more than $100,000 he was really making, Mr. Sullivan modestly pointed the conversation directly at the fact that he is now under contract with Mr. Ince to write four pictures a year, and receive a certain percentage of the returns from the productions. Now figure out his income tax yourself.

Mr. Sullivan added that this plan has grown in such favor with the writing fraternity of Los Angeles that recently they organized to petition the Authors' League, which works upon the royalty, or percentage plan, for a charter.

Mr. Sullivan sailed on March 31 for Naples. From Italy he will work up through France to the British Isles, and then across to Norway and Sweden, thence to Everywhere. If the weather permits, it is possible Mr. Sullivan will pass from Italy over to Northern Africa. At any rate, he plans to get there eventually.

Enthusiastic Over Africa.

Mr. Sullivan's admirers are confident he will bring back with him a wealth of material for picture production. He is particularly enthusiastic over his contemplated "invasion" of Africa.

"I like to write 'desert stuff,'" said the scenarist. "There is so much color and mystery about the desert and the jungle and the people who take to those trails are so apt to be out of the ordinary in their doings that you can 'cut loose' in your stories, and bring in the musical literary touch that would be out of place in every day chronicles.

"If possible, I shall either organize or join a caravan going into the interior of Africa. The old walled city of Timbuctoo is a place I want to see, and it means a journey consuming some thirty days."

As Mr. Sullivan spoke of Africa, the flash of the creative artist came into his eyes, his whole body seemed to radiate energy and enthusiasm, he spoke rapidly, and it was easy to see that Africa will occupy a large part of his imagination and also the trunk that will inevitably house the material he will pick up on this trip around the world.

A Newspaper Man.

This will be the first "rest" Mr. Sullivan will enjoy since he went to the Coast six years ago. With some three hundred picture plays to his credit, it is no wonder that this Ince whirlwind is preparing to relish his vacation.

Like so many figures in the film industry, Mr. Sullivan received his training in the newspaper game. City rooms in St. Paul, Duluth and Minneapolis and New Orleans knew him. It was in the Crescent City that Mr. Sullivan decided to see for himself how stiff the Manhattan newspaper current was to swim in, so he came to New York and landed on the "Journal."

While on the "Journal" he became interested in scenario work, sold a number

C. Gardner Sullivan

Who started his world tour March 31 to get ideas for new stories.

of stories, read Epes Winthrop Sargent's "Photoplaywright" in Moving Picture World, and was finally "called" to the center of action on the Coast as an Ince scenarist.

"The Coward," originally written for Frank Keenan, and the picture which "made" Charles Ray, was a product of the Sullivan pen. Mr. Sullivan followed this with "The Pinch Hitter" and Ray's success was assured.

Bon Voyage!

Asked how he would define "continuity," Mr. Sullivan immediately flashed, "I would call it the blood and brains of the picture. I have seen many successful stage pieces wrecked, their punches obliterated, by imperfect continuities."

This keen-eyed individual is not satisfied to rest on his laurels. He has a habit of observing audiences watch his pictures in the theatres, sitting through two shows, and picking up the comments, the laughs, the sighs, the criticisms for future reference.

It is easy to see that on his coming trip he is going to carve a trail that, recorded on the screen with his own continuities and titles, will live for some time to come.

Levey to Picturize Leitch Book.

John Leitch, author of "Man to Man, the story of Industrial Democracy," the book which has gone into twenty-three American editions in the last eleven months and has been translated into seven languages, including Japanese, signed a contract yesterday with Harry Levey, general manager of the industrial and educational department of Universal, for the immediate production of a feature motion picture for world distribution based on the book. Mr. Leitch will himself play the leading part in the picture.

Many Suggest Name for New Universal Novelty Release

AN avalanche of suggestions has been received by Universal as the result of an advertisement in last week's issue of this publication, in which a prize was offered to the exhibitor or exhibitors who could suggest a suitable name for its new single reel novelty release. Judging from the number of names suggested, it is evident that the board of judges faces a task of large proportions.

On or about June 1, Universal plans to issue a new novelty reel. It will contain among other things a new idea in slow motion films, adventure scenics, examples of trick photography, and other unusual material.

Universal camera correspondents now operating in Europe and Asia Minor have already obtained much material that is said to have heretofore been unobtainable for magazines and news reels. Among several of the subjects already produced are scenes of the Dyak head hunters of Borneo on the war path and engaged in a foray against their enemies; pictures of an engagement between Chinese revolutionists, and African sacrifice dances taken on the upper reaches of the Congo and strange rituals of the semi-civilized folk on the Mongolian frontier.

New Hallmark Serial Shows Consolidated Stock Exchange

DURING the filming of "The Evil Eye," the new Hallmark serial by Roy L. McCardell, in which the lightweight champion of the world, Benny Leonard, has the leading role, Wall Street was shot in a manner never before attempted by any other producers, it is said.

The interior scene of the New York Consolidated Stock Exchange was made while the exchange was in session. Heretofore, it is said, no motion picture concern has been allowed to set up its cameras during the business hours of the exchange, and only upon several very rare occasions have picture concerns been privileged to make any scenes at all.

Interiors were also made of one of the largest trust companies in New York during the busy banking hours.

Milwaukee Showman Visits New York.

Charles Greenblatt, of the Merrill Theatre Amusement Company, of Milwaukee, was in New York last week. The Merrill company holds the Milwaukee territory franchise in Associated Exhibitors, Inc., and during his stay Mr. Greenblatt concerned himself with several matters pertaining to his connection with Associated.

George Meeker, formerly general sales manager for World Films and the Republic distributing organization, is now general manager of the Prizma Pictures, Inc. * * *

Arthur Sorenson has been added to the Kinogram camera staff in New York and surrounding territory. * * *

Terry Ramsaye, general manager of Kinograms, spends his week ends on his forty-acre farm at Goodgrounds, L. I., ninety miles from Broadway. * * *

Seymour Schussell has been made assistant to Lester Adler at Realart's New York exchange. * * *

Hubert Henley, former director with Goldwyn and until recently producing independently, will direct for Selznick Pictures. * * *

Fritz Tidden began work March 29 on one of the best jobs he ever had in his life and the one in which he fits like a duck's foot in the mud. He will henceforth be located at Selznick's studios at Fort Lee, N. J., editing and titling pictures and otherwise using his unquestioned ability. * * *

Matt Moore, brother of Tom and Owen, will support Elaine Hammerstein in "Whispers." Ida Darling is included in the cast to be starred. "Whispers" is a Selznick production.

In the Charming Springtime Man's Mind Turns Toward Lo—Music Just Like Violet Heming Is Playing. This Paramount production is entitled "The Cost." Wonder if it dwells upon rents, clothes, food and everything that "costs"?

With Well Known Film Folk

Charles Berger, Kinogram cameraman at Banff, Alberta, Canada, while taking motion pictures descending on the celebrated Banff slide, made the first film successfully and decided to take a second in reverse motion. He got the pictures all right, but landed in a snow bank with a broken wrist.

B. T. Hodge has been appointed United Picture Corporations' salesman at Chicago, C. A. Weinberg at Cincinnati, Clyde Slater at Los Angeles, Charles Gouley at Philadelphia and L. W. Griffith at Pittsburgh.

Harry Wolfberg, representative of Famous Players-Lasky of Cleveland, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and Pittsburgh, was in New York a few days this week. Harold Akers, of St. Louis, representative of F. P.-L., was in New York at the same time.

Sam Morris is one of the busiest men in New York arranging the details of the convention of the Selznick and Republic branch managers to be held at the Hotel Astor on April 5.

William Faversham and William Collier, it is commonly reported, will be engaged to star in Selznick productions in the near future.

Harry Buxbaum's little boy, Jackie, fell from a second-story window of his home at Larchmont, N. Y., on Monday, March 29. The child's escape from injury was miraculous. Aside from fright he suffered no serious consequences.

J. C. Zimmerman, Kinogram cameraman at New York, has gone to Kansas City to establish a branch office in that territory.

J. Allen Boone, Western representative of Robertson-Cole, returned last week to the Coast, after three weeks in New York.

Sydney Cohan, business manager for L. J. Glassineer of Glendale, Cal., is in New York on a business trip. Glassineer is one of the producing units for Robertson-Cole.

William Worthington will finish "The Silent Barrier" on April 20 and then goes to the Coast to direct the second Tracy production, "His Unknown Wife."

Arthur Beck and Sydney Garrett return from the Coast the week of April 5. They have completed arrangements for the Artco production, "Indian Summer," from the play by Augustus Thomas.

J. H. Mayer, Universal's publicity and advertising director, has returned to New York from the Universal Chicago convention. While in the West Mr. Mayer appointed publicity representatives in the following cities: Marie C. Blanchard was appointed at Toledo, Ohio; William Danziger at Cincinnati, L. V. Schneider at Indianapolis, and Ann McCurdy at Milwaukee. Mr. Mayer is negotiating with others, so he will have appointed representatives in all the large cities in the United States.

Lewis Corri, formerly with Associated Press, is now associated with J. F. Reilly, publicity director of Robertson-Cole.

Harry Reichenbach is in Chicago at present writing to attend the opening presentation of "The Forbidden Woman" at The Playhouse. He leaves Chicago for the Coast on Friday, April 2.

Harry M. Berman, of the Universal home office, is responsible for the Universal convention at Chicago, having made all arrangements for it. On his way back to New York he stopped at Pittsburgh to complete details for the showing of "The Virgin of Stamboul" in that city. By the way, "The Virgin of Stamboul" opens at the Chicago Playhouse Sunday, April 4.

Jack Adolfi, directing Georges Carpentier, has been overrun by applicants who are anxious to take part in the Carpentier picture for Robertson-Cole. Some are offering their services free.

Charles Barrell, of the Western Electric motion picture department, will go to Washington and Northern Idaho early in May to take photographs of the red cedars abounding in those territories for a Western educational to be released through its own distributing bureaus. Mr. Barrell claims these educationals are absolutely free from all advertising and are frequently used on theatre screens.

Frank J. Rembusch, in the course of his itinerary as secretary of Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, postcards us from West Baden Springs Hotel, West Baden, Ind., where he is taking a brief vacation.

Arthur Lang, special South American representative for Nicholas Power Company, after several weeks' sickness, a mighty close call, will return to his daily labors on Monday, April 6. Mr. Lang has been associated with Nicholas Power for many years, during which he has made a host of friends in the industry, who will be glad to learn of his complete recovery and his return to 90 Gold street.

Frank J. Howard, of Boston, one of the old guard of the industry, and an original exhibitor at the "Hub," was in New York last week looking after his many picture interests and probably to attend the independent's convention here.

William Sievers, of St. Louis, and Harry Koplar, also identified with St. Louis theatrical enterprises, were seen at the Hotel Astor in close conference, which some one said was suggestive of merger.

Will J. Glaser, of Grand Theatre, Fribault, Minn., informs us that the censorship in Minnesota has apparently been dropped, notwithstanding there is considerable agitation among some factions for Sunday closing.

Frank Newman, of Newman Theatre Enterprises of Kansas City, was in New York the week of March 29. He was among the many members of the First National who met in executive session during the week.

E. W. Hammonds, of Educational Films Corporation, was seen in the neighborhood of 729 Seventh avenue, wearing a smile suggestive of increasing popularity and prosperity of the Educational product.

Tefft Johnson, who is directing for the Educational Films, was engaged in taking scenes of Henry Hudson on "The Half Moon" in the neighborhood of Bear Mountain on the Hudson River. Hundreds of Indians lined the shore to welcome the venturesome explorer.

Ain't Ya Kind a Sorry for These Poor Film Players?

The director made them dress this way though for "King Spruce," a strong Hodkinson release with Mitchell Lewis.

Fairbanks Finishing "Mollycoddle," Next "Big Four" Film; Send Show to Indians

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS, who was slightly delayed some weeks ago because of breaking his finger during the filming of his next United Artists' production, "Mollycoddle," is now speeding up the finishing touches of this picture, having returned to his studio at Hollywood after spending many weeks with the Hopi Indians, where many of the exceptional shots were made.

Mr. Fairbanks has injected into this production no end of novel stunts and he claims that it will be far superior to anything that he has ever done.

While living among the Indians and the people of Polacco, Ariz., he became close friends with the natives and they learned to become enthusiastic over what Doug was doing.

Gave Indians a Treat.

Upon his return to California, he sent the Indians several reels of motion pictures, among which were some of the scenes which were taken in their community. Accompanying the films were a screen, a projection machine and an operator, together with the necessary electrical equipment for operating.

He did this because he had promised the Indians to show them close-up views of some of the world's leading events and also to introduce them to something different from what they were accustomed to seeing all their lives in the Arizona desert.

On the occasion of showing the pictures to the Indians, they were called together and everything was set for a pleasant time. After a short while the projection machine began to click and the Indian figures in fantastic dances began to sway and move across the screen.

All of a sudden there was a buzz of excitement throughout the audience. Then there was a mysterious noise that came from the rear and an old redskin hurriedly left the place. The excitement grew and later it was learned why. The leader of the redskins explained "Heap like big show, but see heap big ghosts."

It was learned that some of the Indians photographed a few weeks previously had died and their reappearance on the screen caused consternation among the redskins.

Select's French Head Brings Films in Plane from London

THAT the Paris offices of Selznick Pictures, at 8 Avenue de Clichy, are progressive in the most modern sense of the word is indicated in the most recent communication from Jean Rosen, general manager of Select Pictures Corporation of France.

With Mr. Rosen's letter it becomes known that the first air service used for the transportation of films in Europe was employed by the Select Paris office recently. Manager Rosen, having to visit the London office, did so in an aeroplane and brought back to Paris with him a number of films.

Another distinction claimed by the Select Paris office is the huge searchlight on top of its building. This light throws its rays over an area of two miles and can be seen from the most important quarters of Paris, such as the Place de la Concorde, l'Avenue des Champs Elysees, Place de l'Etoile, Place Pigalle and Place de la Opera.

She's on Her Way.

Pearl White, Fox star, sailing for France after completion of her second picture.

The first roof garden in Paris also falls to the lot of the Select offices, it is declared. The garden is located on top of the building at 8 Avenue de Clichy for the use of employes and customers.

Educational Screen Supplement Shows How Stars Work, Love, Fight and Rest

HOMES, happiness and domesticity might be called the theme of the Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement which will be released by Educational Films Corporation, since all of the principal participants appear to be enjoying themselves very highly. While the series has been noted for its intimate series of the stars "at work and play," this number probably takes on a little more of the "friendly feeling" than any of the others.

First we are shown Dorothy Phillips in her home at Hollywood and then we are taken with her to the Universal studio where there are some views of her in her dressing room and then at work under the direction of her husband, Alan Holubar, in a scene from one of her last productions.

Taylor Holmes then contributes a bit on the right way to make love, illustrating a number of methods. He is shown as the "boob" lover, the bored lover and the gallant lover, so that the photoplay patron is left to take his (or her) choice. Virginia Valli Valli, Holmes' leading woman in "The Very Idea," is at the receiving end of the love making.

The next title tells the patron that Allan Dwan and James Kirkwood, who recently surrendered the megaphone to return to actorial work on the screen, will be seen spending a very busy Sunday. It was the idea that Kirkwood and Dwan would spend Sunday at the Dwan home in Hollywood rehearsing for Kirkwood's big fight scene in "The Luck of the Irish," but instead they stretch out on the lawn and merely dream of their real work. There is some good double photoplay in this excerpt.

Helen Chadwick, the young actress, who has recently scored a hit in Goldwyn productions, shows that she is another home lover. The heroine of the two Rupert Hughes pictures is shown in her bungalow at Hollywood enjoying a rest between pictures.

The final chapter shows the home of Sessue Hayakawa and his wife, Tsuru Aoki. The quaint little Japanese lady is evidently resting, for the camera pictures Sessue kissing her goodbye as he hurries away to the studios to finish up his latest production.

National Screen Service Operating.

The National Screen Service, which was recently organized and is now in full swing operating among many of the large theatres throughout the East, is offering an announcement service to the exhibitor in the form of motion pictures. These announcements consist of the original film as seen in the production with hand lettered titles, closeup of the stars and actual scenes taken from the pictures themselves. As the exhibitors know these are easily attached to the feature and are presented to his patrons without any interruption to his presentation.

Some remarkably fine openings are said to have been designed, each of which is made especially for the theatre using the service. This is followed by a title reading "Coming" or "Coming next week," as desired, which in turn is followed by the change days. Then follows the main title of the feature, a close-up of the star or scene from the production.

Leave It to McMahan.

I. W. McMahan, president of the McMahan and Jackson Film Exchange, has been selected by members of the Cincinnati Exchange Club to go to Columbus April 13 to help organize the Ohio Association of Exchange Clubs.

Every time a local newspaper carries an advertisement concerning your theatre, have a "reading notice" go with it in another column. Get the full value of your investment. Reviews printed in Moving Picture World are valuable as "readers." Copy them when you play the film they refer to.

"HOME WITH THE BACON," SING FOX SALESMEN.

BRINGING home the bacon" is the new song they are singing in the William Fox Exchange. The most persuasive voices in Louis Rosenbluh's choir of salesmen are the coloratura tenor of Nat Furst, the alto of Morris Markowitz and the baritone of David Gross. They are being heard by exhibitors everywhere singing specials that excel in a rich mixture of the Far Numbara scale. Cantor Schmertz, who is assistant concert master, has a lordly bass that reverberates along the sprinkling pipes of the Fox New York Exchange, though Organist Max Felder and Percussionist Rosengarten keep their basso profundo voices well in tune to swing time for the chorus of angels in the booking department.

The Cleveland and Dallas Fox sales choirs are also singing lustily, but they have not the guidance of the Rosenbluh baton which is excelling this year in victory marches that mix well with the hilarious Mutt and Jeffs.

Jack Wolfe has a fine solo in "Take the cash and let the credit go," the accompaniment to which is played with fine bell effect on an instrument that is registering success in this the third annual "concert"-ed effort for greater Fox business unity.

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

THE town is running over with distinguished visitors from other parts. "Famous Filmers," as Sam Lear, the supply man of St. Louis, used to called 'em, are as common around town as tourists from Iowa were a few weeks ago.

The bird that wrote the piece about not being able to throw a stick across any street in Louisville, Ky., without hitting two or three colonels on the shins, could come out here and pull the same gag about our fair city and movie magnates.

The hotels are full, and if any more of the boys come they'll have to take board in the cafeterias, which wouldn't be so bad if they'd give you an extra fork for your pie.

Busy Bivalves Bent on Business.

I don't think there is anything deep, dark and mysterious about all of these people blowing into town at once. It looks like an accidental gathering of the clans, although when it comes to talking to some of them you feel like "a gathering of the clans" would be a better expression to use.

Take Ben B. Fineman from New York, for instance. When you breeze up to Ben and say: "What brought you out to the coast?" he'll reply, "Oh, I just come out to see how it looks."

Which is fair enough for a starter; but when you go ahead and ask, "Well, how does it look?" he'll come back with, "Well, so far, it looks like rain." Which is right. But I got the dope on Mr. Fineman. He's got a big thing up his sleeve.

It was almost as bad with Abe Warner. When I asked him if there was anything stirring, he started telling me all about running off one of Al St. John's comedies the night before at the Liberty Theatre, and how the comedy was a bear—all of which I knew, from having seen Al making parts of it. He talked as though he had come all the way out here to look at a film that Sam or Jack could have bundled up and sent to New York by parcel post.

Warner Plans Big Studio.

Mr. Warner finally came across with some big news, however, and told me about the big studio his firm was planning to build on Sunset Boulevard, in Hollywood, and also about shipping the first episodes of the new Helen Holmes serial to New York, and that the whole thing will be finished by the middle of April, and a lot of good dope about his experiences in exploiting films in conjunction with exhibitors who were afraid to go to the bat with advertising and price boosting—which will have to go into another story.

Famous Filmers Frustrate Inquisitive Inquirers, Copying Curious Clam Custom

By GIEBLER

Balaban and Katz own seven first run houses in Chicago, and they are building three more—one of them, a $3,500,000 proposition which will seat 4,500 people, will be located on State and Lake streets, the solar plexus of Chi's business center.

These theatrical magnates are taking a little vacation and paying their first visit to Filmland, and in spite of the fact that Ben B. Fineman spoke the truth when he made the remark about rain, they are saying things about our fair city that must make the members of the Boosters Club have a very joyful feeling.

A Plentitude of "Knock-Outs."

Sidney Garrett, of the J. Frank Brockliss Enterprises, says he is looking around and is in the market for features, provided they are in the special or knock-out class—which remark guarantees him quite a few phone calls, quite a few requests for interviews and quite a few invitations to private showings. There are a great many "knock-outs" knocking around the colony waiting for a live buyer to come along.

Mr. Garrett likes the town so well that he has taken a house in Canyon Drive, one of our swellest residence canyons, and installed Mrs. Garrett and their small son, Sidney, therein, and it looks as though they might stay all summer.

Theodore Wharton, producer of "Exploits of Elaine," "Mysteries of Myra" and other famous films, is looking for atmosphere and locations for a big spectacular Oriental feature. He says if he can find what he wants here, he will start production; if not, he will go to Asia.

Oh! Deah!

These old summer furs are so warm. Lillian Rub appearing with Chris Rub in Universal comedies.

Of course we will not let him get away. After he has looked over our wonderful line of mountains, foothills, canyons and deserts, he will agree that we can give Asia or any other part of the world cards and spades and beat them to a frazzle when it comes to picturesque and diversified scenery, Oriental or otherwise. And in the meantime, I hope he runs across Edgar Lewis, who went to the Orient a few months back, and lets Edgar tell him of the difficulties and disappointments that he met up with on his trip.

Arthur Beck is here to install one of the units of the Gibraltar Films in a western studio. The beautiful and gracious Leah Baird, who is Mrs. Beck, will head the company as star in an adaptation of a story by Gelett Burgess called "The Life Line," which is about the best thing that Burgess ever wrote.

William Worthington will direct the feature, which will be of the super class and run about six reels.

Laemmle Lies Low.

Carl Laemmle has been so busy up in his captain's bridge office on top of the administration building at U City that neither the Neck nor anybody else knows just what brought him to the coast at this time, but it's safe enough to lay the usual dollar to a doughnut that he'll announce something big pretty soon. Mr. Laemmle usually pulls something in the major league line every time he hits the coast.

C. L. Outing-Chester is here to superintend the erection of his new studio on the plot of ground out near the Fox studios on Western avenue in Hollywood.

Mr. Chester's plant will be complete from all standpoints, with laboratory and all, and will be the starting point for the various expeditions that search the globe from top to bottom and from pole to pole for Outing-Chester Scenics and Screenies.

Williams Closes Big Contract.

J. D. Williams is looking after First National interests, and holding consultations with Sol Lesser and Mike and Abe Gore, who hold the First National franchise for Southern California and Arizona. Mr. Williams has already closed one $250,000 contract and nobody knows how many more deals of the same size he's got up his sleeve.

I have left Archie MacArthur to the last because—well, because Mac's one of the family and it wouldn't be polite to put him up in the front of the story. But here's the dope about Mac.

He came out here just before Christmas to make a survey of the colony, and then a contingency arose at the home office that needed his august presence and he hit the rattler for the East on a few hour's notice.

Now he's back to finish the job he started, and he says he's going to meet every one in the colony and shake every hand on the coast before he goes back to New York.

Harry Crandall Returns East.

Harry Crandall, treasurer of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., and owner of a string of theatres in and about Washington, D. C., has returned to the East after a brief visit to California. While on the Coast Mr. Crandall worked with General Manager F. C. Quimby in the interests of Associated Exhibitors, Inc.

Mr. Crandall was accompanied on the trip by his family.

*"You Can't Keep a Good Man Down,"
Says Mr. Cochrane of Mr. Laemmle,
The New Manager of Universal City*

R. H. COCHRANE, vice-president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has announced the appointment of a new general manager for Universal City, the Universal studios. He said:

"I have appointed a new general manager of Universal City. This is my first appointee for the big job and I am confident I have picked a good man. He is a hard worker, conscientious and knows all the ins and outs of the business because I myself brought him up in it.

"He knows a good story when he sees it, he has the faculty of making friends and of securing hearty co-operation from directors, actors and all others involved in the making of good pictures.

"I am going to give him a corps of assistant general managers which if laid end and end would reach from Universal City to Medicine Hat, with enough left over to make up a fire department for Ishpeming. He is a bright, eager, young American, full of pep, and I know he will give us the best pictures in the history of the Universal.

"His name? Oh, yes, his first name is Carl and his last name is Laemmle."

Industry Honors Memory of Late Stanley V. Mastbaum

THE annual memorial services in honor of the late Stanley V. Mastbaum were held on Sunday afternoon, March 28, in the Mastbaum Memorial Hall, Eaglesville Sanatorium, near Norristown, Pa. The hall was erected by friends of Mr. Mastbaum after his death two years ago and was crowded on Sunday with persons who wished to pay tribute to a genius of the motion picture industry whose methods are today being perpetuated by the Stanley Company of America.

The exercises included singing by several vocal artists and selections by the Stanley orchestra, in addition to several notable speakers who lauded Mr. Mastbaum for his charitable contributions. Judge John M. Patterson was the principal speaker.

Among those who were present were Louis J. Selznick, B. S. Moss, ex-Senator Clarence Wolf, Ellis Gimbel, John McGuirk, Abraham and Louis Sablosky, Louis Grestley, Frank Buhler and Richard J. Beamish, who presided. The Philadelphia Exchange-men's Association attended and many prominent film and theatrical men from Philadelphia and New York were present.

Mr. Mastbaum was one of the founders of the sanatorium and one of its directors. The institution is non-sectarian and patients are admitted free of cost.

NEWS of the INDEPENDENT FIELD

PRODUCTION

By C.S. SEWELL

DISTRIBUTION

Independent Market a Good Field for Short Subjects, Is Conviction of Jack Cohn

FOLLOWING his attendance at the independent convention at Chicago last week, Jack Cohn, producer of Hall Room Boys Comedies and other short subjects for the independent market, is more firmly convinced than ever that independent methods of booking covering territories compose a more profitable and convenient means of obtaining pictures than any other.

"Every exchangeman and exhibitor I met while in Chicago," said Mr. Cohn, "told me that while there were plenty of features to be had, there was a shortage of short subjects for the independent buyer. All independent exchangemen are interested in the development of the short subject just at this time, since this end of the business is just as important as the production of the larger features.

Distribution Marks Similar.

"The same characteristics which mark the distribution of feature products to the independent market hold true in the distribution of the short subjects, such as comedies, scenics and similar pictures. There is just as much overhead expense saving, just as little detail and just as much real value in good pictures produced especially for the independent market as there is in the production of big features for the same market.

"Our own brand, the Hall Room Boys Comedies, has been distributed through independent exchanges ever since their production was started. Exchangemen told me that this was one reason for their success, and it came to me that the ease with which exhibitors and exchangemen found them profitable was the lack of expense involved in handling them, both at their end and at our end."

Live Up to Best Principles.

Mr. Cohn urged the adherence by producers of short subjects to the principles which apply in the production of the heaviest subject. He declared that the independent buyer was just as choicy in the matter of material as was the regular program buyer.

"The independent production," he said, "is slowly but surely ascending to a place in the sun, and to keep it there is the duty of every producer of this type of picture. Today marks the beginning of a new era in the production of all types of pictures for this field. Everyone connected with the independent market is eager to place that field of the industry upon a level with any other, and this will come in the near future.

"However, every producer, every exchangeman, and every exhibitor who favors the independent method must hold himself clear from sharp practices, cheap methods and bad pictures. Keep the product good and keep the public as your friend."

Independents Flock to the Chicago Convention

On page 217 starts our story of the convention of Independent state rights producers and territorial buyers. Three pages are devoted to this important story. James S. McQuade, Chicago representative of Moving Picture World, tells a complete and informative story of a convention that may develop many new angles to the open market situation.

George Benoit Now Cameraman for Park-Whiteside Pictures

George Benoit, formerly a cameraman for the Fox Film Corporation, handling "Carmen," "The Honor System," "The Regeneration" and other subjects, is now connected with Lester Park and Edward Whiteside, producers of "Empty Arms" and "The Scarlet Dragon," starring Gail Kane, directed by Frank Reicher from Willard King Bradley's stories.

Mr. Benoit is said to have effected some photographic "stunts" new to the screen, particularly in lighting and "trick" work.

"Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde"

Released by Pioneer Film

THE Pioneer Film Corporation announces that according to the schedule set months ago, the production of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," in which Sheldon Lewis plays the leading role, was released in the majority of Pioneer co-operative exchanges during the past week. Mr. Lewis is said to have patterned his interpretation of the dual role on that of the late Richard Mansfield, but in the scenes in which Mr. Hyde is the center of interest to have deviated considerably.

The production is announced as being mounted with care and the lighting effects to be the result of months of experiments, present striking departures from the ordinary. A large number of inquiries have been received from independent exchanges.

The Pioneer laboratories have been working overtime getting out the quota of prints to fill the orders placed by Pioneer Co-operative Exchanges.

Many First Runs Secured on "Skinner's Dress Suit"

VICTOR KREMER Film Features, Inc., announces that "Skinner's Dress Suit" is arousing greater interest among state rights buyers than any reissue handled by that company, numerous inquiries are being received and considerable territory has already been sold. Many first-run bookings have been secured by New York Independent Masterfilms, Inc., handling the subjects in this territory.

A novel advertising accessory has been prepared. It consists of a cut-out for lobby display, in the form of a dress suit, is five feet in height and carries on the shirt front a reproduction of one of the scenes from the play.

"Oh, Margaret's writin' a love letter!" Henry B. Walthall steps in the next two and shows he can still act.

Radin Pictures Offers Weekly Release of Miller's "The Weakly Indigestion"

RADIN PICTURES have secured the World's distribution rights on "The Weakly Indigestion," a series of single reel comedy subjects picturing current events in burlesque fashion. The series will consist of fifty-two issues to be released one a week beginning about May 1, through state right channels.

"The Weakly Indigestion" is being produced by Lincoln Miller with a cast of comedians headed by James Parrott, Charles Dougherty and Sid Smith, formerly connected with the Keystone and Lehrman companies. Lincoln Miller is a newspaper man of the Pacific Coast, a special feature writer and the author of many short stories which have appeared in the prominent magazines. He has attained a reputation as a humorist and his distinctive style is said to lend itself admirably to screen production.

Matthias Radin, head of Radin Pictures, says: "We believe in presenting these subjects to the state right market we are offering something for which good showmen are constantly on the lookout—something unusual and different. 'The Weakly Indigestion' is the kind that can deservedly be given prominence in the billing. Sid Grauman, of the Rialto Theatre, Los Angeles, booked the entire series after viewing the first two releases. The management of the Tivoli Theatre, San Francisco, also contracted for the entire output."

Nigh Picked Excellent Cast for Photodrama "Democracy"

IN casting the Francis Lee Lybarger photodrama "Democracy—The Vision Restored," Director William Nigh is announced to have taken into consideration the suitability of the players for their respective roles rather than to have any particular star.

Mr. Nigh himself, who portrayed a similar role in "My Four Years in Germany," portrays the role of a thinker, a man of high ideals, the representative of democracy. Leslie Austen is cast as the thinker's brother, an autocrat; J. H. Gilmore, the veteran stage actor, is the money monarch; Maurine Powers is the blind girl; Albert Tavernier is cast as her grandfather, the old shepherd.

Halbert Brown, who impersonated Ambassador Gerard in "My Four Years in Germany," appears as the doctor, and Elsie DeWolfe as the Woman. Charles W. Sutton, the former Edison player, is the money monarch's valet. In addition, there are Pete Raymond, Burt Gurgeon, Walter DeLeon, E. Pollock, Franklyn Hanna, and a company of one hundred others.

Hirsh Announces Many Sales on "Adventures of Helen" Series

Nathan Hirsh, president of the Aywon Film Corporation, reports that "The Adventures of Helen," adapted from "The Hazards of Helen," and starring Helen Holmes, is going over big.

The following exchanges are now booking the twenty episodes of two reels each: Aywon Film Corporation, New York; Famous Pictures Sales Company, of Buffalo; Trimount Film Company, Boston; Premier Film Corporation, Atlanta; Educational Film Company, Minneapolis; Liberty Film Exchange, Washington; Liberty Film Exchange, San Francisco; Phil Goldstone, Omaha; Sterling Film Company, Des Moines; First National Exchange, Kansas City, and Lyric Film Supply Company, Terre Haute.

At all of these exchanges many prints are in work. These two-reelers are said to be outdrawing five-reel features in many instances.

Take Care in Picking Cast to Support Ethel Barrymore

SELECTION of the supporting cast for Ethel Barrymore in her forthcoming super-feature, "The Super Woman," entailed almost as much care and supervision on the part of her directors, Joseph Byron Totten and Joseph W. Smiley, as did the selection of a suitable vehicle for the display of that star's histrionic talents.

Supporting Miss Barrymore will be Kenneth Hunter, a prominent English actor and a hero of the World and Boer wars, who returned from abroad several weeks ago.

Greta Hartman, recently seen on the speaking stage with Mme. Mimi Aguglia, will also be seen in support of Miss Barrymore. Miss Hartman has handled roles since childhood, making her initial stage appearance as Mary Jane with Henry Dixey when he produced "Mary Jane's Pa."

Another notable engagement for the picture is that of Bigelow Cooper, a dramatic actor of many years' legitimate and film experience.

Hoffman of Pioneer Returns from Countrywide Sales Trip

M. H. Hoffman, general manager of the Pioneer Film Corporation, has just returned from a country-wide trip in which he visited all the exchange centers in which offices of the Pioneer Co-operative Distribution System are located.

Mr. Hoffman reports that conditions in every territory are every day becoming more favorable to the independent interests.

On his trip Mr. Hoffman visited Toronto, Montreal, Boston, Detroit, Cleveland, Chicago, Cincinnati, Dallas, Atlanta, Baltimore, Washington and Philadelphia.

Monte Carlo Replica in "Blind Love."

Gerald F. Bacon's six-reel production, "Blind Love," starring Lucy Cotton, which was booked over the Loew Circuit last week, shows an exact replica of the main gambling hall of Monte Carlo. Director Oliver D. Bailey spent more than a week "shooting" the scenes of this episode in Max Marcin's drama.

Standard Effects to Break Records.

Standard Film Exchange, of Pittsburgh, Pa., controlling the rights for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia to the Mack Sennett six-reel comedy, "Tillie's Punctured Romance," reissued on the state right market by Tower Film Corporation, are anticipating a record-breaking business with this feature. Exhibitors are reported as manifesting great interest in this production. The Standard is putting over a big publicity campaign on this release.

Aronowitz Resigns from Quality.

Quality Attractions Company, a state rights exchange located in the Citizens' National Bank Building, Des Moines, and operating in Iowa and Nebraska, announces that S. Aronowitz has disposed of his interest in the company and resigned as its general manager. While Mr. Aronowitz has received several flattering offers recently, he has not yet divulged what his future activities will be.

Lincoln Miller.

Humorist and Author, producing "The Weakly Indigestion," a one-reel comic being distributed by Radin Pictures.

Inter-Ocean Sells 37 Films for Big Foreign Territory

CONTRACTS closed last week by Gus Schlesinger, manager of the department of foreign film sales of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, convey the territorial rights to thirty-two American productions for physical distribution throughout the Dutch East Indies, Straits Settlements, India, Burma and Ceylon. The list of pictures embraces twenty-seven Black Diamond Comedies, until recently distributed in America by the Paramount-Artcraft Pictures Corporation, and five independent feature attractions which have proved their right to be termed "box office" attractions.

The buyer of these films is desirous of withholding his name from the trade paper columns for obvious reasons. He plans to inaugurate a vast sales campaign, and not until he has perfected the minutest details of this campaign, does he want the least bit of information concerning his acquisition to appear in print or otherwise be mentioned in trade circles.

"Everybody's Business" Liked in Michigan.

The six-reel feature, "Everybody's Business," continues to meet with success in Michigan, where it is being shown under the auspices of the American Legion (the Chas. A. Learned Post No. 1), says the W. H. Productions Company, which attribute it not only to the entertainment qualifications of the production, but also to its Americanization appeal.

Clark of First National Praises "Screen Smiles"

THE First National Exchanges in New York and Boston, distributing "Screen Smiles" in their respective territories, report that this weekly release is meeting with widespread approval from first run houses.

R. H. Clark, treasurer and general manager of the New York First National, is enthusiastic over this novelty short reel, and in a letter to Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., distributing this subject, states: "This 500 feet of film has more laughs than the average two-reel comedy, and judging from the business we are doing now with 'Screen Smiles' it will be at the head of our short stuff in the near future."

Exhibitor Enters Independent Exchange Field; Opens Hatch Feature Service

CHARLES L. HATCH, a theatre owner in Boston, has entered the field of independent exchanges and formed the Hatch Feature Service of Boston, Mass.

According to Mr. Hatch, the purpose of this new concern is to handle the independent distribution of big features and up to date specials for the New England States. Offices have been opened at 42 Melrose street, and the company has purchased from Schomer-Ross Productions, Inc., the New England rights to "The Sacred Flame," with Emily Stevens.

Charles L. Hatch, together with H. M. Davis, a New England exchangeman, and John H. Foy, general manager for the Hatch Theatres, were in New York recently for the purpose of lining up attractions, and according to Mr. Hatch a deal had been consummated covering the New England rights to the Jans Picture, "Love Without Question," featuring Olive Tell. Mr. Hatch further states that he is in the market for other big features and that he will keep close touch on New York's independent producers for the purpose of securing the best productions for his territory.

Public Desires Slap-Stick

Films, Says Morris Schlank

THE producer of the Hank Mann Comedies distributed by Arrow Film Corporation, Morris Schlank, is now in New York and is gratified at the manner in which these pictures have been received, and the way many of the largest theatres are booking them.

"The comedy filed has been looking for slapstick two-reelers like the Hank Mann subjects," says Mr. Schlank, "and it is for that reason that they have been so successful. My associates and myself studied the field thoroughly before starting the production of the series, and have tried to introduce the things we learned through that study. This series answers the demand for wholesome comedy which retains slapstick and burlesque of a distinctive sort.

The latest first run houses booking these pictures are Clune's Broadway, Los Angeles, The Tivoli, San Francisco, and Fox Bedford and Ridgewood in Brooklyn."

Mr. Schlank is a guest of W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation.

Additional Sales Announced on "Love Without Question"

JANS PICTURES INC., additional territory has been sold for its first production "Love Without Question" starring Olive Tell.

Rights were sold to the A. H. Blank Enterprises of Des Moines, for Iowa and Nebraska; and New England to the Hatch Photoplay Service of Boston, Mass.

These two deals, Mr. Jans states, were consummated upon the return of F. E. Backer, general sales manager of Jans Pictures Inc., and himself after an extensive trip throughout the United States in the interest of the production. This closes out the majority of the territory in the United States.

Mr. Jans states now all efforts will be centered on the production of the additional Olive Tell features directed by B. A. Rolfe. The officials are pleased with the speed with which the territory had been sold.

Arrow Renames Ora Carew Feature

To Be Known as "Love's Protege"

Arrow Film Corporation announces that the Ora Carew feature announced in our last issue will not be released under the title of "The Lost Daughter" but will be distributed under its original title "Love's Protege."

This change was made after consultation with several buyers, and it is felt that it is more striking and more applicable to the picture, which is described as a simple romance of the western mountain country, in which the star plays the role of an unsophisticated mountain girl who finds love and happiness among her beloved hills.

Pretty Maurine Powers

Appearing as the blind girl in "Democracy," made by Democracy Photoplay Company.

Lybarger's "Democracy" Has a New Type of Leading Woman

THE personification of the spirit of light in "Democracy—The Vision Restored" is portrayed by Maurine Powers, whom Director Nigh believes to be an unusual "find." She is described as having a spiritual face, surrounded by golden curls, and to be an entirely new type of leading lady.

Miss Powers is a native of Terre Haute. She is an accomplished dancer and also an artist, her paintings having attracted considerable attention. Her motion picture career began two years ago, when she played a small part in a Metro picture. She later had an emotional bit in "To Hell With the Kaiser," and was cast as the sweetheart of Frederick the Great in "Beware." Following this she appeared with Johnny Dooley in two comedies, and was then selected by Director Nigh for the role of the blind girl, Mary.

Trade Showing of Jans Initial

Production Held at the Strand

The first public presentation of Jans Pictures Inc. initial feature, "Love Without Question" was held at the Strand Theatre, New York, Wednesday morning, March 24, before an audience composed of exhibitors, exchangemen, representatives of the press and others well known in the industry.

The picture was well received, and the officials of the company express themselves as being highly gratified. Herman F. Jans states that more than one praiseworthy comment was made, and particular mention was accorded to the manner in which the story was told and the acting of Miss Tell.

Harry Weiss Organizes Company and Opens Exchange in Chicago

Harry Weiss, who recently resigned as manager of the First National exchange in Chicago, has entered the independent exchange field and organized the Superior Screen Service, Inc., which will operate in Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Michigan and Iowa. The headquarters are located on the sixth floor of the Film Exchange Building, in offices formerly occupied by Doll Van Film Corporation.

The company will maintain a feature department and a commercial department. Through the feature department, twenty-six features will be released each year.

LOS ANGELES

NEWS LETTER

BY A. H. GIEBLER

Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles, Contracts for First Runs on All Circuit Releases

A BIG contract has just been consummated between J. D. Williams, general manager of the First National Exhibitors Circuit, and Gore Brothers, Sol Lesser and the Kinema Theatre, whereby every first run right to all productions released by the First National Circuit is cinched for the Kinema Theatre. The sum of $250,000 is involved in the deal, and this amount calls for the service and first run rights of all pictures on the First National list for the coming season for exhibition on the Kinema screen.

The reason for this unique deal between partners, as it were—Gore Brothers and Sol Lesser being the franchise holders of the First National releases as well as owners of the Kinema Theatre—is that during the past two months many local exhibitors have outbid each other in the effort to get some of the coming big special First National photoplays for their houses. For instance, Griffith's next picture, "The Idol Dancer," has been bid for in such a way.

The policy of the Kinema calls for one-week runs on all productions, and in order to secure for their own house the pictures which naturally should be given to its screen, the owners have signed this unusual contract.

Bernstein Buys Capitol Studio.

Isadore Bernstein has resigned the office of president of the National Film Corporation, and has taken over the Capitol studio on Lillian Way, where he will produce pictures with the three new stars, Neal Hart, Helen Gibson and Omer Locklear, whom he has just engaged to play the featured roles in his productions. Negotiations are also being made for the services of another star, now in the East.

The Capitol studio was originally the Lone Star plant where Charles Chaplin's comedies for Mutual were filmed; later the studio was acquired by Metro and remained Metro's headquarters until the present studio was built on Cahuenga avenue.

New Producing Company.

The David Trattner Production Company, operating at Long Beach, Cal., is presenting Irene Hunt in a series of two-reel comedy dramas adapted from "A Yellow Journalist," by Miriam Michelson, and dealing with the adventures of a sob sister on a newspaper. The first of the series, "Back on the Job," has just been completed by Director Fred A. Kelsey. Clyde McCoy is leading man for Miss Hunt.

The officers of the David Trattner Production Company are David Trattner, president; E. M. Rosenthal, vice-president; Erwin Trattner, secretary and treasurer; and Shields Lawson, business manager.

Hayakawa to Leave Haworth.

Sessue Hayakawa, the Japanese film star, has made the announcement that he will sever his connection with the Haworth Film Corporation in May, when he will have completed his contract with that company, and will organize a new company, to be known as the Sessue Hayakawa Feature Play Company, which will be capitalized at $1,500,000.

Mr. Hayakawa will produce only four pictures a year under the new arrangement, and will probably continue to use his present quarters, the old Griffith studio, to make his new productions. He has one more story to film, besides the one on which he is now working, for the Haworth corporation.

Hayakawa will receive in excess of $6,000 a week, in addition to one-third of the gross receipts of each production, according to announcements. The pictures will be released through Robertson-Cole as special productions. In May, as soon as he has definitely terminated his present affiliation, Hayakawa will make a trip to New York to effect the final organization of his new company.

Wharton to Produce in West.

Theodore Wharton, motion picture producer of New York, has arrived in Los Angeles and is looking for studio accommodations to produce a spectacular film feature from the story, "Tangled Flags," based on the Boxer Rebellion in China. Mr. Wharton states that he considers Los Angeles the logical place in which to film a production of this nature.

House Magazine for Kinema.

Michael and Abe Gore, and Sol Lesser, owners of the Kinema Theatre on Grand avenue, announce that a magazine and program is being assembled for their house that will be unusual in theatre house organs. The intention is to make the program as much of a moving picture journal as possible. A mailing list will be maintained so that patrons, by simply leaving their names and addresses with the program department, will receive a copy of the journal each week.

Exchange Notes.

J. A. Brehany, manager of the Equity Pictures Corporation, has arrived in Los Angeles from the East to personally present "The Confession," starring Henry Walthall, at Clune's Auditorium.

E. H. Silcocks, recently of Vitagraph, is now a special traveling representative of the Special Pictures Corporation, and has started on a tour of the principal cities of the country.

Harry Lustig, western division manager for Metro, has started on a tour of western Metro exchanges.

"Mac" Comes Back.

A. MacArthur, Jr., advertising manager of the Moving Picture World, has come back to Los Angeles after an interval of nearly three months since he was recalled to the home office in New York upon urgent business matters when he was here early in January. "Mac" had not completed the round of the various West Coast studios when he was recalled so suddenly, but he intends to visit personally every studio in Southern California during his present stay.

World Sent to Arabia.

Ali E. De Moran, manager of the Rizal Arabian Orchestra, now playing a six-weeks' engagement at the Grauman Theatre, has sent a dozen copies of the Moving Picture World of March 20 to his home town in Arabia, where the members of his orchestra come from. That issue of the World carried a story and picture of the orchestra as seen in their act on the stage of Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre of this city. M. De Moran and his orchestra will return to Arabia as soon as the engagement at the Grauman Theatre is completed.

"Looka Here, You Gentleman—She's 'Dangerous to Men.'"

So warns William H. Crane. Taking heed are Bayard Veiller, Winchell Smith, David Warfield, Bert Lytell and Sid Grauman, Los Angeles theatre man. Viola Dana is the winsome little "gail" who persuaded them to have their picture taken on the Metro lot.

Neilan Off for England Soon.

Marshall Neilan has set May 28 as the date for his departure for England, where he will produce at least one picture. With him will go Marjorie Daw and other players, his technical force and cameramen. Neilan will also take with him his special lighting apparatus, which he claims will enable him to get better effects than if he were to depend on unfamiliar equipment.

Victor Potel Company.

Victor Potel, known on the screen as "Slippery Slim," who has recently appeared in support of Mary Pickford, Nazimova and others, has signed a contract to head his own company for the making of comedies of from two to five reels, from original and magazine stories. The pictures will be produced under the supervision and management of Edwin E. Atkinson, and the company has been formed and is financed by local capitalists.

The Hurst-Nova Pictures.

Paul Hurst and his wife, Hedda Nova, are planning to produce a number of pictures in the near future which will be known as the Hurst-Nova Pictures. Mr. Hurst has been a director for several years and Miss Nova has appeared in leading roles in a number of recent big film features.

Thompson Goes East.

Louis W. Thompson, president of the Special Pictures Corporation, has left for New York for the purpose of starting an expedition on a tour of the world in a search for scenic novelties for Comedyart releases. Mr. Thompson, before his departure, made arrangements for the presentation of the first Comedyart release, "Uneasy Feet," at the California Theatre during the week of March 28.

Sam Sothorn Dies Suddenly.

Sam Sothorn, brother of E. H. Sothorn of Shakespearean fame, died suddenly on March 21, on the eve of his departure for London. Mr. Sothorn had been living in Beverly Hills, and for some time had been taking part in pictures in support of Douglas Fairbanks and other stars.

Studio Shots

CLEVELAND MOFFITT, magazine writer, has arrived in Los Angeles to collaborate with Albert E. Smith in the writing of serials for Vitagraph.

Seena Owen is leading woman for Bert Lytell in his current Metro picture, "The Temple of Dawn."

George Melford, who is making location stuff on the Sacramento River for "The Translation of a Savage," will go to San Francisco to make sea scenes before returning to the Lasky studio here.

Fritzi Brunette, who has already played leading woman in six J. Warren Kerrigan pictures, has been engaged for four more Kerrigan features to be produced by Robert Brunton.

Al Santell, who was loaned by Universal to direct three Hall Room Boys Comedies with Flannagan and Edwards for Harry Cohn, has severed his connections with the company, after having produced "Oh, Baby!," which will be released soon on the states rights basis.

Bert Woodruff, who plays the father of Chic Sale in "The Smart Aleck," has been delaying the production with a spell of rheumatism.

Eugene Pallette plays the leading role in the new all-star Metro production, "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath." Ruth Stonehouse is cast in an important part.

Byrant Washburn is completing "What Happened to Jones" at the Morosco studio, and will next film "A Full House," for Paramount.

Wanda Hawley began on her first Realart production at the Morosco studio on March 27.

The first Harry Garson picture starring Conway Tearle has been completed, and Tearle left for New York to complete arrangements for permanent location in Los Angeles to produce pictures.

Thomas Meighan is expected to return to Lasky's early in April to play the leading role in "Conrad in Quest of His Youth," a William De Mille production.

Joseph J. Dowling has been added to the cast of "The Smart Aleck," now being produced by Al Christie with Chic Sale as the star.

duced by Al Christie with Chic Sale as the star.

Basil King, member of the Eminent Authors, Inc., has arrived in Los Angeles to supervise the production of a new story for the screen at Goldwyn.

Robert Warwick has finished "Hunting Trouble," under Director Joseph Henabery.

Bryant Washburn's father and mother, who have been visiting him, have returned to their home at Oak Park, Ill.

Buster Keaton will be co-featured with William H. Crane in Winchell Smith's "The New Henrietta," now being produced at Metro. Irving Cummings and Beulah Booker have important roles.

Ethel Clayton is supported in "All in a Night" by Jack Holt, Clyde Fillmore and Winter Hall.

Wallace Beery is playing the part of an ex-heavyweight champion in support of Douglas MacLean and Doris May in "Lucid Intervals."

Wallace Reid will star in "The Charm School" after he finishes his present Paramount picture, "What's Your Hurry."

House Peters and Jane Novak will play the featured roles in "Isobel," to be filmed soon by the Louis B. Mayer Productions under the direction of Edwin Carewe.

Marguerite Snow is supporting H. B. Warner in "Felix O'Day," his present Jesse D. Hampton production.

Peter B. Kyne comes to Metro to assist on the continuity of his novel, "Kindred of the Dust," to be put into film form by C. E. Shurtleff.

He Buys 5,000 Tickets

So His Employees Can See "Dangerous Days"

I WILL purchase 5,000 tickets for my employees to see 'Dangerous Hours' because I consider this production a most powerfully appealing picture for fairness, squareness and truthfulness and the very best method with which to combat the most dangerous evil that has confronted America since the subjugation of the diabolical Hun."

Thus spoke George H. Hannum, president of the Saginaw, Michigan, Manufacturers' Association, director of the Board of Commerce and general manager of all the General Motors Corporation interests in Saginaw, when asked for his opinion as to the effectiveness of "Dangerous Hours," Thomas H. Ince's Paramount-Artcraft Special production, in stemming the tide of radicalism, Bolshevism and other isms which are incessantly interfering with business, law and order.

Mr. Hannum was one of many of Saginaw's prominent industrial heads who attended a private screening of "Dangerous Hours" as the guests of Charles Q. Carlisle, president of the Mecca-Palace Theatre. With the co-operation of Eli M. Orowitz, exploitation representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation at Detroit, the showing was arranged for 8 a. m., and despite this early hour nearly 80 per cent. of the membership of the Saginaw Manufacturers' Association and the Employers' Association of Saginaw attended.

American Broadside to Exhibitors.

The American Film Company believes in spending money with a free hand in its direct-to-the-exhibitor advertising. In addition to an elaborate campaign book, replete with all kinds of practical helps in exploiting the pictures, the American sends out a smashing broadside. It appears in two or three colors and big type, with pictures which tell the story, giving at a glance the general character and high points of the picture it offers. These broadsides abound in information about the "Flying A" Special about to be put on the market, and with descriptions which prove useful to the exhibitors in their turn when talking to their patrons, either through the newspapers or handbills and throwaways.

Here They Are and Everybody's Happy, Too.

CHICAGO NEWS LETTER

JAMES S. McQUADE

Sees Churches That Show Pictures as Serious Competitors of Theatres

IN a recent conversation with a friend of mine, a man well-known and successful in the moving picture business, the problem of the present Inter-church World movement was brought forward. My friend was inclined to view the use of moving pictures in churches as a menace to the exhibitor—not because of the use of educational pictures and others of correlated classes, but because of the use of single reel comedies, which are popular in picture theatres.

In his vision he saw the churches becoming so attractive for entertainment of this type that they would soon add the longer pictures to their entertainment and thus become serious competitors of picture theatres in their respective vicinities.

He was of the opinion that exchanges should exercise care in booking pictures to churches, so as to protect their patrons—the exhibitors, from loss and perhaps extinction in the course of time. It is all very well to book educational pictures, he thinks, but the line should be drawn at furnishing churches with one-reel comedies in order to make their programs more entertaining and popular.

No doubt many exhibitors are in the same frame of mind as my friend. But have they or my friend viewed this matter in a careful and broadminded way? Have they considered it from any other angle than from the assumption that picture theatre business will be hurt by such competition?

Will Aid Exhibitors in Long Run.

In answer to my friend and these exhibitors I shall quote the opinion of a hard-headed business man and also a successful showman in various lines. I need only to mention his name to bear out my claims concerning him—and that is Aaron J. Jones, of the firm of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, of this city.

When I introduced the subject to Mr.

Jones I spoke as if I were personally of the same opinion as my friend and that added zest and considerable spirit to his remarks.

"Why shouldn't the churches show short comedies with their educationals, if they wish?" he asked snappily.

"Why, if I had it in my power, I would even let them have the pictures free, if they could not afford to rent them!"

"By all means, rent the churches all the pictures they want. This will add many thousands to the patrons of regular picture theatres in the long run."

Then he cited the case of a woman friend, who never saw a moving picture until she viewed one in a church, and she was so astonished and pleased that she finally ventured to visit a picture theatre. There she became convinced that the moving picture was a wonderful discovery and that it offered just as wonderful entertainment.

"Why there are now many hundreds of thousands of women in this country just as ignorant of the real value of moving pictures as my woman friend was. If they can be added to the great list of picture theatre-goers, by seeing pictures at churches everyone in the business will be benefited.

Help Churches to Secure Pictures.

"Such a condition cannot be found among the growing-up generation. They find in pictures their chief amusement and as they, in turn, become fathers and mothers of families, the children will be guided to view good pictures also. And this is the big, assured asset of the moving picture in the future.

"No, no, by all means help the churches to secure such pictures as they want. They will never come to the point where they will want to use long pictures. By all means let them have the short. The moving picture theatres will be the winners in the long run."

Robertson-Cole Convention Praised.

Max Levey, Chicago manager of Robertson-Cole Corporation, returned from the New York convention of the exchange managers of that organization last week and was most enthusiastic in his praise of the splendid manner in which the visitors were entertained. Like himself, Mr. Levey believes that every visiting manager went home enthused with zeal for his organization and with enough pep in reserve to carry him through all difficulties that may be encountered during the coming year.

Newt. Levy, supervisor of Robertson-Cole in Denver, Salt Lake and Butte, and in all western territory out to the Coast, spent a day in Chicago last week on his way from the New York convention to his headquarters in San Francisco.

Eddie Eckels Visits Los Angeles.

C. Eddie Eckels, assistant general manager of the Capital Film Company, of Chicago, will henceforth add to his duties the position of general manager of Neal Hart productions and of Locklear Productions, Inc. He will leave for Los Angeles, Sunday, April 4, to assist Isadore Bernstein, director general of the new Bernstein studios on Sunset boulevard, Los Angeles.

His headquarters will still remain in the Consumers Building, with the Capital Film Company.

Vitagraph Salesman Passes Away.

J. A. Humphrey, Indiana salesman for the Chicago office of the Vitagraph Film Corporation, died Tuesday, March 23, while in Fort Wayne, Ind. Mr. Humphrey was with Vitagraph for the past four years, and was considered one of the firm's most valuable salesmen. His home was in Paw Paw, Michigan. Mr. Humphrey was sixty-five years of age.

Tod Browning Goes to Coast.

Tod Browning, who directed Priscilla Dean in "The Virgin of Stamboul," passed through Chicago Saturday, March 27, on his way to the Coast.

Large Number of Enthusiastic Exhibitors See Universal's "The Virgin of Stamboul"

THE VIRGIN OF STAMBOUL," heralded as a Universal-Jewel triumph, was presented before a large number of spectators at an invitation trade showing in the Cameo Room of the Morrison Hotel, Chicago, Wednesday, March 24. It was one of the largest attendances that has ever accompanied a private showing in Chicago.

Previous to the exhibition of the picture luncheon was served, as a special courtesy extended by Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal. Waiters wore bright Arabic costumes procured with special regard for the setting of the picture, and a further atmospheric touch was added by the luncheon overture, which was the tuneful, ever-popular melody of "Dardanella." Selected members of the orchestra from the Pantheon, one of the theatres owned by Lubliner & Trinz, were engaged by Harry E. Rice, Chicago publicity manager for Universal, who was host on the occasion. This orchestra, which, with its conductor, Paul Biese, ranks high in the estimation of Chicagoans, was received with enthusiasm, and accompanied the picture as well as the luncheon in pleasing, artistic style. About three minutes before the time for playing the special score for "The Virgin of Stamboul" was presented to the musicians.

Applause Was Enthusiastic.

From the very start the feature held the attention of the exhibitors. The story in itself would be capable of accomplishing that. The showing lasted for one hour and thirty minutes and was succeeded by enthusiastic applause.

Among those present, which included many exhibitors from out of town in addition to those of Chicago, were Aaron J. Jones, M. A. Choynsky, Samuel Trinz, Edward Trinz, H. Schoenstadt, Andrew Karzas, J. G. Schaefer and Robert Gumbiner.

The Universal was represented by H. M. Berman, general manager, New York; J. H. Mayer, publicity director, New York, and Harry Reichenbach, exploitation manager of "The Virgin of Stamboul."

The first downtown theatre to show the production will be the Playhouse which has booked the feature for a four-week run, beginning April 18.

Mr. Rice deserves unstinted praise for the really fine manner in which the private presentation of the picture was handled. The expense involved was large, but the splendid turnout of such a large body of exhibitors from far and near showed that the occasion was worthy of it.

Many bookings for "The Virgin of Stamboul" were made at the showing.

Charles Lane to Remain in Pictures.

Charles Lane, one of the featured players with John Barrymore in the Paramount-Artcraft production of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," now playing at the Rivoli Theatre in New York, is another actor for many years identified with Broadway stage successes who has turned wholeheartedly to photoplays. He made his film debut with Billie Burke in "Wanted: a Husband," and since that time, has supported Miss Burke again in "Away Goes Prudence" and Marion Davies in "The Restless Sex," adapted from the Robert W. Chambers novel, both of which will shortly be released. This latest recruit to the ranks of film players brings to the screen a wealth of dramatic technique, gained as a result of years of experience in the spoken drama.

The Last Word in Vault Building at Rothacker Plant

A FIRE, bomb and inspector-proof vault is now ready at the Rothacker Chicago studio-laboratory to receive 6,000,000 feet of negative. Cinema engineers say that hardly anything short of a direct hit by a 16-inch shell could touch a Rothacker client's negative once it is inside that vault.

It is really five vaults within a vault and these also within a vault. First is an outer wall of reinforced, waterproof concrete and brick, twenty-four inches thick. Within this vault, inside a six-inch air cushion, is another vault of similar construction. And within this second vault are built five vaults, sealed with automatically closing steel doors.

The air cushion between the outer and second vaults is for ventilation and insulation. It will aid in keeping the heat out in summer and the same temperature will be maintained within the inner vaults the year around. A specially designed brick ventilation shaft, which rises about fifteen feet above the outer vault, will permit the free passage of air currents into and out of the inner vaults. Thus there will be no chance for the accumulation of film fumes.

For its size, this vault is the most costly structure Mr. Rothacker ever contracted for. But he wanted his clients to be able to send in negatives and feel secure that no fire, earthquake or burglars could ever touch them. The film vault at the Rothacker plant, now being built in Los Angeles, will be closely patterned after the Chicago structure. So will the vaults of the laboratories which are to be erected in New York and London.

This vault makes the third now at the Rothacker Chicago headquarters. There is one on the first floor of the laboratory, which is used for raw stock storage, and another on the second floor, which is for "live" negatives and positive prints. With the new vault, the Rothacker plant has a total fireproof storage capacity of 7,000,000 feet of film.

Vote to Raise $15,000 Fund for Widow of W. A. Mills

THE Allied Amusements Association, the membership of which includes all the leading picture theatre owners in Chicago, at a meeting of the board of directors, held Friday, March 26, voted to raise a trust fund of $15,000 for the widow of William A. Mills, manager of the Crawford Theatre, who was recently murdered in the box office of that house by a hold-up man. A few minutes after the board met, at the call of Business Manager Sam Atkinson, $4,000 of the amount was raised.

Subscriptions taken on the day mentioned included the following: Allied Amusements Association, $500; Lubliner & Trinz, owners of the Crawford Theatre, $500; Aaron J. Jones, $250; the Ascher Brothers, $250; Joseph L. Friedman, president of the F. I. L. M. Club, $100, and $50 each from M. A. Choynski, Ludwig Schindler, Max Hyman, George P. Hopkinson, Andrew Karzas, H. A. Gundling, I. E. Berkson and John Beberg.

Greiver Educational Weekly To Be Produced by Rothacker

WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER recently arranged with Simeon Greiver, president of the Greiver Distributing Corporation, of Chicago, to produce a series of educational films, which will be released in the near future, every alternate week. These films will be known as the Greiver Educational Weekly.

Work on these pictures already has begun, and Mr. Rothacker has fixed a high standard for his producing department in their making. The aim is to give these pictures high educational value, as well as a positive entertaining value, so as to combine instruction and entertainment for those who view them.

It goes without stating that the artistry of these pictures will be of the high standard for which the name of Rothacker is noted. The laboratory work will show the same skilled workmanship which has made the prints of Mary Pickford, Anita Stewart, Charlie Chaplin and Katherine MacDonald a joy to look at on the screen.

"Huckleberry Finn" Breaks Records.

Aaron J. Jones whispered to me last week that "Huckleberry Finn" showed to the largest business ever reached by the Randolph Theatre in one week, since the house was opened. He was lavish in his praise of the production and of its drawing power.

Questions Put to Patrons

Irritate Them, Says Kaufman

THE more subtle methods of discovering a patron's attitude toward pictures is advocated by A. J. Kaufman, who, for three years, has been manager of the Michigan, one of the finest Lubliner & Trinz theatres.

"If you can't get the consensus of opinion from the box office, try to get it by listening, unobserved, to conversation about your programs," says Manager Kaufman. "Questions directed to your patrons only invite criticism. It's too much like fawning for favors. There is a psychological angle to this. If a manager has used care in his choice of bookings and has endeavored to please his neighborhood the only dignified thing for him to do is to stand by his choice, and his patrons will respect him and his theatre, even though they're unconscious of the reason for so doing. While if he had made it a point to ask for personal opinions many would take advantage and would think up some sort of criticism, just or unjust," he continued.

"We all get occasional disappointments in pictures. They are not always what they are said to be. The best thing that can be done, then, is to strengthen the program in some other way, either by exhibiting an unusually attractive scenic or comedy, or by arranging an artistic overture. The overture thing, however, should not be overdone. Every week is too often, as people tire of them and it is not always possible to get the sort of music that is generally liked."

Caters to Children on Saturdays.

On the South Side, where two fashionable boulevards, Garfield and Michigan, intersect, the Michigan Theatre stands. It seats 1,312, on one floor. Partly on account of its favorable location, but largely on account of the approved standard of pictures shown and the nice style in which they are presented, this theatre is a busy one. Only new releases are booked. On Saturday a special child subject is used in addition to the regular program, as there is on an average of 1,000 children present at each Saturday matinee.

The Michigan Symphony Orchestra, a band of finished musicians, has won favor for its versatility and skill. A. Lustig is the director. On matinees, which are presented daily, Allen W. Bogen, organist, is in charge of the music. As soon as possible after their debut in the loop theatres pictures are booked at the Michigan.

New Strand Theatre an Aid in Americanizing Community

THE picture theatre's potentiality as a school of Americanism was indicated in some recent remarks by Abraham Auerbach, manager and part owner of the New Strand on the West Side. The patrons of this theatre are for the most part natives of foreign countries and while they are industrious, honest people there are many American ideas about order and deportment with which they are unfamiliar, and a motion picture theatre is in a peculiar position to make these American ideals felt, inasmuch as it reaches the masses in greater number than does any other community institution.

"Discipline and diplomacy can be combined in handling this situation," Mr. Auerbach said. "By reminding our patrons that their presence in a theatre should in no way cause discomfort for others—that a theatre is a medium for furnishing legitimate amusement, that it is not a prize ring, a restaurant or a talk-fest. In a few cases it has been necessary to impress this by using force but such instances are unusual, and I have noticed that the perpetrators continue to patronize the New Strand but refrain from causing any more disturbance."

It has required diligent work on the part of the management and the screen has been often utilized for making known the policy of this house in maintaining order. But these efforts have had their reward and there is a satisfying improvement since the New Strand was built some five years ago."

Mr. Auerbach's experiences in picture theatres have covered a period of fifteen years. Previous to the existence of the New Strand, in which S. Auerbach, brother to the manager and M. Perlmutter share ownership, he was part owner of the Monarch and the Pastime.

In collaboration with three others, Nathan Wolf, Maurice Reingold and Maurice Choyinsky, the New Strand owners are building another theatre on West Division street across from the New Strand. It will be known as the Biltmore, is to be built and equipped in de luxe style, costing in the neighborhood of a half million dollars. The plan provides for 2,500 seats, for a complete orchestra, and for booking the best features than can be procured. The date for the opening, though not definitely fixed, will be some time in September. Admission prices will be higher than at the New Strand, which charges 17 cents.

Exhibiting Then and Now

Discussed by M. A. Choyinsky

FILM rentals have advanced on a much smaller scale than is generally believed, and in many cases they have not advanced at all." Maurice A. Choyinsky, president of the A. A. A. and veteran Chicago exhibitor, made the statement, without any aim at humor, and then explained it.

"When I first stepped into the movie managing game in 1906, when the Odeon on Madison and Halsted was built, I paid $15 for one reel of thrills. Today for five and six reel features we pay $75 and up—and violently protest against the high charges.

"The Odeon, which was the first picture theatre to operate continuously, was a better proposition from a business standpoint than any de luxe house of today. It seated only 190, but it emptied and refilled about forty-two times during a day. So when exhibitors talk about building picture palaces and charging an admission of $2 a seat, I insist that the Odeon, by selling each seat for five cents, 42 times a day, realized as much a seat as these others would."

Newberry Goes on Despite—

For the past seven years Mr. Choyinsky has owned the Newberry, located on North Clark street, ten minutes from the loop. Movies there are to the right of it and movies to the left, but still it has prospered, and "always will," its owner maintains.

"As long as a theatre retains its individuality it won't go under," said Mr. Choyinsky, "and as long as a manager refuses to be an imitator his theatre is bound to be different from the one next door." That, in brief, expresses the policy which has always been adopted by this pioneer among Chicago movie owners. To the co-operation of his wife, who has held the box office post in his theatre since early days, he attributes at least fifteen sixteenths of his success. Her sociable manner of meeting and mixing with patrons helps to make the Newberry just what it is—a family theatre operated by and operating for the family. Both Mr. and Mrs. Choyinsky manage to get into personal touch with their patrons, and are ever willing to extend the hand of service outside the theatre as well. They frequently make sick calls, as Mr. Choyinsky insists that the doctor, the minister and the movie manager should work hand-in-hand in cases of this kind.

One of the most pleasing features of this well conducted house is the women's orchestra, directed by Miss Mary Thomas, violinist. With conscientious interpretative skill they play selections that are at once popular and adequate, which helps to account for the fact that the Newberry's 750 seats are filled with a loyal clientele, who rarely miss a show.

Mark Twain's Daughter Sees and Applauds "Huck Finn"

MRS. OSSIP GABRILOWITSCH, daughter of Mark Twain, brilliant pianist and wife of the leader of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, viewed "Huckleberry Finn," William D. Taylor's Paramount-Artcraft Super-Special, at a private showing in the projection room of the Detroit exchange.

There was a tense and emotional moment for Mrs. Gabrilowitsch when there flashed on the screen a scene showing Huck Finn presenting a manuscript to Mark Twain. The resemblance to her father was most extraordinary, according to Mrs. Gabrilowitsch. In the final scene of the picture a second flash again shows Mark Twain in one of his favorite chairs on the veranda of his home.

The director of the production, William D. Taylor, took unusual pains to present with exactness those scenes in which Mark Twain is characterized. In fact, an exact replica of his bed is shown, and the position in bed, with his favorite pillow to support him, is very ingeniously portrayed.

Mrs. Gabrilowitsch was unreserved in her praise of the picture. Ossip Gabrilowitsch proclaimed "Huckleberry Finn" one of the best photoplays he has ever seen. Among the others in the party were Mrs. Jerome H. Remick, Mrs. Charles E. Hughes, Baroness Von Kettler and other personal and social friends of Mrs. Gabrilowitsch.

as a collective body, will secure these pictures, or whether they will be turned over to the program organization, and the independent exchanges left to get their product wherever they can and whenever they can. It is for you to decide whether the Film Clearing House will have to seek elsewhere for a distribution channel. The producers are sincere in their desire to assist you. It is for you to determine whether such a state of affairs exists in the independent exchange field that will force independent producers to consider it an unprofitable field for the distribution of their film products."

Friedman Originated New Organization.

After the reading of the address by Mr. Brandt, the session was prolonged until 2 o'clock Friday morning, March 26. Business was resumed at 11:30 a. m. the same day, and was continued until 1:30 a. m. Saturday, March 27.

As the result of this incessant deliberation and insistent determination, the formation of the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., became an accomplished fact. This organization is the culmination of an idea which originated in the brain of Joseph L. Friedman, president of the Celebrated Players Film Corporation, of Chicago.

As stated in my Chicago letter of April 3, it was Mr. Friedman who issued the call to class "A" independent exchangemen throughout the country to attend the convention at the Hotel Congress, and it is mainly due to his ability as a leader and to his dogged tenacity of purpose that the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., has been formed.

A constitution and set of by-laws have been drawn up and accepted, a charter has been applied for and the organization has been capitalized at $100,000, which amount was paid in full in the convention hall.

Friedman Elected President.

The subscription of capital was chiefly for the purpose of demonstrating stability and the faith of the subscribers, rather than for raising operating funds, as it is understood the operating capital had already been provided for.

An interesting incident occurred in connection with the granting of franchises. The exchangemen were asked to assess themselves for the least amount that should be expected for the territory which each represented, and when these figures were added, it was found that the sum total came within one-quarter of 1 per cent. of the desired amount.

The following officers were elected: President, J. L. Friedman, Celebrated Players Film Corporation, Chicago; vice-president, J. E. Pearce, New Orleans; secretary, D. J. Chatkin, Los Angeles and San Francisco; treasurer, Sam Grand, Boston.

The following were selected as members of the board of directors: J. L. Friedman, Chicago; J. E. Pearce, New Orleans; D. J. Chatkin, San Francisco; Sam Grand, Boston; H. L. Charnas, Cleveland; H. E. Whyte, New York, and B. Amsterdam, Philadelphia.

Name Franchise Holders.

The following state rights men became franchise holders in the organization and were allotted territory as follows: Arthur B. Whyte, Empire State Film Company, New York, New York City and Northern New Jersey; Sam Grand, Federal Feature Film Corporation, of Boston, the New England states; B. Amsterdam, Masterpiece Film Attractions, Philadelphia, Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey; H. Lande, Quality Film Service, Pittsburgh, Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia; H. Charnas, Standard Film Service Company, Cleveland, Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky; R. M. Savini, R. M. Savini Films, Inc., Atlanta, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee, Abe Dresner, Exhibitors' Film Exchange, Washington, D. C., Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and District of Columbia.

J. E. Pearce, Pearce Films, New Orleans, Louisiana and Mississippi; R. D. Lewis Film Company, Oklahoma City, Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas; F. W. Thayer, Merit Film Corporation, Minneapolis, Minnesota, North and South Dakota; R. Wettstein, Midwest Distributing Company, of Milwaukee, the state of Wisconsin; S. Werner, United Film Service, St. Louis, Eastern Missouri; A. Kahn, Crescent Film Service, Kansas City, Kansas and Western Missouri; H. E. Kyler, Supreme Photoplays, Denver, Colorado, New Mexico, Wyoming, Utah and Southern Idaho; J. J. Allen, Allen Bros., Toronto, the Dominion of Canada; M. J. Frisch, A. H. Blank Enterprises, of Des Moines, Iowa and Nebraska; D. J. Chatkin, Marion Kohn Productions, San Francisco, California, Nevada and Arizona, and J. L. Friedman, Celebrated Players Film Corporation, of Chicago, Indiana and Illinois.

Buying Power United.

It will be seen from the list of franchise holders that the entire United States and Canada is covered by the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc. In other words, the organization has united the buying power of independent exchanges of the most able and aggressive type, so that instead of having each individual state-rights man dickering separately for the product of independent producers, 100 per cent. of the territory of the United States and Canada will be bought outright by the organization for any film which is acceptable and which meets the requirements.

It is further expected that the new organization will act as a spur to independent producers, as it will offer them a quick and substantial turnover of their product in place of the old method which necessitated a long sales campaign carried on with each individual buyer. Furthermore, the buying power of the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., places it in a position where it must be considered and reckoned with in the sale of the national and Canadian rights to all pictures of independent make. Besides, this buying power promises to secure for the franchise holders of the organization pictures which they never could have been able to secure by buying separately.

As an illustration of this, propositions were received by telegram and long distance telephone from both New York City and Los Angeles from upwards of twenty-five of the biggest producing independent organizations, offering to produce any kind of a picture for the organization, from a single reel comedy to productions costing as high as $250,000.

High Class General Manager.

The executive affairs of the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., will be vested in a general manager and his staff. This general manager will be a salaried man of the highest calibre obtainable, who must not be interested in any exchange. It will be his duty to carry out the wishes of the organization as voiced by the officers and the franchise holders.

A reviewing board will also be organized. The aim of this board will be to give its most careful consideration to all pictures produced independently, both features and shorter subjects. Each film will be examined carefully and its value to the franchise holders of the organization will be thoroughly considered. The advice of this reviewing board will be acted upon in purchasing pictures. The independent producer will thus be informed at once whether or not his picture is acceptable to the organization, without the usual haggling over prices.

Buying Power Is $5,000,000.

Among other plans of the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., will be the selection and appointment of expert exploitation and advertising men. In all probability each exchange will have the services of an exploitation man, who will act under the guidance of a general exploitation manager, at the headquarters of the Federated. The advertising, which it is said will be extensive, will be in the hands of an advertising and promotion manager, also at headquarters.

It has been estimated that the buying power of the independent exchanges represented at the Chicago convention, and who are now franchise holders of the Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., reaches the $5,000,000 mark. It has also been given out that, within the next thirty days, the organization will be in complete operation throughout America and Canada.

To Meet Soon in New York.

A convention of independent producers only will be held at the Knickerbocker Hotel, New York, April 1, 2 and 3. The buying committee of Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., will confer with producers on Thursday afternoon. On this committee are Sam Grand, of Boston; J. L. Friedman, of Chicago; Ben Amsterdam, of Philadelphia, and J. E. Pearce, of New Orleans. The object of this meeting is to discuss and arrange for the consistent output for the years of 1920, 1921 and 1922.

Representatives of following independent producing units will attend the meeting: Burston Films, Inc., National Film Corporation, Marion Kohn Productions, Sherman Pictures Corporation, Garson and Schwering, Capital Film Company, Locklear Productions, Inc., Victor Kremer Pictures, Neal Hart Productions, C. B. Price, Inc., Outing Chester Pictures, Jack Cohen Productions and Commonwealth Pictures Corporation.

Keeping One Jump Ahead of the Others Is the Secret of Prominent Ad. Spaces

NELSON B. BELL, of the Crandal houses, Washington, D. C., sends in his recent displays and also sends a copy of the papers to show how the Elaine Hammerstein display stands out in the page. Mr. Bell uncovers the whole philosophy of getting distinction when he remarks that he was the first to use white space borders to gain prominence, and when the others followed suit he went to small scene cuts, then to what he calls "black ads." Now that they are all painting things as dark as possible, he swings to white again and is still ahead of the rest. It bears out what we have always said: that keeping a couple of jumps ahead of the rest is the most certain method of making a distinctive display.

In the cut on the right the top and bottom rules show the full size of the space. The perpendicular rules are one inch inside of the column rules in a three column display twelve inches deep. It is the first thing you see when you open the paper to the double theatrical page and there is so little to read you are apt to finish it off before you go on the rest. Mr. Bell claims no especial credit for the showing on the left. He sends it merely to demonstrate what can be done with the art work supplied by Equity in the Rothstein plan-book. Both are very pretty displays and a credit to Mr. Bell.

Make Your Copy Easy to Read If You Would Have Your Copy Generally Read

THESE two displays from the Grand Central, St. Louis, are 125 lines deep across three columns. That on the right is worth about double the left hand display because it presents the copy in a style which permits it to be read more easily, though that mass of full face between the two cuts would have been better had it been set in Roman or italic. The full face in so small a size is not as easy to read as a lighter face of the same measurement. The left hand display offers the chief facts against a background supposed to represent the northern lights. The type spoils the picture and the picture utterly ruins the type value.

Since the type is more important, it would have paid to mortise out the rays to permit the lines to be set in type. The effect their work as the essential to the advertisement. They make the facts to which their drawing is supposed to call attention subservient to their sketch, but the alert advertising man will hold his artist down even if he has to mortise after the design has been drawn in.

The lower part of the sketch and the wings would have formed a good frame to the text, but carrying the centre of the sketch too high has spoiled what might have been a good advertisement. It is well to remember that the ink used in printing newspapers dries through absorption instead of by oxidation as is the case with half tone inks. It is blotted into the paper and spreads. No drawing will have the same value in press printing that is had in the ink sketch on smooth surfaced card, and allowance should always be made for this fact.

Loew's Cleveland Theatres Use Large Spaces for Their Smaller Theatre Ads.

LOEW'S EUCLID is the "big" house in Cleveland, and we have lately shown a number of the half page displays for this house. The smaller theatres are not so very small for the Stillman not long since was the leading house in town, but they are not as heavily boomed. This space shows the half page taken for the four lesser houses, the Stillman, Alhambra, Mall and

Just Compare These Three Reverse Cuts

This Grauman Imitation Very Like the Original

PHIL GERSDORF, publicity man for the Lynch enterprises in Jacksonville, sends in a very good imitation of the Grauman combination of black and white. He used the press book cut for the Saturday showing and wanted something different for Sunday, so he had this drawn, using one of the Grauman reproductions for the artist's guidance. This was one of those first-time-ever showings, so they made a lot of fuss about it and felt the need of a change of advertisement. Mr. Gersdorf instructed the artist to use care in his lettering to get as close to type as he could, and the result is even better than some of the Grauman displays, for they do not always do a good job of white lettering out in Los Angeles.

Mr. Gersdorf agrees with us that the Grauman spaces are about the best of their kind regularly turned out, but with the samples to go by he has persuaded the art department of an engraving plant to give as good results. Any one else can do the same thing Mr. Gersdorf has done, provided they will take the same trouble to will deliberately hide his most important announcement. Only by close scrutiny will he arrive at the fact that the management has "The Turning Point" and not "The River's End." Any advertising agency which put out such a botch for a commercial concern would lose the account, yet almost any Sunday issue in almost any town will give examples of similar stupidity, not quite as flagrant as the Kinema, perhaps, but on the same lines, and the Boston papers fairly boil over with displays which are nothing short of idiotic.

So many good plans for gaining prominence without the risk of spoiling the display have been shown in this department in the past eight years that it seems odd so many managers cling to the unintelligent use of reverse—and used intelligently reverse has its place in the advertising scheme—but the answer is probably found in the popularity of the picture. The picture does not, even yet, require to be sold solely upon its merits.

Advertising alone does not sell, and patronage can be gained without good advertising. For this reason faulty advertising work does not show as seriously as in a paint advertisement or a display for shoes or hats. Advertising helps, but empty houses do not result from poor displays, and so managers do not take pains to make their announcements one hundred per cent. selling. Anything goes and the dramatic page and not the advertising saves the day.

There have been hundreds of good theatre advertisers developed in the past five or six years—and they are not all in the large towns, either, but taken by and large there is more advertising waste in theatrical advertising than in any business of similar magnitude.

McCormick Builds Talk to Fit His Attraction

PERHAPS the most valuable factor in the advertising for the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, is the manner in which the copy conforms to the style of the production. Mr. McCormick does not have one fixed style for advertising every production. He studies what he has to offer his public and then he writes to suit the patrons who will be most strongly appealed to by the type of story. He does not offer a comedy-drama with the same appeal he used for a romantic drama. He writes lightly for the comedy and more seriously for the romantic plays.

Lately we have shown his displays for light productions such as "A Virtuous Vamp." For "Soldiers of Fortune" he varies his approach. For the keynote he devised "Adventure, romance, red-blooded action as only Richard Harding Davis could write it." This was so good that he used it for all of his work instead of varying the appeal as he customarily does. He knew that line would sell better than any other approach, so he employed it in almost every one of his displays, backing it up with scene attractors suggesting the locale.

The second cut shows two similar spaces, one across three and the other across four columns. The smaller is the more effective because of the strength with which the figures stand out. This works better than the more elaborate sketch to the right, in spite of the strongly accented figure of the surveyor. No two plays are sold from precisely the same approach, yet too many advertisers follow one rigid, unyielding style and cling to it desperately.

White Space Underline Is More Prominent Than Show

USING white space for the underline and a reverse for the current attraction is even worse than using reverse for the current show alone. The reverse cut will kill down the attraction unless the white lettering is very skillfully handled, but to fade out the current show with a black background and then run the coming attraction in white goes even further. Most persons who look at this two fives for the Kinema, Los Angeles, will argue that "The River's End" is the current attraction, for they will naturally suppose that the most prominent thing in an advertising space is what the advertiser has for sale.

The man who is not familiar with the peculiar mental kinks of motion picture advertisers will not believe that a manager management does not crowd the space, trusting to the title and the unusual cut, but the real seller is the announcement that there will be free matinees for the children both days. Serials seem to make an especial appeal to the children and they go home and sell the series to their elders, so it pays to make every effort to gain their interest in the first instalment. Butte is not a twenty-cent an inch town and this page represents a considerable outlay, but it was not wasted because the space was not spoiled.

uses its newspaper spaces merely as a reminder. It gets out its own four to eight page weekly paper, started by Charles Decker, and which has run continuously for more than four years.

This is not a four-page program, but a newspaper size sheet which is made to

Took Big Display; Got Strong Advertising Value

DOING what other theatres can do in larger spaces, the Imperial, San Francisco, puts over De Mille's "Why Change Your Wife" in a five fourteens. It is not just a hit or miss affair, but was carefully planned. If you will look this reproduction over carefully you will find that most of the cut lines run up and down, and the three figures give the effect of length, but at the top and bottom are cross lines to give the effect of width, because they run across the space unobstructed. This is the application of one of the simplest scientific rules of optics.

Take the cross lines as they stand, introduce prone figures in the cut and, even though the cut may be precisely the same height, the effect will be squat and cramped. All cross lines have that effect, whether they be drawing or type. Even so simple a thing as drawing the lined background across instead of up and down would have reduced the apparent size of the cut. Not a line in the entire display works against the general effect, and that white panel in the center cannot be overlooked because it stands between the two cuts. You are going to look at both. The eye must pass over the intervening space, and if the eye rests long enough to read the top line the chances are that the entire space will be read.

It is one of the best examples of a scientific layout we have ever seen. Every woman knows that lines in her dress running up and down will make her look taller and that cross lines will reduce her apparent height, but it is seldom that the same principles are applied to advertising making.

Advertised Locklear by Plane

USING the airplane to boom the Universal's "The Great Air Robbery" with Lieutenant Locklear has been done in many sections, but not more thoroughly than in the Chicago district, where the 'planes dropped some 20,000 handbills on the smaller towns, while 100,000 were dropped in and around Chicago. The 'planes were supplied by the Ralph C. Diggins Company, which has also supplied 'planes for film delivery to small towns for advertising purposes. The Locklear stunt was pulled on behalf of the distributors.

This Might Be Worse, But It Could Be Much Better

UNTIL press men get away from the idea that a certain number of column inches will sell a given number of tickets, and until managers learn to check up on them, we shall probably get such displays as this. It is not the work of some half-baked, correspondence school art student in a one-horse town, but is lifted from the Mastbaum display in one of the Philadelphia papers. It might be worse, but it could be so much better without yet being good.

Theoretically, the name of Nazimova should sell a story, but why not give the name a chance to work? The name superimposed upon the cut kills both name and cut. Plain block type would have been much better. The chain suggestion in the frame merely served to fuss up the space and does no selling and the double bank of five point on either side of the top is too small to be read save by the most earnest fan. The other spaces in this display for the chain of houses are better, but this is very poor indeed.

Trade Mark Helped Switch

WHEN the Loew theatres in Washington, D. C., played "Pollyanna" the newspaper campaign was planned with the fact in mind that a switch was to be made from the Palace to the Columbia for a second week. The combined line rate of the four Washington papers is close to one dollar a line, so the money has to be intelligently spent.

The opening was on a Sunday, and the preceding Monday 100 lines were taken and run for the ensuing five days, not so much for the display as to cover the additional reading notices desired, for it was felt that this production could best be worked through the reading columns. On the opening Sunday 450 lines were taken, 150 lines across three columns, dropping to 75 lines for the remainder of the week.

This smaller advertisement carried a head of Miss Pickford in line against a black circle, and this made a trade-mark which worked to good effect when the play was changed over. The Columbia Sunday spaces called for the 450 line display, with the drop to 75 lines, and the trade-mark greatly helped to get the switch over. The trade-mark idea is always valuable for a house or for a film. It gives the suggestion at a glance and needs only to be built upon.

Three Ways of Getting Heralds Distributed

Stung the Editor for Front Page Three with Cleverly Faked Suicide Suggestion

STEVE BRODIE very nearly ended his theatrical career once when he fooled the newspapers with fake reports of his suicide, but it worked better in Fayetteville, N. C., where William C. McIntire got the first column of the front page with a three line, three column head for a fake suicide to advertise "Other Men's Shoes."

To start the plant Stein's shoe store reported to the police the theft of a pair of shoes. This went down on the blotter and was forgotten for a time.

His Note Was Found.

A couple of days later the shoes together with other belongings and a note to the Chief of Police were found on a bridge leading over the Cape Fear river. The note was written on the stationery of the local hotel and read:

Chief of Police,

Fayetteville, N. C.

I drew the money at the bank. Never mind about the telegrams. I can't take this fatal leap wearing other men's shoes.

C. C. B.

The Reporter "Fell."

This letter with other papers and the shoes were taken to the police station and at once the authorities got busy. In the usual course the news was given to the reporter for the Observer, and as a suicide is a rare break in Fayetteville, he hustled off to tell the editor, with the result that the story in full appeared in the paper with the German situation getting only a two-column head.

The chief even announced that he had a couple of clues, one of which he thought would reveal the identity of the dead man.

Stein Got Busy.

The newspaper account stated that the shoes were identified by Stein, and that was Stein's cue to get busy. He loaded his front with playcards about "other men's shoes" apparently hooking up with the letter left by the suicide.

That got McIntire in line for some more publicity about other men's shoes and the play of the same title, and just to help along the water supply was cut off for a time and he posted a fake telegram signed by Edgar Lewis stating that the river was being drained in the search for the man who wore "The Other Man's Shoes."

Smelled a Rat.

By this time the hook-up was so strong that the people began to smell a rat and awe gave place to giggles, but the work had been done and "Other Men's Shoes" was so thoroughly advertised that McIntire had trouble finding room for all who wanted to see the play.

Of course, the newspaper dropped the story and the police called in their grappling hooks about the same time, but the editor only smiled a sick sort of smile because the Rose Theatre was a good advertiser and there was no use getting sore over the theft of nearly a column of space right on the front page.

Be Careful.

It is the better plan, however, not to break the story, but to play it in such a way that the truth is never officially known. There is always a danger of a back kick in a stunt of this sort and it is better to let the excitement blow over without revealing the facts, for you never can tell when someone will get sore and make trouble. Stories of this sort should be planted so carefully that they cannot be traced back to the theatre. It is the better plan.

Editors do not like being fooled, and it is better to let the stunt pass as the hoax of some practical joker than to take the credit—and the responsibility, but it is a whale of a stunt when cleverly planted.

Three Ways of Distributing Heralds Direct to Patrons

GETTING heralds into the right hands is one of the real problems of the publicity man. The indiscriminate throwaway style is wasteful and handing the slips to patrons limits results to those who attend the previous week's shows, and the chief aim of advertising should be to reach those not already patrons.

Caldwell H. Brown, of the Liberty, Zanesville, Ohio, got out 10,000 slips jointly advertising "The Life Line" and a "Life Line Special Sale," the slips supplied each retailer carrying only the announcement of his own contribution, one sample reading: "Don't miss Deacon's Life Line Sale of absolutely pure lard; 25c. lb. for two days, Monday and Tuesday, and don't miss seeing—" with the theatre advertising below. This was not the regular herald, but a cheap slip and it did not matter if several got into one house. They were inexpensive and the cumulative effect was good.

Tom Morrow, of the Strand, Charleston, W. Va., used the straight "Everywoman" heralds and obtains his distribution through a laundry, the house imprint hooking up with the suds shop. Pretty much the same scheme was worked, only more so, when 20,000 slips were inserted in the loaves of bread distributed by the Whiteside Bakery Co., of Louisville, with the inevitable hook-up copy. It looks as though Oscar A. Doob is still on the job.

Keeps Tab on Telephone Calls

FREQUENTLY an alert manager will evolve some form of questionnaire for the purpose of discovering his patrons likes and dislikes, but Emil Gerstle, of the Valentine, Toledo, has a chart in front of the telephone over which inquiry calls come in. Each time an inquiry is made for any star on his list a check mark is placed in the proper column and these results are tabulated at regular periods. Mr. Gerstle figures that these inquiries roughly indicate the relative popularity of the players and the box office statements seem to confirm this theory. The Talmadge sisters, for example, lead the list and an examination of the cash records show that they pull more money regularly than a majority of the attractions. The list is chiefly useful in determining the amount of advertising to be done, but it also helps in the bookings.

Used a 24-Sheet Calendar to Warn of Dangerous Days

PLAYING on the title, M. Wolf, exploitation man of the Goldwyn Los Angeles office, prepared a very effective sign for "Dangerous Days" for the California Theatre. The cut shows the board with the dangerous days indicated, and it attracted no little attention. A possible improvement would be to post the calendar with the date boxes left blank, filling these in after the mystery had done its work. The idea is capable of indefinite adaptation for windows and lobbies as well as desk blotters and similar pieces.

Beware the Ides of March.

That's what Caesar was told and because he did not watch his step he got bumped off. Los Angeles theatregoers were more careful and they hustled to the California, March 14 to 20.

The Press Book Is Good if You Know How

Scared Servants and Bosses with Two Post Card Teasers

JUST because he saw a cut labeled for newspaper work in the press book, D. M. Bain, of the Howard-Wells string in Wilmington, N. C., did not figure that he just simply had to use it for newspaper work. He figured that he could blackhand the town for Holy Week and pull in some extra money at a time when most people are going to church or are saving up for new Easter lids. And after he got through figuring he wrote Q. E. D. under the answer and then he turned his attention to the making out of deposit slips.

One of the cuts for the sensation story, "Who's Your Servant?," was a single column, 5¼-inch cut shown on the left of the reproduction below. It was suggested as a blind teaser, but Mr. Bain saw greater possibilities in the idea.

Everyone Is Interested.

He figured that everyone was interested in the servant question, so he put it on a post card in a neat, but not gaudy red ink. It was not gaudy, but it was loud enough to make a noise, and it went out to everyone on the Victoria's mailing list. He used regular government post cards, and there was no advertising on the front to give the snap away.

The cards really made a sensation. Most of them were received by the servants and delivered to employers, and Mr. Bain says that some of the servants quietly beat their jobs, thinking that the card might be from a detective agency. Allah is wise, all knowing! At any rate they were interested, but not more so than their bosses, some of whom seemed to think that it was another case of a paternal government getting unduly interested in a new chance for taxation.

Even the less credulous wondered what it was all about.

Three Days Later.

Three days later, or the Saturday before the opening, the sister card, shown on the right, was sent to the same list of addresses. It was printed in the same ink, to connect with the first, and found everyone half sold on the proposition.

Even where no great speculation had been roused by the first card, it at least served to pave the way for the second shot, which was Mr. Bain's big idea. He figured out that people who had read the first card, which was possibly not an advertisement, would be more interested in the second card, even though it was clearly a piece of publicity.

All he counted upon doing with the first card was to get interest in the second. He did not figure that he would get as much interest as developed in some instances, but he did know—in advance, that four times a many people would read the second card if he teased with the advance.

Counted on Curiosity.

He is a good showman, and he knew that while the second card was well done, a great many persons would look at it only long enough to see that it was an advertisement and then throw it away. But where their interest had already been gained by the blind advertisement, it was only human nature to read on and see what it was about, and the message was so framed that it got over with very little reading.

In a newspaper it might have done well, but on postal cards it gained greatly in value and at no very great additional expense. It was worth a great deal more than it cost, and it made business from the jump; and presumably it will keep up for the three days.

Probably hundreds have used the cut for newspaper work, but Mr. Bain is an expert showman, and he saw even greater possibilities than the creator of the advertisement perceived, and so he made it work harder for him.

Played a Number to Pay for Big Window Display

PLAYING a number to pay for a big window display in the largest music store in San Francisco, is one of the stunts recently put over by the Imperial Theatre. The house makes much of its music under the direction of Severi. For "On With the Dance" the leader selected "My Isle of Golden Dreams" and the press agent hustled down to Sherman Clay & Co., and got an entire window display with a huge announcement card. This is the only way to work the window stunt. The merchant expects some return for the advertising he gives, and is not going to go to any trouble to dress a window just to help business at a theatre. He wants the house to reciprocate and do something for him, and unless he gets something in return he will not come in. Sometimes merely making the window display more attractive will work, but with songs you must help to popularize the melody if you want to collect windows.

Two Postcards Which Work As One.

Sending out the card on the left got the recipients in a receptive frame of mind for that on the right, which was sent to the same list three days later.

Here Are Two New Stunts for "Mary's Ankle"

Another Second Story Lady Painter Gets the Crowd to Watch Her Sign

RECENTLY H. A. Albright got on the front page of the Butte newspapers by shinning down a rope in red velvet bloomers and painting a sign for a coming Bill Hart picture. He got a running story for three days and won a lot of comment. Following up the idea, though not with the same elaborate plant, the Strand, Birmingham, Ala., got a proportionate share of publicity.

When Adam first came into being it is probable he rubbernecked all over the Garden of Eden as industriously as our own Giebler still rubbernecks the studios. Ever since mankind has been curious. A safe being hauled into an upper window of a Broadway building in New York will waste thousands of dollars worth of time for messengers and their bosses. Seth Green painting his fence will command the absorbed attention of half the population of Cobb's Crossing and get his name in the local paper.

Made Them Rubber.

In the same way the Strand arranged to capitalize curiosity with the painting stunt. They got twenty-six lines in the daily paper with a mention of the house and the name of the attraction. They played it without preparation, so they got less space than Mr. Albright, but they cleaned up in proportion.

Apparently the offices of the Lynch Enterprises in Birmingham are above the Colonial Theatre. At any rate, the Strand sign was painted just above the Colonial entrance, from a scaffold hung from the upper windows.

With the sign in place a woman stepped out from the windows of the second story and began to paint. At least it was a figure dressed in a light summer costume, and a large brimmed hat prevented the face from being clearly seen, helped to some extent by the height.

First of all she painted in the face at the left, and then the ankles at the right, working slowly to consume as much time as possible. The legend was saved until the last, but eventually it was blocked in, and the mysterious woman disappeared into the offices and several hundred persons went about their more important business.

To get the full advantage of the stunt it should be planned well in advance and worked up in the newspapers. The Strand did not advertise in advance, so it got only the passerby. It would be possible to advertise for a woman who could paint, and work the stunt along for several days, persuading the editor to run a story on the advertisement and then the applicants and finally the stunt itself. In a town of 20,000 to 30,000 this can be worked for a three-day story.

It will be well to have some woman already selected to appear among the applicants. Artistic skill is not necessary in any great degree, for the house sign man can sketch in the design in lead pencil which will not be visible from the street. The girl should be pretty, if possible, and should be reasonably young.

Tell the Editor.

Go to the editor and confess frankly that you are going to use the woman for a press stunt. Tell him all about it. As long as the story reads well he does not care whether it is a plant or not. All he wants is the assurance that the stunt will be carried through.

Arrange to have a reporter present when the applicants put in an appearance, and to this end name a time as well as place when applications can be made. It might even be well to offer a small donation to a local charity if any member of the organization interested will volunteer to do the work. This will give it a broader news angle.

State just when the stunt will be worked and you will have an audience that will jam the street. You can even copy Mr. Albright in timing the work so that it will take two days to complete, announcing that work will be stopped before matinee time, and stopping the painting ten minutes before the show.

It is a good stunt. Try it some time, remembering that the more frills you put on the more space you will gain.

Read and Learn the Formula for Planting a Press Story

IN the course of an article written for the Enterprise Square Dealer, the house organ of the Lunch enterprises and the most helpful house sheet we know of, G. E. Brown puts into small space the secret of press agenting when he writes:

"A mistake frequently made by the man who does not know is to seek free publicity through the medium of the business office of a newspaper. Advertising men have little or no influence with the editorial end of the game. Where they do manage to get something in the papers gratis, it is only through begging the editorial staff. Then, in nine cases out of ten, the editorial man who is induced to write the 'copy' has no personal interest in the story. Thus, by the time the assistant city editor and the city editor get through with it, only enough of the original appears in print to make the advertiser mad.

"The wise seeker after publicity travels an entirely different route. He knows his personal friends on the papers, and he gets into touch with the right one. This 'one' may be the dramatic editor, if a story on the dramatic page is wanted, a reporter, if a news story is required, or the city or managing editor if a publicity campaign is in the air."

Get a Four Page Special to Start New House Campaign

BECAUSE the American Theatre, Charleston, Mo., had been closed down while it changed hands and underwent renovation, the new manager, McCutcheon, and Harry Lorch, publicity man for the Goldwyn St. Louis office, put their heads together and planned a hook-up for the reopening. The house booked Goldwyns for the opening week, which was where Lorch became interested, and together they arranged to swing a four-page hook-up in which the advertisers had their choice of "The Blooming Angel," "The Gay Bachelor," "Jinx," "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" and "Bonds of Love" to tie up to. Even at that some of the advertisers did not hook up to titles, but they helped to swing the four pages, and a four-page special made a lot of talk in a small town.

Makes Half Reels Specials

HARRY POMEROY cleaned up recently with five Mutt and Jeff comedies reboked as a "Revue" with the 2,500 feet unaltered by special leader or anything of that sort, and his first matinee on a 700 house showed 600 children and 400 adults. Now he is planning other similar stunts for Saturday afternoons. It is not what you pay but what you get which counts.

These Aren't Mary's Ankles.

This "Mary" is a "John" who put on the skirts merely to draw a Birmingham crowd while he painted a sign for the real "Mary's Ankle." His ankles are not worth looking at.

Now a Bootblack Comes on a Hook-up Page

Illinois Manager Paints Posters and Gets Unusual Trade Builders

MAKING a regular lobby feature of his water color posters builds business for Will Sohm, of the Belasco Theatre, Quincy, Ill. Mr. Sohm calls himself an amateur, but he has developed a professional proficiency at the work and his posters class with the best.

For one thing, Mr. Sohm knows that the gaudiest coloring is not always the best attractor. Most of his work is done in soft colors almost suggesting pastel. They attract by their excellence rather than through their vivid coloring, which is something few poster artists seem to learn. Hot reds, glaring greens and burning yellows are all well enough for work where the public must be caught as it is rushing by, but Mr. Sohm wants his posters for lobby work and he knows that a chromatic catastrophe will not only defeat his effort but spoil his entire lobby.

Soft and Soothing.

Soft, soothing effects are what Mr. Sohm aims at and to get these he first lays down his background color with an air brush. The background for the plant effect is a pale blue shaded with gray and touched up here and there with a faint yellow. The straight lettering is on a ground of gray tinged with blue and running into a faint yellow at the bottom.

The portrait in the bloom is cut from a lithograph and pasted down on the sheet after the lettering is put in. The petals are yellow and white, defined with deeper yellow and green, with green and black shading. The pot is earthen with the lettering in black shaded in white. The only bright color is the green of the stem and half-a-dozen lines in the same green defining some of the petals.

In the straight lettering the lines are done in a deep, dull red, with shading and design in a gray which shows both blue and pink tint. It is not a vivid red, yet the color is the only pronounced note on the sheet. The rest is all quiet and unobtrusive.

Probably there is not one regular sign painter in every hundred who would have the good sense to leave the vermilion alone on a job like this. He would get a red so strong that it would fairly burn up the lobby and point with pride to his work.

Mr. Sohm goes to the other extreme and unless we miss our guess he sprays the completed poster with a very thin solution of white, which adds softness to the effect, just as a coat of powder over grease paint tones down a make-up.

Has a Bloom.

This is only a guess, but in some fashion Mr. Sohm tones down his coloring to get a soft bloom on the sheet, suggestive of the down on the peach. It gives the posters an effect wholly their own, and the device is not so apparent as to suggest itself to the average person. It is very effective.

A third example sent in was torn too badly to be reproduced. It is the most daring of the three and shows a woman acrobat, in tights, standing on her head and supporting on her feet a globe which reads "Mabel Normand in 'The Jinx'." It is the only pronounced design in the set, and even this is not loudly assertive, but interesting more because of the pose than through loud coloring or assertive drawing.

It Pays Well.

Printed posters have a place in the scheme of advertising which cannot be filled by other devices, but hand lettering is better for lobby cards and if it is well done it is a distinct advertising asset. It is possible to go even further than this and declare that well-handled designs will make more money for the house than the most elaborate layout of lithographs could.

Patrons will even come to look for new designs and they will have a direct appeal in that they get over the bill better even than the newspaper work to a certain class of patrons. For years the regular patrons of Keith's Union Square, when that was the only Keith house in New York, used to gather in front of the bills painted by Edgar E. Miller because they were so well done. This holds good even more strongly in the small towns.

"Tin Pan Alley" Stunt Good for Other Titles as Well

MAKING a flash in a double sense, the Lynch Theatre at Anderson, the Liberty, recently hung its lobby with tinware to advertise "Tin Pan Alley," borrowing the goods from the local ten cent store for a credit card and three passes. The lobby was crowded with kitchen stuff and much of it was hung from the ceiling in such a manner that a passing breeze could get a clatter out of the tins. This stunt is particularly appropriate for the title they used, but it will work for "Come Out of the Kitchen" and a number of other plays. By hooking up with the store you can get them to give you a window as well.

"Real Live Ankles" Please Atlanta Theatre Patrons

WHAT the press agent calls "real live" ankles were used to advertise "Mary's Ankle" at the Lynch theatres in Atlanta. A hook-up was arranged with a store dealing in women's shoes and hosiery, and two girls were employed to boom the play and the products of the store at the same time by serving as models for the shoes and stockings. Outside of the fact that the crowds wore off half an inch of concrete sidewalk in front of the windows the stunt was highly successful, and both theatre and store cleaned up, one on tickets and the other on footgear. It was only a couple of weeks previous that Frank Hammond put a masked dancer in a window to boom "On with the Dance," and if this sort of thing keeps up "tab" and burlesque shows will be forced to give Atlanta a wide berth.

Even the Bootblack Came In

USING the all-shoe hook up for "Other Men's Shoes," the Palace, New Orleans, pulled a new idea. There were four shoe store displays as well as an exchange advertisement and at the bottom a seven three and a quarter ran for a shoe shining parlor with the statement that "Shorty shines more 'Other Men's Shoes' than any other shoe shiner in New Orleans." This is, we think, the first time a bootblack has been worked into a hook-up page display.

Lloyd Helped Stock Company

CASHING in on Harold Lloyd's popularity, the management of the Chicago Stock Company, a repertoire troupe, playing at Kingston, N. Y., used a player who could look like Lloyd for the Raffles stunt. He was to give two tickets to every person who told him he looked like the film star, and so many people recognized him (not being blind) that the house was filled the opening night, which was precisely what the manager wanted. With the constant cry that the pictures are killing the theatres, this swing to the other side is worthy of note.

Paint Your Own for Lobby Display.

Two examples of how an Illinois exhibitor gets his patrons to watch his lobby. These signs were lettered by Will Sohm.

How One Manager Uses the Sunday Closing

What Will Managers Do When Circuses Leave for the Road?

WHATEVER will managers of picture theatres do when the circuses leave their winter quarters? Denver has been giving a riot of Sells-Flotow camels lately and now comes Des Moines with a pre-release circus parade to advertise "Desert Gold."

Forgetting Lawrence, Kansas, the Hodkinson hustlers centered their ambitions on Des Moines lately and started in to fill up the town with Hodkinson and then some more Hodkinson, and they managed to land four large houses and three neighborhood theatres for one week with "Desert Gold," "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," "$30,000" and some more. The Royal took five fifteens for "Desert Gold," the Rialto three nines for the Louise Glaum and the Casino a pair of eights for the Kerrigan. The later does not belong on the page, but is pasted in to get in the running, for the News uses two pages for theatre displays.

Three of the Hodkinson Displays.

But the Blank-Frankel forces wanted to do something more than just use the newspapers, and two of the house managers struck leads which made for big interest. B. I. Van Dyke, of the Royal, picked the big idea. The Yankee Robinson circus holes up in Des Moines for the winter, and Mr. Van Dyke and C. D. Hill, of the Hodkinson office, arranged to hire the outfit for three hours a day for a "Desert Gold" parade. It was a good preparation for the road season and the deal was easily made.

Book Hook-up, Too.

Adding to the circus stuff was a mule train, which was staged to suggest the Western locale of the story. Each day the parade started out, routed to cover practically all parts of the city. And the parade wound up in front of the theatre where a pickaninny band and a troupe of Tasmanian troubadours (whatever that may be) hammered out a couple of songs, winding up with the plugger song for the attraction.

The book stories were hooked up with copies of the book and this helped not a little for a lot of people read the book and went to see the play and a lot more had the book already and were reminded of the fact and did the same thing.

Abe Frankel, over at the Rialto, knew that his brother manager had swept him from the streets, but he split on the window shows with the "Lone Wolf" series to get into the news, and he concentrated on his lobby. A huge oil color of Miss Glaum was the chief attractor with colored stills to flank it and much was made of a prologue staged to represent a coffee house in the Limehouse district of London, utilizing twenty persons. This was not as big as the street parade, but it helped to bring them in.

The other houses just rode on the extra publicity these stunts gained by announcing that they had Hodkinsons, too. All in all it was a big week for Hill and Hodkinson and the houses, but what will become of a lot of enterprising managers when the circuses take to the road?

Worked Bank Deposit Idea for Prizes in His Contest

USING an old idea got James Barlow, of the Maze Theatre, Stockton, Cal., $25 in cash prizes for a contest at no cost to himself. He planned a contest based on "The Lion Man," the Universal serial, and offered twenty-five prizes of one dollar each, in cash. A local bank supplied the prizes in the shape of books of their savings department each showing a deposit of one dollar. The money could not be immediately withdrawn, but was to serve as the foundation of a bank account.

Most progressive banks are willing to give from fifty cents to one dollar for a new account and a great many merchants have capitalized this fact in various prize and coupon schemes, but the idea has been little used in connection with the picture theatres, though the tie-up is a good one for both bank and house.

In this instance the bank gave hearty cooperation and advertised as heavily as the house through window posters and in the newspapers. It is figured that if the winner must let the money lie on deposit for a stated time, usually from three to six months, pride in the possession of a bank account will induce the habit of saving which will last beyond the probationary period.

Are You Closed on Sunday?

Here's an Original Idea

BECAUSE his house was closed on Sundays in compliance with the blue laws, W. E. Drumbar, of the Signal Amusement Co., Knoxville, looked around to see what he could do with the day. It happened that he had Griffith's "The Greatest Question" and he persuaded the First National to let him have it Sunday. Then he invited all the newspaper men to come down and see it run off and as a result the Monday papers carried big stories of the presentation. The rigid enforcement of the law makes for a stagnant Sunday so that good local stuff is scarce for Monday morning and Mr. Drumbar got double the space he could have commanded on a Tuesday story of a regular Monday showing, so now whenever he can, he gets the films early and gives a special press view, which makes the newspaper men feel important. He does not confine his invitation to the regular men who cover the theatres. Any newspaper man can drop in, and this helps a lot toward the planting of special stories through the week. It's a great scheme no matter how you look at it.

These Dirty Shoes Cleaned Up

FOLLOWING the suggestion in "Exploitation Angles" for "Other Men's Shoes," C. D. Buss, of the Strand, Easton, Pa., got hold of all the old shoes he could acquire and made them into a lobby display for "The Lewis-Pathe feature. The Strand lobby does not lend itself well to displays, but the oddity of this layout attracted widespread attention and helped to keep the house filled during the run of the attraction. The shoes varied from the discarded army brogan to the dainty patent leather of the fashionable woman, and the variety attracted almost as much attention as the number.

Send In Your Stunts.

The Blue Birds Are Flying; the Circus Is Here.

But before the circus people went on the road an enterprising Des Moines manager hired the "Yankee" Robinson shows to boom "Desert Gold."

Cut Up Cuts Help Hook-up Page Contest

Used a Virtuous Vamp on the Streets to Make Talmadge Play Known to All

MAYBE you know a lot of Vamps off the screen, but the average small town resident is more or less at sea as to just what a Vamp is. He knows that Theda Bara and Louise Glaum are vamps because the press stories tell him so, but he lacks definite and exact information. Fort Madison, Iowa, KNOWS.

It is all due to James Boyle who runs the Strand Theatre in that teeming city. Mr. Boyle had Constance Talmadge booked in "A Virtuous Vamp," he didn't care who knew it. Not precisely that, but he did care who didn't know it, and to reduce the percentage of illiteracy in his town he hired a virtuous vamp to go out into the highways and byways—mostly the highways—to tell all and sundry.

It Takes Some Nerve.

He selected Miss Phylis Lake, a local girl who hopes some day that her name above a theatre will fight the Selznick electric signs on Broadway. She knows she is a good actress and as soon as Klaw and Erlinger find it out she is going to come on and demonstrate. Meantime, Mr. Boyle assured her that it would be good practice for her to play a part on the street lacking a stage with footlights on which to show her art.

So she shaved her eyebrows and bought a new lipstick and picked out her prettiest dress and sallied forth. There was a red, red rose in her hair and a steely glitter of determination in her eye as she hit the main street and started in.

Every time she came alongside a man, elderly, young or middle aged, she would manage to drop her handkerchief or her rose and when all the pants wearers in sight gave a good imitation of a college football scrimmage in their efforts to pick up the lost property, she would give the winner a dazzling smile and remark:

"Thank you so much. Meet me in the lobby of the Strand Thursday night."

Three or four hours later the victim would come out of his trance and remember that "A Virtuous Vamp" would be the attraction at the Strand opening that night.

Published Warnings.

As soon as the limited vampire got busy Manager Boyle began to issue warnings, picking up the press book material about Virtuous Vamps to warn Fort Madison. This, of course, helped to arouse interest, and soon the male portion of the population were out hunting for the vamp and trying to get one of the little cards which she passed out to her victims. Not to have been virtuously vamped was a temporary disgrace.

The little cards, by the way, were an important feature of the campaign. They read: "I am a virtuous vamp. Meet me at the Strand Thursday night." They were better than a policeman for chasing persistent would-be mashers. It took all of the romance out of the encounter and the old boys and the youngsters alike curled up when they found that they had been stung by an advertising dodge.

Lived Up to Her Name.

Sometimes such a device was needed for now and then Miss Lake would encounter one of the stupid sort who could not get it their heads that a pretty girl was making eyes at them for other reasons than their manly beauty, but one glance at the printed card was all that was needed to squelch the most eager swain. One look at the card and he just faded into the distance, for nothing will puncture the self esteem of a would-be masher than a laugh turned against him.

Leap-Year "Pinto" Roped Her Man to Show That She Could

SEVERAL exhibitors have employed a "Pinto" girl to ride through the streets to advertise the Goldwyn Mabel Normand production, but Bernard Depkin, Jr., of the Strand, Baltimore, built up on this idea. He had the "Pinto" ride through the streets with her rope about the neck of a man in evening dress (and a derby hat?) to better point the idea of the play. The double stunt worked more than twice as well as the single rider and the early results were so good that Mr. Depkin kept the pair out for the entire week and they helped not a little to keep the business up clear through to Saturday. The increased cost for the two riders was not great, but the results were gratifying. A mounted girl was no novelty. A girl leading a man by a rope around his neck was something really new and curiosity arousing, and it worked much better.

Another Hook-Up Page Idea Gives New Angle to Contest

CONTESTS seem to be getting an essential feature of hook-up pages, and Clarence Lucas, of the Moline, Illinois, Dispatch, got up a new idea. Mr. Lucas runs a department of from two to four pages in the Saturday edition and helps the houses plan their advertising. For "Everywoman" he went over the top with a double page worked on new lines. The paper had in stock some of the character cuts left over from the visit of the stage version of the play the year before. These were sawn into three sections by means of horizontal cuts and the parts were reassembled so that no two parts of the same cut were in the same space.

EVERY man as well as every woman will soon learn that it pays large dividends to permit our expert vulcanizers to repair their tires and tubes by our up-to-date method.

Every man and every woman is daily realizing that MILLER and GORDYER tires deliver more mileage per dollar than others.

EVERY

The Three-part Cuts.

Ticket prizes were offered, subject to the usual rules, for the best replies, the contestants being required to reassemble the cuts and name the advertisement in which each section of each cut appeared, also to state how many times the word "Everywoman" appeared in each display. The copy is written so that every advertisement must be read in its entirety, which is the main idea of the contest feature—to help the hook-ins. The stunt was devised and planned by Mr. Lucas who writes: "We believe that we are doing our share to boost the picture business—also our own."

Here's a Hint for Leap Year, Ladies.

If you see the man you want, get a rope and make him all you own as this Baltimore girl did to advertise the local showing of Mabel Normand in "Pinto."

E. W. Hammons to Distribute Films for National Geographic Society

ANNOUNCEMENT is made this week that contracts have been signed between E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of Educational Films Corporation, and Gilbert Grosevnor, president of the National Geographic Society of Washington, D. C., which will bring to Educational the motion pictures made by the recent expeditions of the society to investigate the eruptions of Mount Katmai, in Alaska.

Chief among the releases will be the society's official picture, "The Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes." Although the name gives the impression that it was coined by some clever title writer, it is the official name given by the society's investigators to the scenes they found following what was probably the most violent eruption in the world's history. Another picture deals more specifically with the activity of the Mt. Katmai volcano itself.

"The Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes" is still existent and resulted from the eruption. The expeditions headed by Prof. Robert L. Griggs found a valley in which there were over a thousand openings in the earth emitting columns of smoke that ascended to heights of at least 500 feet and literally thousands of smaller ones, known as "fumerloes." Three different expeditions were sent out by the National Geographic Society to gather these pictures, which have not been shown to any except small groups of scientists.

The magnitude of the eruption can be best judged from the statement of Prof. Griggs that if a similar outburst had centered in New York City all of Greater New York would have been buried under from ten to fifteen feet of ash and that it would have been months before anyone was able to approach nearer the city than Paterson, N. J.; that Philadelphia would have been covered under a foot of ash and the city in darkness for sixty hours; columns of steam and ashes would have been plainly visible beyond Albany and that ashes would have fallen over the whole Eastern States as far as the Gulf coast.

Greatest difficulties were met in getting these pictures on account of the waste condition of the country, the treacherous bridges of ash and snow that it was necessary to cross and the terrible gases that had to be endured. Often there were menaces from flood, with operation hampered because of the sifting ash prevented the preparation of food. Combination of the ten thousand "smokes," the glaciers and the snows, in contrasts with the violent eruptions and the molten lava have resulted in most striking material for the motion picture screen.

Several articles have been published in the National Geographic Magazine concerning this eruption and its results, and in a recent contest conducted among the 750,000 readers of the magazine to determine the most popular article that had appeared, "The Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes" was an easy winner. In fact, there has been such great interest that the society has conducted a successful movement for the purchase of the territory involved in the disaster and its conversion into a national park.

"We feel very gratified," said Mr. Hammons, "that Educational should be selected as the official representative of the National Geographic Society in distributing these pictures. It is a further indication of the standing of Educational in the scientific world and outside the motion picture trade. The National Geographic Society has been very reluctant to combine forces with any film organization and it is only the standard that we have created that has made possible the present co-operation, which I feel sure will prove a wonderful step forward in the dissemination of scientific information attractively presented."

Addition of the National Geographic Society adds a notable name to the distinguished list of non-theatrical organizations now working with Educational, including the Inter-Church World Movement, the American Red Cross, the Conservation Commission of the State of New York and a number of others.

Argus Enterprises Meets Difficulties Making Film

WHEN Don R. Canady, cameraman for the Argus Enterprises of Cleveland, went into the Hudson Bay country to make a picture for the Spanish River Pulp and Paper Company, he found the weather so cold that, according to his own statement, his camera froze. One hundred miles from the nearest town it was not an easy matter to develop film, and he declares that when the job was under way in a log cabin dark room, and no red lamp to work with, the thermometer registered fifty degrees below zero.

The picture, which is several reels in length, shows the company's logging activities, and follows the production of paper through its different processes to the making of newsprint paper.

Sanitation and Agricultural Subjects of New Photofilm

AN interesting educational picture has just been completed by the development department of the Southern Bell Telephone Company, in co-operation with Governor Hugh M. Dorsey, of Georgia, the International Harvester Company, and the Du Pont Powder Company. The picture was made to give the greatest possible impetus to added agricultural development in the state of Georgia during 1920. Reclamation of land from stumps and swamps, thus not only making the land tillable and susceptible to high cultivation, but at the same time free of breeding places for mosquitoes which carry malaria. Considerable of the production is devoted to proper methods of living.

The picture is constructed in such a way that, while it teaches a lesson in manpower conservation and the development of land, and impresses the great need of sanitation and progressive health measures, it has entertainment value also.

This production is being shown in Atlanta and throughout the South in the S. A. Lynch Enterprises' motion picture houses, which company is doing yeoman service in aiding the state and government in carrying on this great work.

Wonder If Any of These Is "Chief Rain-in-the-Face?"

No Foundation for "Movie Alibi" Shown In Official Reports on Delinquency

IN order to get a worth-while opinion on juvenile delinquency as caused by the moving pictures the National Board of Review last year addressed a letter to the chief probation officers of the principal cities of the country having juvenile courts, asking for a frank statement of their experience and convictions in this matter. The result as stated in the following resume of facts, should interest both sides.

As one probation officer put it: "I have been in this work for fourteen years and have had occasion to deal with thousands of delinquents. . . . Of the thousands of boys and girls arraigned in our court there have been a very few who testified, or of whom our investigators could learn, that they committed the wrong in question because of the so-called baneful effects of the pictures they had seen. Occasionally some newspaper fellow would draw on his imagination and have a front-page story concerning the evil effects of moving pictures on child life, but, like the proverbial sky-rocket, it would shoot up and suddenly disappear. Of course, there are certain pictures which fire the imagination of youngsters, but there are other things which they see in their everyday life which have the same effect."

Pictures a Convenient Excuse.

As these people naturally are in touch with the most wayward of our boys and girls, the board was prepared to have the majority of them report cases in which motion pictures were alleged to have played a part. Very few of the officers, however, reported such cases, and probably half of those reported, the officers intimated, might not be authentic cases, but inferred that motion pictures were seized upon by parents or offenders as a convenient excuse. They didn't mince words in this regard, either. Says one: "Parents always have excuses in court when confronted by the judge and charged with lack of responsibility, and the movies are so popular it is natural they should rest the blame there rather than on the real cause. Some of the teachers who lack initiative also blame a greater attraction than a classroom run by an incompetent person. Truant officers also lay trouble at movies' door to excuse their laxness."

In this connection it is interesting to note that out of the forty-two replying two of the five officers who alone indicted motion pictures as in their opinion an important direct cause of juvenile delinquency are in states having legal boards of censorship, namely, Ohio and Pennsylvania. In a certain Pennsylvania community, in fact, there appeared to have been a perfect orgy of juvenile delinquency, chiefly among foreign boys, ascribed to the influence of the pictures or a desire to see them. Yet one of the principal objects of the creation of these boards has been the protection of young people.

Advocate Special Performances.

This bears out the contention of the National Board of Review that motion pictures intended for adults cannot be made fit for young people by any amount of censoring, and that, therefore, the only way of meeting the problem of young people with respect to the films is by means of special performances. Even the average show, however, is not held generally by the probation officers to be harmful to the normal boy. One of them connected with the juvenile court of a large Southern city puts its effect concretely in these words: "We have 800 Boy Scouts in this city and they are all frequenters of the shows. Our records will show that less than one per cent. of the scouts come into the juvenile court in a year's time. I believe they get a knowledge from the pictures that helps them in their scout work. While, of course, the Boy Scout is for the most part a boy whose mentality is very good, it is not above that of the average boy that one meets in a city."

Blame Environment Rather Than Pictures.

Most of the probation officers emphasize that the true causes of delinquency in cases where motion pictures are alleged to have played a part are really neglect on the part of the home, environmental or hereditary causes and physical conditions connected with the theatre, rather than the character of the films. Thus trouble has been found to be due to inadequate lighting, to the admission of unaccompanied minors, loitering around the entrance, non-enforcement of the curfew law, etc., all of which matters can be regulated by proper attention from local authorities.

"The pictures in themselves are clean and wholesome as a whole," says one officer of a Mid-West city, "and are being kept so by the Board of Review to such an extent that they would be beyond question by any one unless it be some fanatic, and criticism would soon disappear if those picture men could themselves be censored who do not have and conduct a clean and orderly theatre. So, summing up an experience which extends back fifteen years in this line of work, I would give it that the real cause for criticism of motion pictures comes from wrong management of theatres rather than the screen."

Pictures Not a Direct Means.

And from another Mid-West city the report came: "I do not consider the motion pictures in themselves a direct cause of delinquency. In some cases where family discipline has been lax the motion picture has been a contributing cause, but in most instances upon investigation we find bad heredity and environmental influences, and delinquency would assert itself regardless of the motion picture."

The pamphlet, which covers twenty pages and quotes at length from many of the reports, closes with a plea for the provision of special performances for young people or "family entertainments," in which the co-operation of the National Committee for Better Films (a department of the National Board of Review) is offered communities everywhere. Copies of the pamphlet may be obtained from the National Board, 70 Fifth avenue, New York City, at 10 cents each.

Some Things Worth Knowing

That David P. Howells and several members of his staff, including Mr. Fait, who has recently returned from Brazil, Mr. Colvin Brown, who recently left the Clark-Comedies Corporation and Mr. Bomfin, of Brazil, visited the Kineto offices last week to look over the Chas. Urban "Movie Chats and Reviews" prior to sending the first shipments of the product to foreign countries, the rights to which were recently acquired by the Howells organization. They expressed keen satisfaction with the quality of the product.

That the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph D-7033 shows "The High Cost of Courting," "People You'd Like to Know," introducing Mary Roberts Rhinehart, and an animated cartoon, "Frenchy Discovers America."

That the committee of nine appointed as a result of the visual instruction conference at the N. E. A. convention in Cleveland, for the purpose of drafting a tentative plan for the nationalization and centralization of the Visual Instruction work, will meet at Ann Arbor, Mich., April 7, for the purpose of considering a method of procedure. At the same time invitations will be issued to all strictly non-theatrical, non-commercial-organizations interested in the use of films, charts and slides in education.

That the Paramount Magazine for April 4 shows the famous painter, Jacques Suzanne, at work in the barren ice regions of the Arctic circle. This issue also presents a remarkable picture of "A Storm at Sea."

That Bishop Neely's remarks at the Centenary Conservation Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Philadelphia, recently, regarding the use of moving pictures by pastors was not only uncomplimentary to progressive clergymen who do use them, but reflected an antiquated line of thought. Bishop Neely declared that the committee had no right to direct a pastor to use moving pictures in the evening service, and expressed the opinion that a pastor who can hold a congregation only by means of moving pictures, is a failure as a preacher of the Gospel. He forgot that times have changed, and that people are becoming so accustomed to having both printed and spoken word supplemented by still and animated illustrations, that the church without pictures is like a choir without an organ.

That Universal Current Events No. 12 has scenes showing the British forces mobilizing on the Zigana Mountains to convince the Sultan that he really has been conquered. There are also French troops on the job in Constantinople. This number shows also United States engineers on their way to strengthen the sea wall at Galveston, Texas. Scenes showing the Czecho Slovaks celebrating the end of the Allies ill-fated Russian adventure at Prague, Bohemia, and Austria turning over to Italy vast stores of artillery to be converted into iron for Italy's industries are to be seen in this number.

That the Fox News shows the arrival at the Capitol, Albany, of the big delegations of tenants and landlords, where a battle of words ensued over pending rent legislation. This includes closeup of prominent members of both parties. Examples of what the legislature are trying to remedy are shown in scenes from Brooklyn, wherein are seen the effects of sixteen evicted families piled up on the sidewalk.

That moving picture equipment will be installed in the new $50,000 Presbyterian church at Maryville, Kansas.

That the Chattanooga (Tenn.) High School Parent-Teachers Association propose to raise funds to purchase moving picture equipment for the new high school.

That moving pictures were used by the school teachers of Lancaster, Pa., in their fight for an increase in salaries.

That the continent of Africa is swarming with moving picture camera men. According to a report which left Africa a few weeks ago there were present at one time H. T. Cowling of the Paramount-Burton Holmes outfit, H. D. Ashton of the Educational Films Corporation, Jeff Dixon of the David P. Howells Company, two operators of the American Red Cross, with Merle La Voy in charge.

Pathe Review Gets Some Good Slow Motion Effects

PATHE REVIEW NO. 46, released April 11, presents Miss Grace Christie in "The Spirit of Belgium," an interpretative dance from the painting by Julian Ollendorff, which tells the tale of Belgium's great sacrifice and heroism. Biskra, Algeria, is viewed in the Pathecolor scenic. In the land of eternal heat few towns are more picturesque than Biskra, with its white dwellings and busy streets. "Nature's Portable Houses," is an interesting study of animal life presented by Dr. Dittmars of the New York Zoological Park. This shows various species of Mr. Turtle of whom we should all be envious, for he carries his house on his back and never has to tell the rent profiteers what he thinks about them.

Novagraph presents "Getting There, With and Without Speed," which is an unusual offering of slow motion. Anything that lives and breathes usually has a life-long itch to be on the go; therefore, legs and wings. The Ultra-Rapid Camera, slowing the action eight times, shows that the elephant is not wholly lacking in gracefulness. Views of the deer, the sea gull, and other animals, seen in action by slow motion, gives an interesting analysis of their graceful movements.

Mexico is not all revolutions according to the Pathe Review, as an insight into the mining industry there is shown. One of the largest silver smelters in the world is in Fundicion de Avalos, Mexico, where a fairly modern plant is located.

Paramount Magazine Has Group of Good Subjects

THE Paramount Magazine of March 21 covers the method of using the Bertillon system in identifying criminals by finger prints, which was planned by Inspector Faurot, who also is the chief participant in the sketch. The picture shows the system in actual operation when a law-breaker is apprehended, taken to Police Headquarters and held for trial, through evidence furnished by the telltale marks of his fingers.

How the eagle has gained its enviable position as America's mascot is another interesting feature shown in the current issue of the magazine. In tabloid form the picture shows the strength and mastery of this giant of the air and the reason for its choice as the symbol of this country.

"Reflections of a Bachelor Girl," the witty sayings of Helen Rowland, are included in this release, which concludes with "Handy Mandy's Debut" an animated cartoon by Frank Moser showing Bud and Susie's solution of the servant problem.

"Strassburg Redeemed."

"Strassburg Redeemed" is the name of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Picture of March 21. It shows the quaint city with its storks' nests, the peculiar female head dress and the pate de fois gras. Its cathedral has one of the most remarkable clocks in the world. It has been fought over incessantly by French and German alike who have alternately seized it by force of arms. To wander through the streets of the charming city, to study its citizens and to visit its cathedrals, the market place and its principal shopping and residential streets is an experience that promises a real treat under the guidance of Burton Holmes.

Bruce Returning from Cuba and Jamaica with Scenics

ROBERT C. BRUCE, director of "Scenics Beautiful" for Educational Films Corporation will return to New York next week after an extended stay in Cuba and Jamaica where he has made a number of subjects. Mr. Bruce will remain here for a month, cutting and titling the series and then will leave on another extended tour which will take him to foreign lands.

Although Cuba and Jamaica are among the nearest neighbors of the United States, only the most ordinary scenes in these two islands have been recorded by motion picture artists. Mr. Bruce, following his policy of preparing "scenarios" in advance and then seeking the material to fit them, has been able to create a series of intensely interesting picture-stories from material which has never before been seen on the screen.

It is expected that unusual interest will be shown in the scenics made on these two islands since they have become the "oases of America."

Fox Leases the Albermarle Theatre to Seat 3,500 Persons

WILLIAM FOX, president of Fox Film Corporation, has just announced that he has leased the new Albermarle Theatre, at the southwest corner of Flatbush avenue and Albemarle road, in the Borough of Brooklyn, New York City, and that he will make the structure one of the largest and handsomest playhouses in that borough. It will be devoted to vaudeville and motion pictures.

More than two months ago Mr. Fox completed plans for building a large theatre on Flatbush avenue, between Tilden avenue and Beverly road. Representatives of the Albermarle Theatre at the same time were planning their big playhouse. In view of the fact that two large theatres were contemplated within such a short distance of each other, conferences were held between representatives of Mr. Fox and the Albermarle interests.

After several meetings a lease was signed, under which the Fox Theatrical Enterprises got control of the new Albermarle. Mr. Fox will finish the construction of the new building. There will be two inclined passageways, or ramps, leading from the street direct to the balcony floor, so that those desiring balcony seats will have separate means of entrance and egress.

The structure will have the Colonial style of architecture, and the interior will be in the Empire style. It will have a seating capacity of 3,500. The property has a frontage of 104 feet and a depth of 268 feet.

"I intend that this theatre shall be one of the handsomest, most healthful and most comfortable in the country," said Mr. Fox. "No expense will be spared in making it something like a second home to the people in Flatbush. Here they not only will find the best to be shown in vaudeville and motion pictures but they will find courteous employes, a cheerful atmosphere, comfortable seats, perfect ventilation. The exits are to be arranged so that the house can be emptied within a few minutes. There will be no waiting, no crowding. This is what the public wants in the way of a playhouse, and this is what we intend giving."

"Goldwyn Week" Proves Success.

"Goldwyn Week" at Harmanus Bleecker Hall, Albany, was a great success, according to Resident Manager Ulysses S. Hill. Determined to give his patrons a real treat, Manager Hill booked four of Goldwyn's best for the week of March 22, opening with a three-day showing of Rex Beach's "Girl From Outside" and the "Loves of Letty," the latter picture featuring Pauline Frederick.

The result was packed houses, and on the last three days even the good records of the first half were topped when Will Rogers in "Jubilo" and Jack Pickford in "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" were offered.

The Pickford picture made such an excellent impression that the Proctor interests decided to hold it over for a three-day showing at the Leland, another Proctor house, for the following week.

A Trio of Grand Pictures from Pathe's Production Called "Rio Grande."

Rosemary Theby says, "If you no lika heem, you justa vamoose." Then Allan Sears proceeds to put the finishing touches on the villain in the last scene.

Among Busy Exchangemen

No "Con" in Kahn's Game as Metro Manager in Buffalo

HENRY W. KAHN, manager of the Metro 'exchange in Buffalo, is the new vice-president of the Buffalo Exchange Managers' Association, and one of the most popular men in Western New York film circles. Henry is putting Metro features into almost every house in the territory, and has, on several occasions, booked large productions for simultaneous showing on Sunday in both Shea's Court street vaudeville house and Shea's Hippodrome.

Just now Mr. Kahn's time is being taken up with learning the idiosyncrasies of a new gasoline buggy which he has purchased. At the Utica convention it was Kahn that kept the word METRO before the delegates wherever they went. He invented a contraption that slipped over the mouth piece of a telephone. These cards he put on every phone in every hotel. The cards read "Get a right connection by booking Metro."

Finch Goes to Sterling in Canada.

James E. Finch, sales representative of Regal Films, Limited, at Toronto, has been appointed sales manager of the Sterling Films, Limited, Toronto and Montreal. Finch is one of the veterans of the film exchange business in Canada, making his start with the Mutual. For four years he was with the Canadian Universal, being manager of the Vancouver branch for two years. Later he was with George Kleine at Chicago, but he became associated with the Exhibitors' Distributing Corporation.

Ben Soskin, who has been prominently associated with Sterling Films at Toronto, has moved to Winnipeg, Manitoba, where he is opening an independent exchange office for the handling of releases controlled by Sterling and other productions.

"Wrestling" with a Problem.

Ben Amsterdam and L. Korson, of the Masterpiece and Equity exchanges, Phila., announce that Spike Howard, the heavy-weight champion wrestler of Pennsylvania, has been engaged to exploit and lecture on the physical culture pictures, which include the world's champion wrestling match between Earl Caddock and Joe Stecher.

Ben Abrams Opens Own Office.

"Big" Ben Abrams has returned to Philadelphia as representative of the Masterpiece Distributing Corporation, of New York, and will open an office under the name of the B. B. Features. Mr. Abrams will exploit all of the World's Brady and Warwick pictures.

Frank H. Marshall is the manager of the newly-established Special Pictures headquarters established in Cleveland on the fourth floor of the Sincere Building.

Reilly—Old French Family.

"The Luck of the Irish" opened in Toledo at the Temple the week of March 21, and according to word received from there by Manager Reilly, of the Cleveland Real-art exchange, it went over big.

E. J. Smith, manager of the Cleveland Universal office, has returned from New York, where he attended the gala screening of "The Virgin of Stamboul." He says it is a real spectacular super-production.

Selznick Moves in Cleveland.

The Select and Selznick exchanges, Cleveland, have been moved from the Sloan Building, Cleveland, to the third floor of the Republic Building, being combined with the Republic exchange. It is also reported that the Vitagraph and Metro exchange managers are looking for space elsewhere because they have to move from the present location in the Sincere Building.

Dan Stearns, for years a Cleveland salesman for Pathe, has resigned and accepted a similar position with the Republic exchange in that city.

P. C. Mooney, sales manager for the Louis B. Mayer Attractions, was in Cleveland last week conferring with the First National officials. He renewed many old acquaintances, as Cleveland is his home town.

Conde Joins Robertson.

F. C. Conde, formerly with Famous Players-Lasky in New York, has joined the Buffalo Robertson-Cole sales staff, according to an announcement by E. J. Hayes, local manager. Mr. Conde will cover Western New York and Pennsylvania.

Mr. Hayes reports contracts closed with the Victoria in Rochester and the Columbia in Erie on the new Hayakawa and Barriscale productions. He has also signed a contract with the Lyric for the first run in Buffalo of H. B. Warner in "The White Dove."

Quigley Comes to Buffalo.

G. H. Quigley, who has been connected with the New York, Newark and Cleveland offices of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has come to Buffalo as a member of the local sales staff. Mr. Quigley will be city salesman. "Buck" Taylor, Pathe manager, who is a disciple of Izaak Walton, is already polishing up the old fishing pole, preparatory to the first hegira into the realms of the scaly kingdom. "Buck" has a "house" which he ties on the rear of his flivver and every Saturday afternoon his address is "Somewhere along Lake Erie."

Harry Dixon, who will manage the new theatre being built on Broadway near the municipal market, has resigned as a member of the Pioneer Sales staff. The new theatre is expected to open late this spring.

McBride Making Good.

"Eddie" McBride, who recently deserted the ranks of newspaperdom, to dive into the mysteries of the film game in the Buffalo Fox office, is getting along famously. "Eddie" started in the poster department and is now learning the shipping end of the business. 'Tween times he accompanies salesman about the city. "Eddie" was a good reporter, but it looks like he is going to be a better film man.

Blank Increases Sales Force.

Manager C. E. Holan of the A. H. Blank Enterprises—franchise holders for Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas—has added to his force working out of general headquarters in Omaha. Harry Ellis of Chicago has been employed to represent First National in Western Iowa, and R. D. Hanks, said to be a 20-year-old wonder salesman from Lincoln, Neb., will cover the northern part of his home state.

On San Francisco Film Row.

Work has been commenced on the excavation of a site at Leavenworth street and Golden Gate avenue for the erection of a film exchange building.

Floyd St. John, who recently organized the Co-operative Film Exchange, San Francisco, is making a trip to New York for the purchase of films.

J. E. McCormick, who has been connected of late with a San Francisco theatre, has left for Los Angeles to become exploitation representative of the Sol Lesser Distributing Company.

Under the management of C. A. Nathan the San Francisco branch of Universal is doing a whale of a business, and its splendid showing came in for favorable comment on the part of James V. Bryson during his recent visit here. Priscilla Dean recently visited this city and her latest picture, "The Virgin of Stamboul," has since been reviewed.

Cassin Detroit Equity Office Manager.

Fred J. Cassin, of Port Huron, has been appointed manager for Equity Pictures, Detroit, which will permit Messrs. Churchill and Haynes, general and sales managers, respectively, to spend practically all of their time in the state.

Mr. Cassin comes to Detroit well fitted for his new work. He has been associated with Herb Weil ever since the latter jumped into the theatre business. He has been usher, operator and everything else around Mr. Weil's theatres, climbing the latter until he became manager and "right hand man" to Mr. Weil.

Henry W. Kahn

in Big Distributing Centers

Lots of News in Pittsburgh

That fellow Flarity, of the Pittsburgh Goldwyn is setting a pace for himself that would do any film salesman proud, and he is proud too and declares: "There's a reason; I've something to sell."

Frank Niggel, manager of the Apex Exchange, Pittsburgh, was in Philadelphia and New York recently on a business trip

Mr. Kaufman is the new booker at the Pathe Exchange, Pittsburgh, succeeding Jack Graham, who is on the road for Republic.

O. R. Kurt, of the Pittsburgh Robertson-Cole, was confined to his bed with illness for a few days recently.

Frank Carlson, for a long time publicity manager and assistant manager at the Olympic Theatre, Pittsburgh, has joined the road forces of the Crandall Film Co. Manager Milton D. Crandall has purchased him a Ford, and says that in the future all his salesmen will be equipped with these runabouts.

Crandall in Columbus.

The Crandall exchange, Pittsburgh, will open an office in Columbus, Ohio, within the next three weeks. Mr. Crandall believes that this is the best distributing center of that State, whereas other exchanges have two branches, one in Cincinnati, and the other in Cleveland. He also stated that other exchanges will no doubt imitate the precedent he has established.

J. J. Lieberman arrived in Pittsburgh from New York on March 22 to look after one of the "In Old Kentucky" shows which the First National is putting out. Lieberman is no stranger in Pittsburgh, he having handled such shows as "The Birth of a Nation" and other big film attractions here. He also handled "Mickey" in the South.

Another "Stamboul" Fan.

Manager Stern, of the Pittsburgh Universal, returned to Pittsburgh from the Metropolis with the usual smile of good cheer and his suitcase of "ideas" for putting over the latest Jewel de luxe production, "The Virgin of Stamboul." Manager Stern says the demand in the East for this picture is greaking all records.

M. Chernoff, Pittsburgh sales specialist for Goldwyn, spent several days down in 'Lil Old N'yak' recently, hobnobbing with some of the "big boys" and if his demeanor or disposition since his return is to be taken as a criterion, they sure did treat him right.

Watch for Hite Announcements.

Claude C. Hite, president of the C. C. Hite Film Attractions Company, was in Cleveland last week attending to business for that concern. Before departing for Cleveland Mr. Hite said he has lots of things to "announce" to the trade in the very near future.

Lou Baum Confers in New York.

Lou Baum, manager of the Universal offices, Cincinnati, was in New York last week conferring with Henry Berman and Carl Laemmle regarding the exploitation of "The Virgin of Stamboul," their latest special.

Eph Rosen, former manager of the New Unique Theatre, Minneapolis, has resigned to become city salesman for the Vitagraph exchange. Mr. Rosen's place at the New Unique was taken by Arthur Abelson, who recently managed the New Lyric.

Seelye Looks Over Minneapolis.

C. R. Seelye, general manager of the National Picture Theatres of New York, was in Minneapolis last week looking over the motion picture situation in the Northwest. Mr. Seelye declared the motion picture outlook in the territory served by Minneapolis to be excellent.

Adda Boy, Eddie!

"Eddie" Tunstead, secretary of the Features Film Co., returned this week with a series of pictures, which he declares will "knock the exhibitors throughout the Northwest cold." The Features Film Co., which was recently organized in Minneapolis, will distribute in Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Montana, and parts of Wisconsin and Michigan.

Add to Circuit Staff in Minneapolis.

George F. Law and Mannie Gottlieb have been added to the First National's Minneapolis exchange as feature salesmen. Mr. Law, former manager of the Minneapolis Mutual exchange, was recently connected with the local branch of Famous Players. Mr. Gottlieb has been connected with Supreme Pictures Corporation, and in exploitation work for "Hearts of the World."

Garner Goes to St. John.

Charles A. Garner, formerly of Cleveland, Ohio, has been appointed manager of the St. John, N. B., branch of the Famous Lasky Film Service. Garner was with Mutual in Toronto after leaving Cleveland, where he was in charge of the Paramount-Artcraft office.

"Wes" Bachmeyer, Cincinnati district manager for Metro, has been spending a number of days in Detroit and Cleveland offices. He will also visit Pittsburgh before returning to Cincinnati.

Felder in the Field.

E. C. Felder, special New York field representative for Selznick, has been spending the last ten days with Jack Conat, manager of the Cincinnati office and will probably remain in this territory until the middle of April. Mr. Felder is well-known here, and is one of the small army of fellows known as "regular fellows."

Fine Art Takes Metropole.

Fine Art Pictures Corp., with offices in St. Louis controlled by S. J. Hankin, have purchased the Metropole Film Co., owned by Sam Shurman and releasing Gale Henry, Billy West and Monkey comedies.

Fox Changes House Managers.

Walter D. Shafer, manager of the Fox Liberty Theatre, St. Louis, has been called to New York and Charles B. McDonald of the Fox Film Co., has taken over the management of the Liberty. Charles B. McDonald is a brother of H. C. McDonald, a managing director of the Fox organization and another brother, J. T. McDonald, represents the Fox organization at Springfield, Mass.

Manager Kent Makes Changes in Detroit Select Office

J. O. KENT, Detroit Select manager, announces a number of changes, made necessary by William A. Kent being promoted to the position of manager of the Canadian branch in Toronto. Jim has appointed Frank Stuart, former cashier and bookkeeper, as his assistant and city salesman. Mr. Stuart is one of the old guard in the exchange end of the business, being for a number of years with the old General Film Co. He was also assistant manager at Fox for a while.

Harry Hondorf, formerly with Metro and United Pictures, has taken charge of the bookings at the Select office and will also look after some of the office details and correspondence relieving Mr. Kent, so that he can devote more time to the executive work.

Haines in Des Moines.

Edgar B. Haines, formerly connected with the Pathe corporation in New Jersey, has come to Des Moines to take charge of the Universal Exchange, succeeding M. J. Frisch, who resigned. Haines was in the wholesale clothing business until eighteen months ago, when he joined the Pathe staff. He worked into an enviable position in the east before taking the Iowa exchange of Universal.

Butterfield's Office Moves.

Ed. Beatty, booking manager for the Butterfield Circuit, has completed arrangements whereby his Detroit office will be at 202 Film Building. Exchange managers and others desiring to see or reach him can do so at the above address on and after April 1.

Mr. Beatty does all of the picture booking for the entire Butterfield Circuit, including Michigan and Lima, Ohio.

A "Moving" Deal Completed.

All arrangements for the three-cornered deal in the Detroit film building have been consummated. On April 1 Goldwyn will start moving into the Republic quarters on the sixth floor. Republic will move down with Select on the fifth floor and Equity will move into the Goldwyn quarters on the sixth floor. It will benefit all of the exchanges involved.

M. A. Berger, manager of the Star and Poplar theatres, has been appointed the representative for the Electric Film Corporation in Baltimore for this territory. He will handle the Christie and Gayety comedies, the Bruce Scenics and the Gaumont weekly.

Ford Doing Select "Stunts."

F. M. Ford, who has been acting as a salesman for Select, handling the Baltimore territory, has succeeded H. E. Greene as publicity and exploitation man, working out of the Washington, D. C., office. Mr. Greene has gone back to the New York office of Select. Mr. Ford is the son of John T. Ford, of Ford's Opera House.

J. I. Buck is now in Baltimore representing this territory for the Reliance Film Company.

Buffalo Bulletins

Refused to Introduce Bill.

ASSEMBLYMAN GEORGE D. BRADY, of Buffalo, announced on Thursday, March 25, that he had declined to introduce a bill suggested by J. H. Michael, chairman of the executive committee of the New York State Exhibitors' League and manager of the Victoria and Regent theatres, to permit motion picture theatres to employ matrons to chaperon children under sixteen who attend motion picture exhibitions.

"My reason for refusing to present the bill," said Mr. Brady, "is that there still are some theatres that do not present clean pictures. Until that class is eliminated there should be no lowering of the existing bars." There is a bill before the legislature now to raise the age at which minors may be admitted to motion picture theatres unaccompanied from sixteen to eighteen years of age.

Hertel Theatre Progressing.

The Hertel Theatre Corporation is pushing work on the new theatre being erected in Hertel avenue near Norwalk. The excellent weather has aided greatly in the speeding up process. The steel work is completed for the building. The stone work on the lobby is expected to be completed this week, and all brick will be laid, weather permitting within the next ten days. The new house will be in the center of a large new section of the city, which is being rapidly populated.

Blue Bird at Elmwood.

"Spring has come. With it the Birds—that is all the birds except the Blue Bird, which long since took up permanent residence at the Elmwood." That is the statement that adorns the front page of the Elmwood Theatre program this week. Manager Bruce Fowler is planning a big Easter show, commencing Sunday, April 5, with Norma Talmadge in "A Daughter of Two Worlds," as the feature. The production will be shown for three days, a departure from the usual policy of two day presentations.

May Acquire Whole Block.

It is rumored in Buffalo that William MacFarlane may acquire an entire block in Canandaigua, N. Y., for the erection of a modern motion picture theatre. Mr. MacFarlane now operates the Liberty Theatre in this town, but according to report cannot handle the crowds which nightly storm the theatre. Canandaigua is a great "movie" town.

Fitzpatrick Comes to Town.

J. L. Fitzpatrick, manager of the Regent Theatre in Geneva, N. Y., was a Buffalo visitor the week of March 22. This was Mr. Fitzpatrick's first journey to Buffalo in many months because of his having been snowed in downstate. Mr. Fitzpatrick invited a bunch of the boys to Geneva for a fishing trip this spring.

Andrews, Salamanca, Sold.

The Andrews Theatre, operated by Max Andrews, in Salamanca, N. Y., has been sold to the Potter Company, which controls the Columbia Theatre in Erie, Pa.

Fredonia Kiddies Happy.

Every kiddie in Fredonia, N. Y., was made happy when Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Landers of that town gave a movie party in the Fredonia Opera House on the afternoon of Saint Patrick's Day in honor of the ninth birthday of their son, Robert. The pupils of the third grade in all the schools of the village and many other guests were present.

The "Movie Party" is an annual event and is always looked forward to with great anticipation. "Bobbie" is the most popular lad in town for weeks previous to the big film feast.

New House in Nunda.

C. C. Saxton will open a new motion picture theatre in Nunda, N. Y., in three weeks. The house will have a seating capacity of about 1,200. Mr. Saxton was in Buffalo recently arranging bookings to begin April 15. Al Becker, of the Becker Theatre Supply Company, will install two new Simplex machines in the house, which will be named the New Academy.

Purchase Marlowe Theatre.

The General Theatres Corporation has purchased the Marlowe Theatre at Virginia and Tenth streets, which is managed by Art Ames, who will continue to operate the house. The General corporation now owns the Allendale and Ellen Terry, and is planning the erection of the new Coliseum in Genesee street soon.

Franklin Visits Albany.

Harold B. Franklin, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, who is a member of the legislative committee of the New York State Exhibitors' League, visited Albany on Wednesday, March 31 to confer with local representatives on bills affecting motion pictures now up in the legislature. From Albany Mr. Franklin went to New York to meet P. B. MacNaughton on his return from Palm Beach. Mr. MacNaughton is president of the Shea Amusement Company.

Kensington Theatre Sold.

The Kensington Theatre, 535 Grider street, has been purchased by J. Cardina, who will operate the house with high-class photoplay programs. Two new machines have been installed by the Becker Theatre Supply Company. Al Becker, manager of the supply company, reports business booming, with new Simplex models ordered for the following places: Shattuck Opera House, Hornell, N. Y., C. C. Smith, manager; Empire, formerly the Garden, Buffalo; Ascension Church North Tonawanda, where the Rev. J. F. Kelly will give motion picture shows; First Methodist Episcopal Church, Potomac and Baynes, where pictures will be shown Tuesday and Sunday evenings; Tubercular Sanitarium, Lockport; J. N. Adam Memorial Hospital at Perrysburg, and the Erie County Poor House, Main street, Buffalo. No wonder Mr. Becker is looking over the new gasoline buggy models.

Detroit Dottings

McBath Joins U. T. E.

GEORGE McBATH, formerly associated with the Tampa Photo and Art Supply Co., of Tampa, Fla., has joined the United Theatre Equipment Corporation in Detroit as salesman, and is now analyzing the Michigan situation and becoming acquainted with exhibitors.

Kingston to Operate Cheboygan Theatre.

The Fitzpatrick & McElroy Co., of Chicago, which, with Frank L. Kingston, of Alpena, last Fall purchased a site in Cheboygan and erected a 900 seat house, has sold out its interest in this particular theatre to Mr. Kingston. He expects to open the new house some time this month. Roland B. Riggs will be the manager.

An Angell in Town.

Harry Angell, of the Crosswell Theatre, Adrian, was in Detroit last week. Harry reports that business is very good, and that his competitors there "were a dandy bunch of fellows."

Baltimore Brieflets

Bill to Increase Taxes.

A BILL was introduced in the Senate at Annapolis, Md., on March 24, by Senator David G. McIntosh, Jr., of Baltimore County, by which the present tax on moving picture theatres charging ten cents admission will be increased one and one-half times and those theatres charging five cents the license tax will be doubled.

Will Enlarge Horn Theatre.

An ordinance granting permission to the Horn Amusement Company, of which Frank A. Hornig is manager, to enlarge the Horn Theatre, was introduced in the First Branch of the City Council of Baltimore City by Adam Hechmer, representative of the Twentieth Ward, on March 22. The Horn Theatre, 2018-20 West Pratt street, is to be enlarged by rebuilding this playhouse to take in the property at 2016 West Pratt street.

Take "Civilian Clothes" at Camp Meade.

Thomas Meighan, Martha Mansfield, and Director Hugh Ford, and several other members of Famous Players-Lasky came to Baltimore on March 23. The purpose of their visit was to obtain battle scenes for the picture version of "Civilian Clothes," in which Mr. Meighan and Miss Mansfield are being starred. Camp Meade was selected as the location on which the scenes of battle were to be staged. Shortly after they arrived on Tuesday the company went immediately to Camp Meade, where several scenes were shot in the afternoon, and on Wednesday morning they finished up their work and left again for New York City.

Passion Play Pictures at Y. M. C. A.

The Oberammergau Passion Play in motion pictures were shown free of charge in the lobby of the Central Building of the Y. M. C. A. in Baltimore on Good Friday and Saturday evenings. It was thought proper to use these pictures as an impressive finish for the Holy Week exercises, which took place at that building during Holy Week.

Motion Pictures Entertain Soldiers.

A smoker and entertainment, of which motion pictures were a feature, was given to the Detachment Service Club at Fort McHenry on Wednesday night, March 24, by Col. C. J. Manly, commanding officer at the fort. Several reels of moving pictures which were donated by the American Red Cross for the occasion were shown, and three boxing matches were also on the program.

Another New Theatre Planned.

Plans are now under way for a new moving picture theatre with a seating capacity of 2,000, which will be built at 1532 West Baltimore street by Henry Smith & Sons.

To Remodel Albaugh's.

Albaugh's Lyceum Theatre, North Charles street near Preston, is to be remodeled and refurbished by the James L. Kernan Company, of which Frederick C. Schanberger is manager. This company now operates the Maryland Theatre in Baltimore, and recently took over Albaugh's. High class road attractions will probably be run in this playhouse.

Benefit for Near East at Garden.

Two benefit performances for the Near East Relief Campaign drive were given at the Garden on Sunday afternoon and evening, March 28, at which contributions amounting to $1,000 were taken in. The theatre was loaned for both occasions by Louis A. DeHoff.

San Francisco Sayings

Judge Praises Picture.

JUDGE THOMAS F. GRAHAM, of the Superior Court, known as the "Great Reconciler" through his successful efforts in patching up the domestic difficulties of many couples who apply to him for divorce, viewed "Why Change Your Wife?" at the Imperial Theatre and then wrote a strong letter to the management suggesting that every married man and woman should see it. This testimonial was used in advertising the feature and the production is having a big run.

Prizma Officials Visits Coast.

Carroll H. Dunning, vice-president of Prizma, was a recent visitor here and conferred with George Stone, producer of short subjects before going to Los Angeles.

New Theatre for Visalia.

D. S. Markowitz, general manager, and A. N. Jackson, secretary and treasurer of the Crescent Theatre, San Francisco, recently visited Visalia and purchased a site for a moving picture house. The location is on South Locust street, and the theatre that is planned will have a seating capacity of 1,700.

News in Brief.

L. E. Kaliski has purchased the Strand Theatre on Park street, Alameda, Cal., and will operate it in conjunction with the Alameda Theatre.

Charles E. Nofrey has purchased property at Lakeport, Cal., and plans to erect a modern theatre.

The Realart Theatre has been opened at Dinuba, Cal., by Thomas Sullivan.

Plenty of Theatres.

A theatre has been opened at Selma, Cal., by A. B. Bynon, the opening attraction being the "Great Air Robbery."

C. F. Unger has leased property at Selma, Cal., for the erection of an air dome.

The Red River Lumber Company, which conducts a theatre at Westwood, Cal., plans to conduct one also at Susanville.

The Turner & Dahnken Circuit has awarded a contract for the erection of a theatre at Richmond, Cal.

Rialto Has New House Manager.

Edward A. Smith, formerly with the Lynch Enterprises in the South, has been made house manager of the Rialto Theatre. This theatre has been featuring Goldwyn productions for several weeks and has been doing a very gratifying business.

Cleveland Cullings

Too Much Sinner; Not Enough Search.

It took a bit of fast and hard work on the part of the First National Exchange in Cleveland to get Constance Talmadge's latest picture, "In Search of a Sinner" before the public.

The production was turned down by the Ohio Board of Censors because they thought it too "snappy." They could not see it in the light that the heroine really wanted, not a real sinner, but a "live" husband.

So Robert McLaughlin, Cleveland playwright, and Sam Bradley, a director for the Argus Enterprises, got busy. McLaughlin turned out a new foreword and some new titles, and Bradley made a few cuts.

Then it was again offered to the board, and it was passed. The following week, "In Search of a Sinner" was revealed to the public at the Stillman, Cleveland, and it made a big hit and drew large crowds.

The Film Building at Last.

The much discussed film building for Cleveland at last is becoming a reality.

Contracts were let to the William Dunbar Construction Company and this concern announces the structure will be ready for occupancy October 1.

Built in New Location.

The building is to be erected at East Twenty-first street and Payne avenue, which is a bit up-town and a half-mile away from the present film district. But it is nevertheless a good location, being within a block of Euclid avenue, and within a few blocks from the new theatre center at Euclid avenue and East Fourteenth street.

Plans call for a building 135 feet by 143 feet, and will contain approximately 80,000 feet of floor space. Practically every film company in the city will be housed there.

This Way for the Medals.

Two hundred patrons of the Princess Theatre, Cleveland, filed out of the exits March 26, without the slightest panic, when a fire broke out.

But this was due in a great measure to the courage of Miss Dorothy Byrne, organist, who, when fire which started in the basement broke through, opened all the loud stops on the organ and played a lively jazz tune.

Operator Is a Hero.

W. H. Grubb, the operator, continued to run the picture until the theatre was empty and the girl stayed at her job until the firemen came and took her out. The damage is estimated at several hundred dollars, but the house was opened again in two days' time.

Corlett Doing Well.

The new Corlett Theatre, in a neighborhood district of Cleveland, is the first of several of this type of theatres to open during 1920.

It is a very beautiful house, seating 1,000 and located in the southeast section of town, in a newly built up neighborhood.

The house is running high class pictures and drawing big crowds.

Got a Jinx Cure?

For the first time since it was opened several years ago, the Ray Theatre, in the downtown section of Cleveland has again closed its doors. The jinx seems to be on this house. It is located only a few doors from the Hotel Winton, but there does not seem to be enough traffic to give it a big day's business, and there is nothing to draw from for evening crowds.

The last time it was opened was in March, and thinking to throw off the jinx, the new proprietors named it the Winton Theatre. But even this didn't help any, for inside of ten days, the doors were again closed.

Des Moines Doings

A. H. Blank in Hotel Business.

A. H. BLANK, Des Moines movie magnate, has purchased the Oaks Hotel, at Clear Lake, an Iowa summer resort 100 miles north of Des Moines. Blank will rebuild the structure and convert it into one of the finest resort hotels in the West. The hotel is located on the north shore of the lake.

Blank owns a picture house at Mason City, the city nearest the lake.

Perry Shut on Sunday.

Perry, Iowa, population 5,000, is thoroughly aroused over the action of the city council, which this week passed an ordinance prohibiting Sunday movies, and setting the fine for violation at $100 and jail for thirty days. The council action was taken unanimously and followed a "revival" at one of the churches of the city, at which it was decided to start a crusade against "vice" in the town. Rev. A. N. Bishop led the fight. Dance halls and pool halls are also closed on Sunday under the ordinance.

Movie men, led by Harry Wivfat and J. C. Collins, secured 1,500 signers to a petition protesting the council action. The city has paid no attention to the petition. The city will hire an inspector to keep an eye on the theatres and pool halls. Perry is 20 miles from Des Moines.

Garver and Gray Switch.

Ross Garver, former manager of the St. Louis Rialto, succeeds William Gray as manager of the Des Moines Orpheum, Orpheum Circuit vaudeville. Gray goes to Chicago, where he will be connected with one of the Orpheum houses.

"Confession" in Coliseum.

Hal Reid's "The Confession" was shown in the Coliseum this week. The Coliseum is the city's convention hall, and heats 10,000, and has not been used for pictures before. A large symphony orchestra helped to put the attraction across in good style.

Canadian Chips

"Using the Bean."

MANAGER CLARENCE ROBSON, of the Regent Theatre, Toronto, Ontario, recently made a special "play" with a current feature by reason of the fact that the story of the production was Canadian, the writer was Canadian and the star was also a native of Canada, having been educated in Upper Canada College, Toronto. The feature was "The Right of Way," the star was Bert Lytell and the author was Sir Gilbert Parker. Manager Robson made special references to this situation in all advertising and publicity in connection with the presentation.

Goulet Heads Musical Department.

Prof. J. J. Goulet, one of the outstanding musicians of Montreal, now has charge of the musical department of the Allen Theatre of Westmount, a suburb of Montreal. Goulet was in charge of the large Imperial Theatre orchestra for several years and for a lengthy period a specialty was made of a four o'clock musicale by the orchestra every Saturday afternoon.

Specialty Film Meeting.

The Windsor Hotel, Montreal, Quebec, was the scene recently of a pleasant gathering of moving picture officials, press representatives and others as the guests of L. E. Ouimet, president and general manager of the Specialty Film Import, Limited, Canadian distributor of Pathe and British releases. Further particulars regarding the establishment of the Anglo-Canadian Picture Plays, Limited, of Montreal and London, were presented by Capt. J. B. MacKay, managing director of the Anglo-Canadian company. Steps had been taken, he declared, to link up the whole Empire by means of moving pictures, arrangements having been made to secure pictures that had been made in South Africa, Australia and other colonies. Mr. Ouimet also gave interesting details regarding the arrangements for the release of the numerous productions of many British companies through his company.

Show Wales' Trip Complete.

The moving picture record of the tour across Canada and into the United States by H. R. H., the Prince of Wales, is being presented at the Strand Theatre, Toronto, a leading downtown house. These views, which were taken under the direction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, are presented in a series with a fresh "chapter" each week. The "serial" comprises a review of the whole trip taken by His Royal Highness, from the time that he left the Royal train at Plymouth to board the H. M. S. "Renown" until he returns to England.

Bickell May Confer with Zukor.

It is intimated at Toronto, Ontario, that J. P. Bickell, the local financier who is interested in the Famous Players' Canadian Corporation, Regal Films, Limited, and various Canadian moving picture theatres, may proceed to London, England, shortly to take part in the conferences between Adolph Zukor, of New York, Lord Beaverbrook and Sir William Jury which may lead, it is stated, to an important international arrangement with regard to the release and presentation of pictures.

Small Houses in Winnipeg to Go.

The prediction is made at Winnipeg, Manitoba, that "half a dozen" small moving picture theatres of that city will disappear during the coming summer. The reasons advanced for the closing of these houses is that the sites on the main thoroughfares on which they are located have become too valuable for their continued occupation by small theatres, the rents from which are not considerable, and also that the erection of large moving picture palaces in the Manitoba capital is deflecting patronage from the small houses. Owners of the small theatres frankly declare, it is reported, that the conversion of the structures into stores or office buildings would bring them larger revenues.

Moving Picture World is "The Trade Paper of Features"

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

How Projectionists May Win Cash Prizes Totalling Five Hundred Dollars

RECENTLY the editor of this department received the following letter from John Auerbach, New York City, who is known to our readers through his many excellent contributions to the projection department.

My Dear Mr. Richardson—Provided the matter meets with your approval, I would like, through the medium of the Projection Department of the Moving Picture World, to offer seventy-five dollars in cash, to be divided into a first and second prize for the best and next best answers to two questions I shall name. It is my intention that you shall be the sole judge of the competition and that the two winning answers shall be published in the projection department. Any suggestion received in course of the competition which you think of value to be forwarded to all the various manufacturers interested. The questions, which you are at liberty to modify or change, are as follows:

From the various optical, electrical and mechanical standpoints, what improvements do you consider as most essential for the betterment of motion picture projection? Explain, in detail, exactly what benefit would result from the addition of the idea you present.

What improvement in projection apparatus and projection methods do you believe will be accomplished during the next five years?

I think it would be advisable to stipulate that all replies must be received on or before a given date, allowing, of course, ample time for the competitors to get their replies into shape, since the principles involved are considerable.

This struck us as a matter of such possible importance that, with Mr. Auerbach's consent, we laid the matter before the various manufacturers of professional projectors, suggesting that they duplicate the Auerbach cash offer.

The result was that the Powers, Simplex, Baird, Motiograph and Master Projector manufacturers promptly agreed. This made a total of four hundred and fifty dollars and the Moving Picture World added the fifty necessary to make half a thousand.

We could not, however, agree with Mr. Auerbach's suggestion that we be the sole judge.

We therefore suggest the following committee of award: Mr. Auerbach, the president of the American Projection Society, or some man appointed by him, and the editor of this department.

We will set the time at which all answers must be in our hands in order to receive consideration as being noon June 1, which will allow ample time for our English, Australian and New Zealand projectionist readers to enter the competition if they so desire.

The prizes will be $350 for first prize, $100 for second prize and $50 for third prize.

What Will Be Considered.

First and second prizes will be awarded by the committee in accordance with its own judgment, from which there can be no appeal. Prizes may be awarded f. r. (A) a new idea which the committee believes from the description to be practical, or which the proposer proves to be practical and which the committee believes to be of such importance that an award is justified. (B) For an invention which makes practical the use of an old idea which has value, but has heretofore proven impractical, and which the committee deems of sufficient importance to justify an award.

Inventions which have already been exploited will not be considered at all, unless they bring out some new angle to the matter of sufficient importance and value to justify a claim of merit.

All communications relative to the competition and all replies thereto must be addressed to the Projection Department of the Moving Picture World, 516 Fifth avenue, New York City. The competition is open to all.

Wanted—Another Lecture "Tower"

We are just in receipt of the following, which is self explanatory:

It is at the request of Local Union 401, of which I am secretary, that I write. A few years ago Mr. Richardson made a tour of the country in the interest of better projection. Is it within the range of possibility to, in the near future, make another such tour?

Local Union 401 (Centralia and Cothalis, Washington) will be glad to receive Mr. Richardson should he visit us, or to send representatives to such other west coast city as he might see fit to visit.

With regards to what we are at present doing for the cause of the betterment of our profession, I might say that at each regular meeting we examine one member of the local under the head of Good of the Order. That is to say, we have one of our members take the chair and then the rest of us see what we can do towards "sticking" him, and in case any member succeeds in that laudable endeavor, he is himself obliged to answer his own question, which latter heads off the asking of any foolish, unanswerable questions. The penalty for asking a question one cannot himself answer is a fifty-cent fine. In this work the question booklets have their place.

Considering a Library.

We are considering the establishment of a library, in order that we may keep as nearly as possible abreast with the times. Would like your opinion as to the following plan, viz.: That one copy of each book for every four members be obtained. That the library shall contain all books containing sufficient material of value to justify their purchase. That at each meeting all books shall be returned, and that there be no renewals, so that other members may have a chance.

Would you be good enough to give us a list of books. Think all our members have a copy of the handbook—last edition—and most of them are subscribers to the World, but nevertheless both will have a place in our library, and I assure you they will collect no dust.

We wish all possible success for both yourself and the department, and hope soon it, the department, will have more pages.

I Thank You.

First, I want to most sincerely thank my friends of Local 401 for the friendliness and the appreciation the letter shows. For many years I have worked very hard for the advancement of what I conceive to be the best interest of the profession of projection, and the men engaged therein. I have stood the brunt of many a good, stiff battle. I have had both ridicule and abuse hurled at me, and have stood by my guns and did the best I knew how. It is pleasant to be told that all this hard work is appreciated—very pleasant, indeed, and I again thank you.

And now as to the matters contained in your letter. As to another long trip, well I don't know. Such trips are very wearing, and I am getting no younger—fifty-three the twenty-fifth day of last October. I am not able to stand such strenuous knocking around as I could a few years ago. However, always provided there be sufficient demand, it might be possible to plan a trip which would take me west to the coast via Omaha, Denver, Pueblo, Salt Lake City, down to San Diego, north along the coast to Vancouver and east via the Canadian Pacific.

It Might Be Possible.

I say it MIGHT be possible, provided there be sufficient demand from locals along the route. Should the trip be made my subject would be an illustrated lecture on the optics of the projector. If locals along the route indicated really want this, let them make the fact known. I do NOT promise. Traveling is expensive these days, besides the hard work involved. It will depend largely upon how many locals want it. I might, however, add that the lecture which I have gotten together on this subject is intensely interesting and instructive.

As to the library and study plan, why both are excellent. The books I would recommend would be the handbook, the Hawkins Electrical Guides, Optic Projection ($3.00), The Electric Motor, by Burns ($2.50, I think), Film Tinting and Toning (one copy only—$2.50, from the Eastman Company Rochester N. Y.). The "Electric Motor" is published by the Joseph G. Branch Pub. Co. Chicago.

These are really all the books I have seen which I could heartily commend to projectionists, though there are others you might add if you wish.

As to study, I am just starting the publication of a series of questions in projection optics, indicating, so far as possible, where the answers may be found in the text of the handbook. Your plan of study by examining one of your own members has in itself an incentive to study. The men know they may be called upon to take their grilling at any time, and naturally do not want to fall down. We commend the plan to other locals.

The Two Thousand Dollar Projector

E. Earl Neff, Oconomowoc, Wisconsin, who gave up projection temporarily because of low wages and is now running a labeling machine, projecting Carnation milk labels on cans, says:

Expect to go back to sure enough projection some day, and am keeping my hand in a bit, for the darned labels tear just like film. I read the projection department regularly, so as to keep up to date.

By the way, what became of that two thousand dollar Robin projector you described a long time ago? Hope this finds you in the best of health.

The Robin projector failed to reach the marketing stage. The only one ever completed now stands on the floor of the Cinema Center, New York City, where it is viewed by many as a bit of a curio.

Hallber's New Arc Controller

J. H. Hallberg, New York City, is perfecting a new arc controller. We have not examined it in detail as yet, but it is very compact, apparently quite simple and easily handled. We will advise you as to its details in due time.

Great Activity

As the time approaches for the spring meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers (May 10, 11 and 12) the papers committee, L. C. Porter, chairman, is displaying remarkable activity. It is a poor day which does not bring from him an announcement of progress.

We have before us now the synopsis of several papers. There is one by O. K. Dwrey, member American Society Heating and Ventilating Engineers. This paper will deal with the effects of humidity and temperature and the importance of their proper control. It will deal with methods for introduction of air supply, apparatus necessary, and cost of its installation, benefits derived from mechanical ventilation and cooling effects obtained without refrigeration.

Of Great Value.

This paper, it seems to us, should be of very great value, not only to the members privileged to hear it read and discussed, but to the industry as a whole.

Another paper which not only deals with a subject of absorbing interest, but will be read by a man who has made a deep study of his subject, with unusual facilities for forming intelligent judgment, is titled "Educational Possibilities in Moving Pictures," by B. E. Norrish, Department of Trade and Commerce, Exhibit and Publicity Bureau, Ottawa, Canada.

The paper will deal with the universal appeal of the moving picture, the fact that the moving picture is the easiest, simplest and most effective way of imparting knowledge and information in interesting, and at the same time entertaining form. It will be shown that the moving picture speaks the only really universal language and that by a proper selection of subjects, and their association with previous sensations, practically any desired thing may be brought to mind.

Mental Picture Necessary.

It is demonstrated that seven-eighths of all knowledge is acquired and understood only after there has been a mental picture of it formed, and that the moving picture provides a very quick, easily utilized method for doing this.

It is shown that by means of the moving picture healthy patriotism may be developed, love of country intensified, proper conceptions of each part of the country obtained, and best of all, a proper understanding of the relation of each individual part of the country to the whole, and of nation to nation. This is but a few of the many excellent things in the paper.

Another paper, in which the editor is much interested, is entitled "Test of Screen Illumination from Motion Picture Projectors."

Unfortunately we have not the name of the author, but the paper deals with light, intensities reaching the screen by means of measurements taken at sixteen points thereon. The measurements thus taken are checked very thoroughly, and should give us valuable data.

C. Francis Jenkins will have a paper on "Continuous Motion Picture Machines," following which subject will be a review of the handicaps of the intermittent projector.

Mr. Jenkins promises to have a continuous projector model with him, for examination by the members of the Society. This projector is one in the development of which the officials of the Bureau of Standards and experts from the Navy have assisted. It should prove interesting. In fact the program mapped out for the spring

QUESTION BOOKLETS.

We have two paper covered booklets containing 150 questions designed as a guide to study. They indicate what the projectionist should know.

Either booklet, postpaid, twenty-five cents; both, forty cents. United States stamps accepted; cannot use Canadian stamps.

THE LENS CHARTS.

Are You Working by "Guess," or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens charts (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) are in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

Don't "guess." Do your work RIGHT. Price, fifty cents, stamps.

meeting looks like the best the Society has ever pulled off, which is saying quite considerable.

Wants to Join

Tom P. Swagerty, Clayton, New Mexico, asks for the address of the union. Says he would like to join "their union" and go to their school, if they have one.

Clayton is in Union County, in the northeast corner of New Mexico. It seems to be within the jurisdiction of Amarillo, Texas, Local Union No. 469; S. Townes, Mission Theatre, Amarillo, secretary. Local 469 is a "mixed" local, made up of stage hands and projectionists—or at least we suppose it has projectionist members. In all human probability it has no "school" for its members.

But, friend Swagerty, I hardly think you quite understand the union matter. If I am in error pardon me, for your own language has misled. You speak of it as "their union." Nothing of the sort. A union primarily is a banding together of men for mutual protection and advancement.

It of right is jointly the creation and property of all men engaged in the line of work it covers. It even is of direct benefit to those who remain outside, hence they themselves have a direct interest in it; also for the same reason they owe it the support of their membership—provided they are allowed to join, which is not always the case, even with men who have, insofar as moral character and ability be concerned, every right to demand admission.

One Phase of Union.

That is one phase of unions with which we have never agreed. We hold that every man who is able to prove his character and ability has the right to membership, so long as unions propose to control the labor situation (jobs) in the calling covered by the organization. But on the other hand there are many and weighty reasons why it would be unwise for unions to admit members when such admission will oversaturate the labor market in their particular line. So after all it is perhaps one of those situations where the individual must suffer for the good of the many.

I explain this because, while the Amarillo union may be glad to accept you into membership, on the other hand they may refuse to admit you, even though you may prove your ability as a projectionist, and your character as a man.

Projectors Should Be Kept in Repair

We have dealt with this subject, in the way we now propose to deal with it, in times gone by, but some things bear, and in fact demand more or less frequent repetition.

We think it will be admitted, even by the very most ingrowing pinchpenny theatre manager, that a projection machine in a good state of repair will give a more satisfactory screen results than one which is not; also that the more perfect the screen result the better will be the patronage of the theatre—the more seats will be sold.

We also think it will be conceded that two projectors may be kept in practically perfect mechanical condition, provided they be kept in that sort of condition all the time, for an average expenditure of one hundred and fifty dollars per annum. Most projectionists would declare this altogether too high, but when we say "perfect mechanical condition," we mean just that. We do NOT mean that an intermittent sprocket is to be run until its teeth look like fish hooks, or gears until they wobble like a man who has been too long and intimately friendly with John Barleycorn.

How much per day is one hundred and fifty dollars a year? $150 is 15,000 cents and 15,000 divided by 365 is 41 7/73 cents, say 42 cents. Well, let us be still more liberal and allow fifty cents per day for keeping both projectors in strictly A1 repair.

Suppose—

Suppose you are running a ten-cent theatre, seating five hundred, and that you give four shows per day. You then have four times five hundred, or 2,000 seats to sell each day. Don't you really, away down in your heart, believe that projectors in first class repair will give you enough better screen results to sell five more of those 2,000 seats than would be sold by the screen results produced by a couple of projectors in poor repair?

Be honest with yourself, friends exhibitors and manager. Remember that theatre seats are saleable in proportion to the excellence of the show the buyers see in your theatre, and that a projector in poor repair cannot and will not put on as steady and excellent a picture as will one in first class repair. That is just plain horse sense. You cannot dispute it. Why pay large sums for film service and then handicap its showing by reniging on an average expenditure of less than fifty cents per day? Rather poor business policy, is it not?

As to Underwriters Rules

M. C. Mackman, New York City, arises to ask:

Will you be good enough to let me know where I can secure information as to Underwriter's rules governing projection installations in the State of New York, and what constitutes violations thereof. I have a copy of your very excellent handbook, but of course it cannot be excepted to cover such things as this.

We would suggest that you call up the Board of National Fire Underwriters, 76 William street, and ascertain where you can secure a copy of the National Electrical Code, which, unless we are in error, contains all Underwriters' rules pertaining to projection installations. Then if you call at the Board of Motion Picture Projectionist ("Operators" they still call them) Examiners, Municipal Building, New York City, and obtain an application blank, you will find on its back the various rules established by the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity, covering Greater New York. Between the two you will, we think, have all the information you desire.

Double Shutter and Flicker

Recently S. Glauber, Brooklyn, N. Y., sent in a working model of what he proposed to call the "Glauber Shutter," asking our opinion. We replied by telling him that the plan (two shutters revolving in different directions so as to cut the ray from either side, closing in its center) had been used by both the Kinedrome and Motiograph, and had been abandoned years ago.

He now says, "I still cannot believe such a shutter would not give very much less flicker; also why was the scheme abandoned. I would also like to thank you for the great help the handbook has been to me."

The plan was abandoned several years ago. Just why I do not know, but presume it was found the gain did not justify the added complications and cost in construction.

It had absolutely nothing whatever to do with flicker, except that it did allow of a possible slightly better proportioning of the shutter by reason of possible slight reduction in master blade width. The gain in this respect will, however, I think, seldom exceed four or five degrees in theory. In practice it probably would be less, because of the fact that since the shutter closes and opens in the exact center of the beam, where it is the most powerful, considerable lap must be allowed, since ever so slight an opening before intermittent movement has stopped or failure to fully cover before it starts will cause travel ghost.

Should Get Another Lens

Melvin A. Davis, Projectionist, McLean, Texas, has the following to say:

Have the Handbook and lens charts. Think them splendid. You are benefiting projection immensely through the medium of the handbook and the projection department.

I am using 35 amperes D. C. through rheostat, projecting a twelve-foot picture at 88 feet through a 1.5 inch diameter objective at 4.5 inch working distance. This lens lacks half an inch of having sufficient diameter, and the manager cannot see his way clear to buy a new one of larger diameter.

Would like to know how I can adjust my optical systems so that there will be a minimum of loss of light. I am sure there will be considerable loss, but surely I can get a more brilliant picture than I now have.

Am using two 6.5 condensers spaced as per chart and 19.75 inches from apex of front condenser to aperture, as per lens chart. Should have an objective of two-inch diameter with this line-up. Think with the information you can give I will be able to get a more brilliant picture with present lens.

Let Us See.

It is nice to enjoy your confidence, but—well, let us see what can be done. Nothing, I am afraid insofar as concerns your lens system. Even with meniscus bi-convex condenser that lens is too small.

Your manager is in error. With 35 amperes you will need every bit of available illumination. When he pays his electric bill he really is paying for light, and every bit of light wasted is just that much electric current thrown away. Why buy light and then waste it, for that is precisely what he is doing, and if he is paying for current on meter we venture the assertion that in a year that objective will waste very much more than the price of a new one.

But let us examine into other possibilities. Maybe your crater is at an inefficient angle. Exactly opposite the arc punch a hole through the metal of the offside lamp-house door with a small shingle nail.

Hold a heavy block of wood on the other side of the metal while you do the punching. If you have a very small drill, drill the hole, but it must not be more than one thirty-second of an inch in diameter.

Through this hole an image of the crater will be projected to the wall of the projection room, or to the lamp-house door of the other projector. A paper screen on the projection room wall or a bit of asbestos on the lamp-house door will help, as also will a spectacle lens or bit of broken condenser placed over the hole. On this screen draw a line horizontal with the optical system of the projector, and another at right angles to it. Now from some draughtsman borrow a "protractor" and, remembering that your arc image will be upside down, draw a line exactly where the edge of the crater image comes, and at an angle fifty-five degrees from the second line—the one at right angles to the horizontal.

The Idea Is—

I am not at all certain you will understand this, but the idea is to lay out a line so that when the edge of the crater image is kept to it, the actual crater will be at an angle of fifty-five degrees with the face of the condenser, that being the most efficient angle at which the crater can work. I would draw it out for you, but I have no arc here to observe and, since the whole thing is reversed, I might get it wrong. Will some of you chaps who have an arc image before you be good enough to lay the thing out on paper for publication.

Another thing, be sure your shutter master blade is as narrow as it can be without travel ghost. To do this remove the metal blade from its hub and cut an exact pattern of it from thin, tough cardboard, such as business cards are printed on. Install this (it will run for weeks, or even months) and then trim down very slowly on the master blade, until travel ghost appears slightly both ways.

You may then cut out another paper pattern, leaving the master blade just a bit wider, or you can trim down the metal shutter. But don't do the latter until you are very certain you are right.

If you find you can take considerable off the master blade it is quite possible you may trim the flicker blades also, but do all your experimenting with paper blades.

Before starting to trim set the shutter as near the aerial image as you can get it. You have about a seven-inch E F objective and a 19.75 inch distance condenser to aperture, and the shutter should be about 15 inches from the aperture, but you cannot, of course, get it there, so you must just do the best you can.

Projection by Reflection

Experiments are now being conducted on a large scale, by at least two persons, looking to the determination of the practicability of solving the admittedly serious matter of picture distortion by means of the use of mirrors.

We know of four ways in which this might be done, three of which involve the use of double reflection. One is to place the projection room up-high and way back, as it is now in all too many cases, suspend a mirror from the ceiling just over the front balcony line, to receive the ray from the lens and reflect it to another mirror, lower down, carried by the balcony front and almost if not directly central with the center of the screen. This would involve no change from present projection room location, but would require very large mirrors; also the upper one would be more or less conspicuous, hence objectionable. It is doubtful if optically perfect mirrors of the size required for this plan could be had, and if they could, certainly they should be prohibitive in price.

Another Scheme.

Another scheme would be to suspend the projection room from the ceiling, or even place it above the ceiling, just back of the line of the balcony, placing the first, or upper mirror immediately in front of the lens. This would have the effect of greatly reducing the size of the mirrors. A third plan would be to place the projection room at the side of the front of the balcony, which would require but one mirror, but, due to curved balcony front, is probably impractical.

The fourth scheme is to place the projection room in the basement, reflecting the ray upward, through an opening in the floor, to a second mirror attached to the balcony front.

That the possibilities of one of these plans is being taken seriously by some big people of the industry is certain, but we doubt the practicability of any or all of them, not because the thing is impossible, for it probably is not, but because it will, at best, only remove part of the objection to present projection location, and will on the whole, be unsatisfactory, costly and in general no better than present methods.

What the Objections Are.

The first objection has to do with the probable impossibility of securing optically perfect mirrors at a cost not prohibitive. Second, none of the changes would place the projection room where the projectionist would have a better view of his screen than he now has, unless it be found practical to install a second series of mirrors to reflect the screen back to the basement projection room, and have the men work from the image, which we very much doubt as being a practical thing to do if high class results are to be had.

But, in any event, the experiments are interesting. The light loss through even a double reflection would be slight, provided a silver surface mirror be used, so that the light would not enter the glass at all.

The plan would, of course, eliminate the present distortion of the picture due to top of screen being nearer the lens than the bottom, but unless the mirrors be optically perfect an equally bad or even very much worse distortion might be set up.

Robertson-Cole to Build Ten-Story Home for Its Executive Offices and Exchange

TO house adequately its rapidly increasing volume of business and to throw open to the world a New York headquarters for visiting motion picture exhibitors, the Robertson-Cole Company now makes the announcement that it will erect at once its own home. Work is to start during April on a ten-story entirely fireproof building which will be situated at 723 Seventh avenue.

The company has in mind besides a building to care for its swiftly-growing business, which includes distribution to the domestic and foreign fields, a place where all exhibitors of the world can gather when in New York—whether Robertson-Cole clients or not—and avail themselves of a quiet nook in the city's whirl where stenographic service, a reference library and other conveniences will be given them absolutely free.

The new building, which will be erected of the best material available, is to be by, of and for Robertson-Cole. The company has purchased the site. It is now encumbered with an old five-story building which is to be razed at once. Upon this site Robertson-Cole will build the new structure which will belong to it exclusively. The first two floors will be of Bedford stone. Above this it will be face brick up to the last two stories, which will be of ornamented glazed tile.

The building will front on Seventh avenue and will be in the shape of an "L," turning around into Forty-eighth street where it will also have frontage. It will be equipped with a full set of passenger elevators and in addition to this will have one freight elevator.

On the second floor of the building will be situated the Robertson-Cole New York City exchange, which will cover the Metropolitan and surrounding territory. The main Robertson-Cole offices will be on the four upper floors. Here will be situated the Robertson-Cole executive offices and offices of the foreign department, and the home office of the distributing corporation.

Two Theatres on Roof.

There will be two theatres on the roof. These will be utilized for the showing of film to press representatives, foreign buyers, and others. The best possible equipment will be installed in these theatres. Two operators will constantly be on duty. The theatres will also be equipped with a big organ.

The building will be heated by its own plant and there will be a sprinkler system. On the upper floors there will be situated the vaults, cutting rooms, and inspection rooms for the keeping and alteration of film. There will also be a rest room for the women employees of the company on this floor.

In the basement of the building will be several vaults, in which will be kept the film which is on hand in the New York Robertson-Cole exchange and that which is being examined and used by the distributing corporation and the Robertson-Cole Company.

One of the distinctive features of the new building is to be the ample provision which will be made for the admission of light. On all sides, wherever possible, there will be large windows.

The first of May should see work on this building well under way and according to present plans the company will be able to move into the new structure about October 1.

Franchise Holder in New York.

J. H. Cooper, franchise holder in Associated Exhibitors, Inc., for the Oklahoma

Greene Explains "Blue Book" to Associated Advertisers

THAT he might be afforded further opportunity to meet members of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, whom he addressed some weeks ago on the matter of a proposed compilation of a "Who's Who in Motion Pictures" for the United States, and that he might reply to any questions or criticisms on the part of the advertisers, B. M. Greene, managing editor of International Press, Ltd., of Toronto, was given the privilege of the floor at the last luncheon meeting of the advertisers at the Cafe Boulevard.

Mr. Greene regretted any misconception of the "Blue Book" proposition that might have arisen through possible faulty presentation of the plan on the part of subordinate representatives sent out on the project. Replying to questions put by Jerome Beatty, of Famous Players-Lasky; Arthur James, of Fox; Morris Riskind, and others, Mr. Greene explained that a "Blue Book" of itself could not be put out unless it were supported financially by men as of some allied proposition, such as the press service he represented.

Merit to Govern.

Mr. Greene expatiated upon the price and value of such service and replied to criticism regarding what seemed to be conflict between the original statement that inclusion of photographs in the "Blue Book" would be absolutely on merit alone and free from all payment, and a subsequent impression that payment for such illustrations was being proposed.

D. W. Griffith Is Injured Warning Workman of Peril

AS a result of rather painful injuries received while taking scenes on the Connecticut River for his forthcoming production of "Way Down East," D. W. Griffith is, under the care of Dr. Bernard Livingston at his apartments in the Hotel Claridge, New York.

While setting off a charge of dynamite near White River Junction, Vermont, one of Mr. Griffith's workmen came perilously near losing his life in the breaking of a tremendous ice jam. Mr. Griffith, in attempting to warn the man of his danger, slipped and fell into the icy water, striking the left side of his face just below the eye and receiving a number of lacerations of the right leg.

Mr. Griffith paid little attention to the injury at the time and continued after a brief rest with the work in hand. On his return to New York the facial bruise began to bother him and his physician was summoned.

It will be several days before he will be able to be up and doing.

"Inferior Sex" Opens Big.

Mildred Harris Chaplin's initial Mayer-made First National production, "The Inferior Sex," opened to absolute capacity business at the Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles, recently. The audience showed its appreciation by frequent applause and the general consensus of opinion at the close was that it absolutely established Mrs. Chaplin in the front rank of motion picture stars.

Midnight Show Necessary to Care for Business on "The Forbidden Woman"

IN the face of the storm raging all day in Chicago, Sunday, March 28, Clara Kimball Young in "The Forbidden Woman" opened to packed houses at the Playhouse Theatre, and broke all records of the house in point of box office receipts and paid admissions.

Three o'clock Sunday afternoon marked the abatement of the worst storm the city of Chicago has experienced in years. Four o'clock throngs of people massed the lobby bidding fair to crush in the doors on the largest audience the Playhouse ever held. The crowds stood four abreast one half block away from the theatre.

For the first time in the history of the Playhouse, Manager George Smith inaugurated a policy entirely new to the usual running of the theatre by giving a midnight showing of the picture. The theatre was packed.

This is the first official report on the opening of "The Forbidden Woman" at the Playhouse, received at the Equity offices from Manager George Smith. "The Forbidden Woman" is booked at the Playhouse for a minimum of three weeks, and the picture has received initial exploitation at the hands of Harry L. Reichenbach, Equity's vice president, who is in Chicago now.

Latest Carewe Picture, "Rio Grande," from Thomas Play Listed by Pathe for April 25

APRIL 25 has been announced as the release date of the Pathe Special Feature, "Rio Grande," an Edwin Carewe production of the stage play by Augustus Thomas. The greatest interest has been evinced by exhibitors in the production since publication of the fact that it had been completed and was a truly representative picture of conditions on the Mexican border. It abounds with the spirit of romance and adventure and is notable for the remarkable outdoor scenes and for the skirmish and battle scenes, in which hundreds of Mexicans and cowboys were used.

The stage play was a big success, although it was impossible in the stage version to work in the great outdoor element and the battle scenes in the manner in which they have been produced for the screen. The political aspects of the story are subordinated to the romance which dominates the lives of the Irish cowboy and his flashing and fiery Mexican sweetheart.

Rosemary Theby Featured.

The senorita, ably portrayed by Rosemary Theby, is the capable aid of her foster-father, who is a revolutionist who hates the United States and preys upon the border as a bandit. Allan Sears, as the cowboy who is one of the Texas Rangers, becomes one of her bitterest enemies, but he keeps his love of country and his personal love affairs apart and he fights her as a bandit girl, but loves her as a woman.

One of the big scenes is a dance in the hacienda of a wealthy Mexican. In this scene are one hundred Mexican dancers. A striking result has been attained in filming the dancing of these professionals in their colorful costume. The discovery of the Irish cowboy masquerading among them as a Mexican, solely to get a glimpse of the girl he loves, produces one of the most exciting moments in the story.

McCloskey Makes Temporary Deal with Humanity Films

UPON the completion of Anita Stewart's latest picture, "The Yellow Typhoon," J. H. McCloskey left the Louis B. Mayer studio to act in an executive capacity for the Humanity Producing Company, now filming an adaptation of "The Sowing of Alderson Cree."

Mr. McCloskey departed at once for Calistoga, a small town in the northern part of California, with Director Ollie L. Sellers and a company of thirty-five people to make a number of exterior scenes for the picture. The locale chosen is the same used in "When Bear Cat Went Dry," a Humanity production, in the making of which Mr. McCloskey was engaged.

With years of motion picture experience both in New York and California to draw from, Mr. McCloskey is rated as one of the most efficient production men in the studio world. He has a special arrangement with the Humanity company, whereby he will be released from his present engagement as soon as a new project in which he is interested reaches materialization.

"River's End" Given Extended Runs by Exhibitors All Over

MARSHALL NEILAN'S initial independent production for First National, "The River's End," continues to break box-office records everywhere, according to the reports coming to the Neilan offices in New York. "I have never seen a picture take such spontaneous hold on public, exchangers and exhibitors," said J. R. Grainger, in charge of sales. "Contracts indicate that managers realize the drawing power of this attraction, for long run bookings are the rule."

Many bookings for indefinite runs are reported, exhibitors pushing back releases to make room for a long showing of the Neilan production.

Among the most recent theatres to sign for indefinite runs on this offering are the Fremont Temple, Boston, where the picture will be put on as a big theatrical attraction, starting the first week in May, and at the Tabor Grand, Denver, where the management expects to establish new history for this theatre, both from the standpoint of financial returns as well as the length of run. This booking opens April 10.

Blackton Film Tops Pathe's Releases for April 11 Week

AS the special feature of a varied list of releases for the week of April 11, Pathe offers J. Stuart Blackton's latest production, "The Blood Barrier," in which Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon have the leading roles.

Stirring melodramatic, the picture is considered one of the most actionful productions Pathe has issued in some time. It relates the struggle of an American boy to preserve a secret which at this time as actually forming an important cog in international trade affairs.

The story is the work of the late Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady, and was written in his most vigorous style, possessing all the elements of love, romance, and adventure which he always pictured so keenly in his writings.

"The Blood Barrier" is fifth in the list of Pathe-Blackton features.

"Cracked Wedding Bells" Latest Rolin.

Pathe Exchange announces April 4 as the date scheduled for release of the latest Rolin Comedy, "Cracked Wedding Bells." "Snub" Pollard, the "pint sized" comedian, is featured, assisted by Marie Mosquini, the Italian beauty; Eddie Boland, and "Sunshine Sambo," the diminutive "chocolate drop." The comedy, of course, evolves about a wedding.

Sills to Play in Three Melford Pictures.

Milton Sills has been engaged for George Melford's production, "The Translation of a Savage," by Sir Gilbert Parker. For this picture there has been chosen virtually an all-star cast, including Elliott Dexter, Mabel Julianne Scott, Ann Forrest, Helen Dunbar, Fred Huntley. Mr. Sills will appear in two later productions, also to be directed by Mr. Melford. He has appeared in other Paramount-Artcraft pictures.

Condon on Lasky Scenario Staff.

Frank Condon, writer of many stories for Saturday Evening Post, and well-known as a contributor to other periodicals, has been engaged for the Lasky scenario staff and is temporarily with George Melford's organization, where he has aided in the scenario work on "The Translation of a Savage," the Sir Gilbert Parker story which will be produced as a George Melford special production for Paramount-Artcraft.

SIMPLE SOULS

"Pollyanna" Makes Bow for Big Four in Minneapolis

WITH Mary Pickford in "Pollyanna," the United Artists' Corporation will make its Minneapolis debut as an exhibitor in the Minneapolis Auditorium on April 4, according to an announcement by Charles G. Branham, who has been appointed manager. Other pictures announced to follow will be "When the Clouds Roll By," featuring Douglas Fairbanks, and "Down on the Farm," a Mack Sennett Comedy.

The interior of the Auditorium will be re-furnished and an orchestra of fifty pieces will be installed. The program will consist of as good pictures as can be obtained from time to time, he said, and will compare favorably with those of the large eastern theatres.

The Auditorium, which has a seating capacity of 2,500 and the largest stage in the Northwest, was recently subleased by the United Artists' Corporation from the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, which holds a four-year lease upon the building. It is situated at Nicollet avenue and Eleventh street, outside the "loop district."

Red Cross Receives Films Revealing North Africa

THE gratifying results of an expedition of a force of cameramen from the American Red Cross into Northern Africa have been shown at a screening of the films just received by the Bureau of Pictures, 220 West Forty-second street, New York City.

The shipment embraces a multitude of scenes of life in the Algerian Sahara, both on the wind-swept sands and in the peaceful shades of the oasis. Then there are street scenes in Algiers, Tunis, Kairouan and other settlements, photographed from the tops of buildings and from the Sacred Camel Towers; interiors of mosques and market places; homes of squalor and oriental luxury.

Included also are unusual shots of the natives at their devotion—never before photographed—according to the statements of the most aged of the sheiks. The domestic life is interestingly picturized, and altogether the footage which has just arrived constitutes a panoramic visualization of the Saharan region.

Pathe Announces Second Drew Comedy.

With an enormous demand from all over the country indicating the continually growing popularity of the Mrs. Sidney Drew comedies, it has been decided by the Pathe exchange to release the second comedy of the series, "The Stimulating Mrs. Barton," on April 18. It is said to be even a better production than the first comedy, which created a mirthful sensation at the Capitol theatre in New York City.

"The Stimulating Mrs. Barton," like the first comedy, "The Charming Mrs. Chase," is adapted to the screen from one of the famous "After Thirty" stories of Julian Street. These little masterpieces of social study appeared in the Saturday Evening Post and in McClure's.

Powell to Direct Ethel Clayton.

Paul Powell, well-known director, whose reputation was recently enhanced by his direction of Mary Pickford in "Pollyanna," has been specially engaged to direct Ethel Clayton in her new Paramount-Artcraft picture, "All in a Night," according to an announcement by Jesse L. Lasky. Samuel Merwin wrote the book of short stories, "The Charmed Life of Miss Austin," among which was one tale, "Dinner at Eight," upon which "All in a Night," is based. The scenario is by Edith Kennedy.

"Brunet Anniversary Month" Proved Biggest in History of Pathe Business

WITH the end of "Brunet Anniversary month" reports of unprecedented business were still pouring into the home office from distant branches and Pathe Exchange, Inc., reported that all records for business accomplished by the distributing organization had been shattered in March. No announcement can be made as yet regarding the winners of the $6,000 in prizes offered for the winning teams in the four territories into which the country was divided for Brunet Month, and it undoubtedly will be another week before the Pathe officials are in a position to make this announcement.

Pathe established a precedent for salesmanship competitions by making the race for awards during "Brunet Month" a team affair, each branch being thus represented. In the eastern division the offices pitted against each other were in New York City, Albany, Buffalo, Boston, Washington, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia and Newark. The central division was composed of Chicago, Indianapolis, Detroit, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Omaha, Des Moines and Cleveland.

In the southern division were listed St. Louis, Cincinnati, Charlotte, Atlanta, New Orleans, Little Rock, Oklahoma City, Dallas and Kansas City while in the Coast division were Spokane, Seattle, Portland, Salt Lake City, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

Eastern Division Prominent.

The competition was based upon the percentage of increase in collections and new business during March over an average for the previous three months, and long before the fourth week had rolled into the dim past it was evident that nearly every branch would top these figures.

In the eastern division, Albany, New York, Washington and Pittsburgh, were very prominent in the running right up to the finish, with the verdict in this territory ever in doubt. Contracts mailed just prior to the closing of the contest may be the deciding factor in this district.

The central division teams engaged in just as close a race, with Cleveland, Chicago, Detroit and Omaha making a good run for the first honors.

Competition Keen in South.

It was in the southern and coast divisions, however, that the keenest competition was felt. In the southern section seven teams competed so evenly that it was any one's race to the end, with Oklahoma City, Atlanta, Charlotte, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Dallas and Kansas City virtually on even terms.

Among the western offices Spokane and San Francisco journeyed past the half way mark, within a few points of each other, with Portland, Salt Lake City and Los Angeles giving these two a hard run for the money and watches offered as awards to the successful teams.

Extended Runs on Russell Film.

The American Film Company hit it right on "The Valley of Tomorrow," with William Russell in the Lake Tahoe setting—that is, if the eating is proof of the pudding. Extended runs in all kinds of cities, and all kinds of theatres, with all kinds of patrons, continue to keep the booking department of the producers busy.

Seven days at the Tivoli at Frisco, four days at the Strand at Denver, seven day Indianapolis bookings by Charles Olsen, three or four days in each theatre of the T. & D. Circuit, and extended runs in eastern cities galore keep up the pace of the first bookings.

Mrs. Moody to Collaborate.

Among the important announcements in connection with the forthcoming productions at the Lasky studio, just made by Jesse L. Lasky, is the statement that Mrs. William Vaughn Moody, widow of the late dramatist, author of "The Great Divide," etc., is on her way to Hollywood to collaborate in the scenarizing of "The Faith Healer," one of Mr. Moody's best plays, which is to be produced for Paramount-Artcraft special release by George Melford with virtually an all-star cast.

Robertson-Cole Issues Elaborate 40-Page Press Book on Cody's "Butterfly Man"

FULL advantage has been taken of the big exploitation possibilities of the Lew Cody super-special, "The Butterfly Man," in the unusual advertising campaign which Robertson-Cole has planned for this picture. "The Butterfly Man" which was produced by L. J. Gasneir, with Ida May Parke as director, is expected to surpass the popularity of "The Beloved Cheater," which was the first of the new series of Cody productions being made for Robertson-Cole.

Great play will be made on the popularity of the author, George Barr McCutcheon whose romantic stories of society life have millions of readers. The distinctive characterization which Mr. Cody introduced to the screen in "The Beloved Cheater" will be stressed and enlarged upon. Cody is playing sophisticated, bachelor roles with which a love affair with an entirely new and interesting angle is combined. Many advertising ideas are based on this.

His fluttering course through high society gives Cody new opportunity to kiss and make love in the distinctive way which he introduced in "The Beloved Cheater." This is taken full advantage of in the forty-page exploitation book which Robertson-Cole is issuing. Its cover which is in three colors, shows Cody being pursued by a bevy of beautiful girls. Inside one finds a pretentious layout of poster paper, which will stamp upon the minds of all who see it the character and appeal of the picture.

Kirkpatrick Adds Sales Talk.

There is a selling talk by A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation telling the exhibitor how to "play" the picture. This is followed by a lobby display of photos in a butterfly layout. The list of accessories, a teaser program reader, a long series of catch lines for "The Butterfly Man," "Who's Who in 'The Butterfly Man,'" and the details of a butterfly catching contest which will popularize the picture with the younger generation are given.

House managers are instructed on the use of throwaways and letters, and there is an attractive layout of large size display ads. Then a page is devoted to what the critics say about Lew Cody. A full page art layout of the supporting cast follows. There is also a novel tie-up with stores handling clocks, worked around a catch line in which Lew Cody says, "The right time to love is all the time." One page is devoted to the life of George Barr McCutcheon, another to decorating the theatre lobby.

There are eight full pages of publicity stories prepared by newspaper men for use in newspapers of all descriptions and in towns of all sizes.

Besides these features mentioned there are more than fifteen other pages containing the routine details of a very large advertising and exploitation campaign.

"12:10" Holds Up Well.

Despite the fact that the Herbert Brenon production starring Marie Doro was the first production to be released by Republic Distributing Corporation, it still continues to hold its place in the front rank in the bookings obtained each week, a statement from the Republic offices says. Within the past few weeks the actual first place in the bookings has been shifted between this production titled "12:10" and two others, namely, "Romany, Where Love Runs Wild," and "The Blue Pearl."

Benjamin B. Hampton's Three Westerns Show His Vision in Choice of Material

BENJAMIN B. HAMPTON has shown an unerring vision in the choice of popular material in his selection of Emerson Hough's "The Sagebrusher" for production as a Great Authors' special. A year ago there were literally thousands of exhibitors who questioned both his judgment and wisdom in producing on a liberal scale multi-reel portrayals of so-called western stories. This was because of their experiences with cheaply made blood and thunder stories of the West.

That the West is a great treasure chest of romance, that it is the scene of much that has made America what it is, was not taken into account by those exhibitors who had been pounded and campaigned at by countless producers.

Three Western Successes in Succession.

But Benjamin B. Hampton has built a surer basis for successful pictures than any exhibitors, without seeing his pictures, could foresee. He had been an editor of long experience; he knew the circulation value of the stories of the great outdoors. He had proved these values long ago in his own magazine and he had seen them demonstrated time and again in magazines that owed their entire commercial success to stories of love and adventure in a western locale.

Therefore, in quick succession, but after

1600-Seat Theatre Will Boost Films in Honolulu

JOE COHEN, head of the Consolidated Amusement Company, of Honolulu, T. H., arrived in San Francisco from the Islands last week with architect, M. H. Webb, and announces that plans are rapidly being perfected for the Bijou Theatre and that work on this new house will be commenced at an early date. Mr. Webb is making a study of the leading theatres in California while here.

The Bijou will have a seating capacity of 1,600 and will be equipped for stage as well as for screen attractions. The building will also house the offices of the Consolidated Amusement Company, as well as the big film exchange conducted by this concern. This company has just opened another moving picture theatre in its chain of Honolulu houses, the latest being the Palama, with a seating capacity of 1,000.

more than a year of preparation and production, Mr. Hampton made and has released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation Stewart Edward White's "The Westerners," Zane Grey's "Desert Gold" and now Emerson Hough's "The Sagebrusher."

And in succession each of these productions has met with commercial success. Singly and together they have killed the time-worn superstition that western pictures were not liked by the American masses and that they were not the type of stories for the so-called "best people."

"The Westerners" and "Desert Gold" each have played in more than 4,000 of the finest theatres and will play in at least 3,000 more theatre each. From the day of their release there has rarely been exhibitor demand for these pictures that twenty additional prints have been issued on each production, though each is but a few months old in point of public release.

Emerson Hough's "The Sagebrusher" contributed a sentimental heart interest of even greater power to the western environment of the story and now, in its seventh week of national release, it is outrunning both of Mr. Hampton's highly successful pictures previously released. Exhibitor demand for "The Sagebrusher" is the exact demonstration that the Hodkinson organization foresaw two months ago when they announced it to the trade as the most unusual type of story of the season because of the almost reverent beauty of its love story.

Selznick Busy Filming "Whispers."

Between the Selznick Bronx studio and the Pennsylvania station, New York City, Elaine Hammerstein and her company ran hither and thither one day recently in order to get appropriate atmosphere for her forthcoming Selznick production, "Whispers."

Several scenes were taken at the studio in the morning, and in the afternoon Director William P. S. Earle took Miss Hammerstein and her company to the Pennsylvania station to shoot situations that called for railway station atmosphere.

"Whispers" is the story purchased by Myron Selznick from the pen of Marcus V. Connolly. The film version was written by George Proctor.

"Dear, We've Got to Get a Little Girl for the Next Scene."

"Well, see the casting director," replies Edith Day. And they did. That accounts for the last scene in "Children Not Wanted," being released by Republic.

Four and Half Millions in Four Loew California Theatre Incorporations

ARTICLES of incorporation of companies in four California cities in which the Loew interests will operate have been filed at San Francisco, each of these representing new theatre ventures. These are the Market and Taylor Street Building Company, San Francisco, capital stock, $1,000,000; the Seventh street and Broadway Building Company, Los Angeles, capital stock, $1,500,000; Loew's Sacramento Theatre Company, Sacramento, capital stock, $100,000, and Loew's Stockton Theatre Company, Stockton, capital stock, $100,000.

The incorporators are Irving Ackerman, Samuel Harris, Leo Weinberger, James Marcus and John M. Slater. Work is already under way on the theatres at Sacramento and Stockton.

R. A. Walsh's First Film for Mayflower Will Be "Deep Purple," Stage Success

THE motion picture rights to "The Deep Purple," stage success by Paul Armstrong and Wilson Mizner, have been purchased by R. A. Walsh and will be used by him as his first production for Mayflower Photoplay Corporation under the recent affiliation. Work on the production has been virtually completed and it is booked for early release through Realart.

Record on the Stage.

A number of motion picture producers were in the market for "The Deep Purple" and strong bidding sent the purchase price soaring. Although no figure was named in the deal, it was reported that a sizeable fortune was paid for the stirring drama.

"The Deep Purple" was one of the most successful plays of the late Paul Armstrong. It was originally produced by Liebler & Co. at the Princess Theatre, Chicago, on October 3, 1910. After a three month's run there it moved to the Lyric Theatre, New York City, where it opened on January 9, 1911, and played for more than a year.

Still Played by Stock Companies.

The play had a long career in road companies about the country, and after nine years is still being played by stock companies. In the original cast of players were Emmett Corrigan, James A. Finney, Ada Dwyer, Catherine Calvert, wife of Paul Armstrong, and Richard Bennett.

The story concerns a young up-state girl, Doris Moore, who falls into the hands of Harry Leland, a blackmailer, and is brought to the home in New York City of Frisco Kate, a notorious confidence woman.

Mr. Walsh gave a hint to the trade of what might be expected of Walsh productions as a result of the new deal and the purchase of "The Deep Purple." He said:

"I take exception to these producers who believe that a proved stage success is a guarantee of a box office screen success. It is part of the game, but not all. I know exhibitors are not accepting this dictum without question now. Too many times they have lost money on just such a proposition.

Some Stage Plays Not Adaptable.

"In addition to being a proved stage success, the play must be adaptable to the screen. All good stage material is not good screen material, necessarily. Particularly is this true of stage farces and comedies. A good melodrama is good as general rule, whether as a novel, play or photoplay. That's an axiom of the trade.

"The Deep Purple" was one of the three plays of the late Paul Armstrong that people never tire of and go to see over and over again, along with 'Salome Jane' and 'Alias Jimmy Valentine.' The three are great because they are clean, human dramas that stir people and grip their attention."

Plummer Goes to Florida.

Albert W. Plummer, business manager of Character Pictures Corporation, has left New York with other members of the producing unit for Tampa, Fla., for an extended stay during which the company is to produce its special production, "The Isle of Destiny," by Mack Arthur, which is to be made on Oriental Island, lately acquired by the company.

The Character company will develop and print all its pictures in their own plant at Tampa, which recently has been completed.

Hal Roach Receives Many Wires Praising New Harold Lloyd Comedy, "Haunted Spooks"

HAL E. ROACH, president of the Rolin Film Company, which produces the Harold Lloyd two reel comedies for Pathe distribution, dispatched the following wire to Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc.: "Have received fifty wires from exhibitors commending last Lloyd, 'Haunted Spooks.' Jack Eaton, of New York Strand, says it's the best comedy he has played this year. All agree it is Lloyd's best. Wait until you see the next one. It's a sure knockout."

With the sixth, the last of the first series of Lloyd two reels about ready for distribution, both Mr. Roach and Pathe feel that every promise they made regarding the multiple reel comedies has been fulfilled.

In recently discussing the success of the Lloyds with a representative of Pathe Exchange, Inc., on the West Coast, Mr. Roach said:

Confident of Lloyd's Success.

"When we first decided to take Lloyd out of the one reel class and star him in two reel features, we felt we were making an experiment, yet we were perfectly confident of success. We know Lloyd is in a class by himself when it comes to portraying the kind of comedy he enacts for the screen.

"I am profoundly gratified by the way in which the new comedies are going over and the telegrams I have received are similar to the recent message that Managing Director Jack Eaton of the Strand Theatre personally addressed to Harold Lloyd.

"Harold Lloyd, I am sure, is now an established national institution and advices from abroad show that he is accepted as one of the popular funmakers. In dealing with this achievement I must acknowledge the ready aid and efficient co-operation of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Lloyd Comedies Have a Plot.

From the beginning it has been our desire to furnish comedies different from any on the market. We believed the public wanted funmakers that had some semblance of plot, not a composition of meaningless incidents thrown together because they seemed to be funny. Nearly every criticism we have received on our productions have contained favorable comment on the fact that we have put a plot into our comedies.

"Our first series of comedies will be concluded with the next release, which will soon be in Pathe's hands, and which I feel sure will evoke even more praise than 'Haunted Spooks.' We have set a standard of excellence with this latter production that we will have to maintain. We are not only prepared to maintain it, however, but even to raise it to a higher level, if it is possible."

Ross Made Assistant Sales Manager of Famous Players

H. A. ROSS, formerly manager of the Detroit exchange of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has been appointed assistant sales manager of that organization and assumed his new duties at the home office in New York March 15.

Before being called to his new position by Sales Manager S. R. Kent, Mr. Ross had been associated with Famous Players-Lasky for several years, and his record is one of steady and well-merited advancement. He is succeeded as branch manager at Detroit by Charles S. Perry, formerly assistant manager.

Two Companies Feature Frank Mayo.

Frank Mayo is being widely exploited these days. No less than two companies are featuring his film efforts. The Universal is advertising "Burnt Wings" and the Radin Pictures is offering "Thru Eyes of Men" to the state right market.

Selznick Announces Four Big Feature Pictures for April Release; News Reel Starts

PROMINENT in the list of April releases announced by Lewis J. Selznick, of Selznick Pictures Corporation, are three starring subjects and one all-star special, in addition to the first release of the Selznick News Reel. The productions will be released through Select Pictures Corporation.

Eugene O'Brien in "A Fool and His Money" is first on the schedule of April releases. Mr. O'Brien is supported by Ruby De Remer. "A Fool and His Money" is described as a delightful comedy-drama from the novel of the same name by George Barr McCutcheon. Ella Stuart Carson pictured the novel, and Robert Ellis directed the production.

In the supporting cast are Arthur Housman, Charles Craig, Jules Cowless, Frank Goldsmith, Wray Page, Emile LaCroix, George Dowling, Eric Finnstrom, Ned Hay, Louise Prussing, Betty Hutchinson, Baby Mary Carroll and Marguerite Forrest.

Shows Prominent Buildings.

Mr. Selznick, in presenting Elaine Hammerstein in "The Shadow of Rosalie Byrnes," stated that exhibitors throughout the country will have the opportunity of showing their patrons some striking views of New York's prominent buildings and busiest thoroughfares, as well as a prepossessing story. George Archainbaud directed.

This story was pictured by R. Cecil Smith, from the novel by Grace Sartwell Mason.

Owen Moore is credited with doing some of the finest work of his screen career in "The Desperate Hero," which was known under the working title of "His Word of Honor." Wesley Ruggles directed.

The story of "The Desperate Hero" originally appeared in the All Story Magazine. Supporting Mr. Moore are Gloria Hope, Henry Miller, Jr., Emmett King and Chas. Arling.

Fourth Release a Mack Story.

The fourth release, "The Valley of Doubt," was written by Willard Mack. Mr. Selznick formerly announced this production to the trade press as "Prince of Pines," which was the working title.

Some very picturesque and beautiful scenes for this production were obtained in the snow capped mountains, old New England villages, a lumber camp and in New Hampshire. Burton George directed. R. Cecil Smith adapted the story for the screen.

The Selznick News reel reaches the screen on Easter Sunday. Cameramen are stationed in all parts of the world to secure unusual and interesting events for this new celluloid newspaper of the screen.

Miss Young Heads Committee to Restore Old Missions; Is Background for Next Picture

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG has been selected to head the restoration committee in California's campaign to restore its famous old missions. This movement will be officially launched at a meeting between the San Francisco Missions Restoration Committee and the San Francisco Advertising Club, to be held at the St. Francis Hotel, San Francisco, March 31. On that occasion Clara Kimball Young will be the guest of honor and will speak on the subject of "Mission Restoration." The chairman of the day will be Archbishop Hanna.

The missions of Southern California are perhaps the most romantic edifices in the world. They tell the story of nomad wanderings of hordes of holy men, bound on the conquest of ignorance and unreligion. They tell of strife, of struggle, of sublime patience and charity. Of vigorous campaigns against superstitious Indians, treacherous beasts, a strange land and a strange people, all conquered through stout hearts. And the edifices, staunch, powerfully built, picturesque and at once dignified and beauteous, lend themselves ad-

No Special Listed for April 12 Week.

Universal announces that for the week of April 12 no special attraction will be offered. The tenth episode of "Elmo the Fearless," entitled "The Fatal Bullet," heads the list of releases. "The Relentless Renegades," the sixteenth episode of "The Lion Man" featuring Kathleen O'Connor and Jack Perrin, is the current chapter of those stars' daring exploits.

Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, the original fun-fingers, will be seen in a one-reeler, "Stop That Wedding." Another comedy, featuring Brownie, the Century Wonder Dog in "Dog Gone Clever," puts over two reels of canine tricks. A Western, "Nose in the Book," with Hoot Gibson, is infused with a delightful assortment of comedy. International News and the New Screen Magazine round out the weekly program.

mirably to the picturization of Marah Ellis Ryan's story, "For the Soul of Rafael," which Clara Kimball Young and her producer, Harry Garson, decided to use as natural and apropos backgrounds for one of the most exciting and impassioned stories yet screened.

Every important mission, from Los Angeles in the south to Mount Shasta in the north, has been utilized as locales for the attractive stories.

"For the Soul of Rafael" was written in the little village of San Juan Capistrano, and to secure the proper data for this novel, Marah Ellis Ryan, the author, was permitted to live in the San Juan Capistrano Mission, which she occupied for a period of many months, during which time the book was written. It depicts in detail the life and customs of the people of California during the period between 1840 and 1850.

Pearl White Sails for Europe; to Remain Abroad Six Weeks

PEARL WHITE, who has completed her second feature production for William Fox left New York on the French liner Savoy on Saturday, March 27, for a tour of Europe and a rest. "Tiger's Cub," an Alaskan story adapted from the book by George Goodchild, will be cut and titled by Charles Giblyn, who directed Miss White.

Miss White will tour Great Britain and the continent, and will gather material for several Fox features. She will select costumes which it is planned she will wear in forthcoming plays—making a search for the new and unusual in the way of both wearing apparel and properties.

During her tour abroad Miss White will also visit the various branch offices and exchanges of Fox Film Corporation, Ltd., where she will personally study the foreign market and the way in which our neighbors overseas have received the news that she has left the serial field to do feature pictures for William Fox.

It is expected that Miss White will remain in Europe about six weeks. The settings for her next picture will be erected in her absence.

Fuller Prepares Legislation.

Royal K. Fuller, of New York, connected with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, spent March 27 in Albany in going over certain matters connected with present legislation of interest to the motion picture industry. Mr. Fuller left on a trip which will take him to Chicago, Detroit and Milwaukee.

How Can a Man Be Interested in Astronomy When He Is Surrounded by Six Beautiful Stars?

We think that "Smiling Bill" Jones is just stalling in his Marion H. Kohn production, "The Blow That Killed Father."

Marion Davies Warmly Applauded.

An enthusiastic reception was accorded Marion Davies Cosmopolitan Productions star, when she made a personal appearance last Sunday, March 28, at the Capitol Theatre, New York, in connection with the premiere of her latest starring picture, "April Folly."

Escorted by Robert W. Chambers, famous novelist, Mesmore Kendall, president of the Capitol Theatre, and several other notable men and women, Miss Davies entered the huge auditorium during the showing of "April Folly," and sat in a box on the right hand side. In the darkness she was not recognized, but when the feature was done and the lights came up the audience of approximately 5,300 persons realized instantly who she was and greeted her with prolonged applause. This was Miss Davies' first personal appearance in connection with any of her own productions.

Elaborate Stage Setting and Prologue Arranged at Capitol for "April Folly"

COMBINING beauty with rare artistic taste, the stage setting and prologue arranged by John Wenger at the Capitol Theatre, New York, for the premiere of Cosmopolitan Productions' "April Folly," starring Marion Davies, which occurred Sunday, March 28, is one of the most effective and spectacular that have yet been devised for the world's biggest playhouse. Exhibitors who are planning to play "April Folly" will be interested to know that the Capitol's prologue is of the "elastic" variety; in other words, it is the happy sort of prologue, which can be made to fit a stage of the size of the Capitol's or a stage of the smallest theatre. The way the Capitol put it on represented a heavy outlay of money, both for scenery and for people, but the idea can be used by almost any theatre with less than a tithe of the Capitol's expense.

The prologue followed a promenade concert by the Capitol's orchestra under the leadership of Nat Finston. The heavy plush curtains went up on a darkened auditorium, revealing a futuristic curtain designed by John Wenger. Flooded with spotlights, the curtain's gorgeous coloring stood out in marvelous effect, its unusual design of fantastic bubbles and life, augmented by the orchestra, aiding in putting the audience in the proper mood for the picture.

The curtain then went up with the spotlights off, showing through a screen as in a dream a gorgeous ball room, with masked figures in costume throwing serpentines and toy balloons in wild abandon. Outstanding were two figures to represent Marion Davies as April Poole and Conway Tearle as Kerry Sarle, both, of course, in costume.

All the lighting in the prologue, with the exception of the first curtain came from the back. There was none in front. The back lighting served to heighten the dream effect. The varied colors of the lighting—blue, violet, amber and rose—softened the tones and gave forth a restful feeling that permeated the entire auditorium and helped to put the audience in an advantageous mood. At the height of the ball room orgy the lights dimmed and the picture came on, fitting in so cleverly as to leave a doubt where the real scene actually ended and the picture began.

About a hundred people were used to put over the prologue, but this large number was necessary because of the huge space in the proscenium arch, which had to be filled.

To the exhibitor in small towns, removed from the immediate aids that large cities and distributing centers supply, Moving Picture World comes as an invaluable aid to ticket selling. Subscribe—$3 the year.

Louise Glaum in "Sex" Will Play Fifty Full Week First Run Engagements April 11

THE week of April 11 will establish a record for J. Parker Read, Jr., as a producer of motion pictures. This record has been made by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation with Louise Glaum's newest production, "Sex," by C. Gardner Sullivan. April 11 is the official release date of "Sex" and for that week fifty-five full week stand first run theatres will play the production as the most widely exploited attraction they have offered their public in the past year.

In two weeks of selling since the prints of "Sex" reached the exchanges the Hodkinson managers have held the time through the desire of exhibitors for what the trade generally recognized as one of the exceptional pictures.

To W. C. Dineen, general manager of the Harry Moir chain of downtown first run theatres in Chicago, goes the credit for being the first run factor in the country to sign a playing contract for "Sex." He will open this production for a two weeks' engagement at the Rose Theatre, Chicago, April 11. To launch "Sex" as he feels it deserves Mr. Dineen through his advertising manager has bought four times larger space than he has ever used before on any picture in all the Chicago newspapers simultaneously. Jacob Fabian, the big Northern New Jersey exhibitor is the only exhibitor in the country who obtained a pre-release on "Sex" in advance of April 11. He took a chance that the accessories on the picture would be in his Newark branch and opened the picture in Paterson, N. J., on March 29.

Moe Krydel, the big Newark exhibitor, has booked "Sex" and opens with it on its national release date.

In Chicago behind the first run in "The Loop" the Lubliner & Trinz Circuit has booked "Sex" solid for its entire chain of theatres.

Sidney J. Goldman, the Hodkinson manager in Chicago with control and direction over the Milwaukee, St. Louis, Indianapolis and Des Moines offices, reports that his advance bookings in the Chicago branch alone are double the advance bookings ever taken on a picture in the territory prior to its first run release.

Book "Mystery of Yellow Room."

Turner & Dahnken, the big San Francisco exhibitors, have booked "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," an Emile Chautard production presented by Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, for their Tivoli Theatre in the Golden Gate City, and over a large part of their circuit.

The contracts were closed this week by Ben F. Simpson, Realart's San Francisco manager, after negotiations begun some time ago when the Mayflower special had a week's showing at Tally's Broadway Theatre in Los Angeles, where it drew record crowds that attracted considerable attention among West Coast exhibitors.

The Mayflower special will be shown for a week at the Tivoli in San Francisco and at the Turner & Dahnken Theatres in Oakland, Berkeley and San Jose for the same period.

Campaign Book on Eltinge Picture.

A carefully prepared press book on "An Adventuress," the new Julian Eltinge production, is now ready for distribution according to an announcement from the Republic offices this week. This is the most recent picture made with Julian Eltinge, famous female impersonator, in the leading role, and released through Republic Distributing Corporation.

The press book, the announcement states, contains every angle of exploitation needed by the showman. A foreword in the press book defines that showmanship is a keen appreciation of the elements which interest and entertain the public.

Edward Earle Is Leading Man in New Charles Miller Film

EDWARD EARLE, who was starred by Vitagraph in the O. Henry series and other important productions, has the leading male role of Morgan Kleath in Charles Miller's production of "The Law of the Yukon" presented by Mayflower Photoplay Corporation.

The picture is now being cut and assembled by Director Miller in New York City after completion of the camera work during the winter at Port Henry, N. Y. The story is based on Robert W. Service's poem, "The Law of the Yukon," and Director Miller promises something new and entirely different from anything presented on the screen before of Yukon life.

In addition to Edward Earle, the leading roles are filled by June Elvidge, who has a notable record in numerous feature productions; Nancy Deavey, a newcomer to the American screen; Nadine Nash, Warburton Gamble, Thomas O'Malley, Bigelow Cooper, Joseph Smiley and Jack Dillion.

According to the policy followed in Mayflower features, no player is to be starred in the cast, but each one will be featured in accordance with his importance in the production. This principle of casting has been found to produce balanced results and to accentuate the story and the production.

Ruth Roland Returns to Studio.

Ruth Roland has returned to work at the Astra Studio fully recovered from the illness which confined her to her home for four days and caused a suspension of activities of the company now producing a fifteen episode serial which will be Miss Roland's next starring play on the Pathe program. The Roland company has completed the first episode of the serial, a story by Johnson McCulley which was published in magazine form under the title of "Broadway Bab," and is now doing exteriors for the later chapter.

Wanda Hawley Makes Her Realart Debut in "Miss Hobbs," by Jerome K. Jerome

HAVING taken a much needed vacation, Wanda Hawley, the new Realartist, will start work immediately on her first production as a star. "Miss Hobbs," by Jerome K. Jerome, has been selected for her as the most suitable vehicle to bring out her talent in light comedy roles.

"Miss Hobbs" is considered by many critics to be one of the best examples of modern comedies. It was originally produced at the Lyceum Theatre in New York on September 7, 1899, with a notable cast headed by Annie Russell, Charles Richmond, Clara Bloodgood and Mrs. G. H. Gilbert. Others in the original cast were Orris Johnson, Francis Sedgwick, Mabel Morrison and Elizabeth Rathburn.

On December 18 of the same year, the play was produced at the Duke of York's Theatre in London, thus scoring a big hit on both continents almost simultaneously. In the English production the cast included Herbert Waring, Evelyn Miller, Susie Vaughan, Allan Aunesworth and Cosmo Stuart.

The play had a run of more than a year in New York City and has a record of numerous other revivals in this country and was a popular success throughout the country. It has been included in the courses of study on the modern drama in various colleges and universities. Obtaining it as material for Miss Hawley was considered by Realart officials as a most fortunate circumstance.

Since becoming a star Miss Hawley has been much in demand by interviewers and photographers. So many writers have called upon her within the last few days that Miss Hawley is seriously considering aping President Wilson by setting aside a special afternoon to be known as "correspondent's afternoon."

Sam Woods, who directed "Double Speed," in which Miss Hawley appeared as leading woman for Wallace Reid, has been chosen to direct the first star picture. During Miss Hawley's absence on vacation, he was busy going over the script, putting it in the best possible shape to guarantee Miss Hawley's success in her initial bow to the public as a star.

Luna Amusement Company to Build Another at Lafayette

ANNOUNCEMENT is made that the Luna Amusement Company, of Lafayette, Ind., which operates a chain of motion picture and vaudeville theatres in Indiana and Illinois, will soon begin the erection of a handsome new theatre at Sixth and Main streets, Lafayette, to cost approximately $250,000. The proposed structure will have a seating capacity of 2,000.

The company, of which C. H. Ritter is president, and H. H. Johnson is treasurer and managing director, operates the Luna, a 1,200-seat theatre at Lafayette; the Lyric, a 1,000-seat theatre at Fort Wayne, and the Luna, a 950-seat theatre at Kankakee, Ill.

Although the proposed new structure is to be built as a legitimate theatre, it will be devoted at times to vaudeville and motion pictures. The city of Lafayette has been without a legitimate opera house since March, 1914, when the old Dreyfus Theatre was destroyed by fire.

The stage, lighting and equipment of the proposed new structure will be of the latest type and will be patterned somewhat after Chicago's new theatre, the State-Lake. A $15,000 organ will be installed in specially constructed sounding lofts located on each side of the proscenium and provision also will be made to accommodate a large orchestra.

London Is Deeply Impressed by Tucker's "Miracle Man"

THE welcome given George Loane Tucker's "The Miracle Man" on its first showing in America was duplicated at the first trade show held in London recently under the auspices of the Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd., according to advices received by E. E. Shauer, assistant treasurer and in charge of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Trade publications and exhibitors have been a unit in declaring it one of the greatest and most appealing photoplays ever shown in London, and all are predicting for it a repetition of its success as a box-office feature in the United States.

The British trade publications are unusually lavish in their reviews of the Paramount Artcraft super-special. The Bioscope, of London, declared it to be "unquestionably one of the most important contributions yet made to the drama of the screen." Kinematograph Weekly, another leading trade publication, says: "Its claims as a 'showman's proposition' have never been surpassed," while the Film Renter and Moving Picture News calls "The Miracle Man" "a miracle of production—Famous-Lasky production—that makes one gasp and wonder."

Buster Keaton Drafted from Comedy for "New Henrietta"

BUSTER KEATON, for long identified with screen comedies, has been engaged by Metro to play the important role of Bertie ("The Lamb") in Metro's all-star production of "The New Henrietta." In this special picturization de luxe of Winchell Smith's and Victor Mapes' revision of the old stage play, "The Henrietta," by Bronson Howard, the all-star ensemble will include also that veteran actor, William H. Crane.

Winchell Smith will in person supervise the production at the Metro studios in Hollywood. Mr. Smith recently became a member of Metro's staff of eminent authors.

When Buster Keaton plays Bertie in "The New Henrietta," the part originated on the stage by Stuart Rogson, he will make his first departure from slap-stick comedy. Mr. Keaton was selected by Winchell Smith as the logical actor to impersonate Bertie Van Alstyne. The comedian was loaned to Metro by Roscoe Arbuckle, with whom he has played for three years.

William H. Crane, who in the original stage production had the part of Nicholas Van Alstyne, will have that part in the screen version. June Mathis has finished the scenario and according to Director Herbert Blache, production will start this week.

SIMPLE SOULS

Finkelstein & Ruben Plan Free Shows for 6,000 Needy Minneapolis Children

WITH a dinner to more than sixty Minneapolis newspaper and trade journal representatives and a private advance showing of pictures to appear soon in their theatres, Finkelstein & Ruben have announced their policy of providing free entertainment regularly for the poor children and orphans of Minneapolis.

The dinner, which was held in the Gold Room of the Radisson Hotel, was followed by reviews of Mary Miles Minter in "Anne of Green Gables," Will Rogers in "Jubilo" and "Teacher's Pet," the latest Tarkington comedy, Mayor Lawrence C. Hodgson, of St. Paul, responded to a toast by Theodore L. Hays, president of the Twin City Amusement Trust Estate, on behalf of Messrs. Finkelstein and Ruben.

The plan of the Finkelstein and Ruben interests is to start on April 5 with the showing of "Anne of Green Gables" and "Edgar," a Tarkington comedy, in one of their downtown theatres at performances exclusively for poor children. The performances, which will last four days, will be attended by more than 6,000 children free.

The tickets to the performances will be given out through the Associated Charities of Minneapolis, representing twenty of the leading charitable organizations of the city. Members of the Fifth District Federation of Women's Clubs will be hostesses at the shows. Free transportation will be furnished all children unable to pay carfare, and special taxicabs will be sent to the poor house and the orphans asylums for the cripples and those living outside the city limits. B. B. Jackson, superintendent of Minneapolis public schools, has announced that he will appoint a special representative to furnish the names of needy children in the public schools.

The plan, which is the direct outgrowth of the Lincoln's Birthday free entertainment provided for Minneapolis school children, will include regular performances from time to time for the children, the authors said. "Ho! Ho!" the health clown, who has been appearing at the various schools on behalf of sanitary living, will be on the programs, according to the announcement.

Illinois Showman Praises Service by Realart Exchange

J. C. HEWITT, manager of the Strand Theatre of Robinson, Ill., affiliated with the Roscoe Cochran Amusement Enterprises, suggests that "Real Service" be added to the trade mark name of Realart Pictures Corporation.

His suggestion is based on what he terms an unusual service from Realart's St. Louis office, of which Floyd Lewis is manager. Mr. Hewitt had booked "Erstwhile Susan," starring Constance Binney but up to the last minute the print had failed to arrive and he was about to hang out the "No Show" sign, when—

Mr. Hewitt tells the story briefly and pointedly, in his letter to the home office: "Last Monday and Tuesday we were to have received 'Erstwhile Susan' for usage on these days. However, the shipment failed to show up to the last train arriving late in the afternoon. We were all ready to put out the 'No Show' signs, when your booker, Mr. A. R. Dietz, walked into our office carrying our film shipment under his arm.

"We learned from Mr. Dietz that the print booked for our use failed to arrive in the office in time for shipment, therefore Mr. Dietz stayed up most of Sunday night in order to get a print from a St. Louis house to us in time for our showing. Mr. Dietz traveled some 200 miles in a round-about, unheard-of-way, in order to reach us in time. Nobody but a booker with exceptional fine time-table ability, could have done this.

"It is indeed gratifying to know that an exchange would go so far to give service. We might add that after playing your first two attractions we feel that you are justified in using the name 'Realart,' but suggest that Real Service might be annexed to your title."

"Velvet Fingers" Title of New Seitz Serial for Pathe

VELVET FINGERS" is announced as the title under which Pathe will release the serial which George B. Seitz is now producing at his studios in New York.

The first episode has been completed and is now being worked on at the Bound Brook laboratory. "Velvet Fingers" is an original story by Bertram Millhauser. The continuity was written by James Shelly Hamilton.

Mr. Seitz and Marguerite Courtot play the leading roles. The character portrayed by Seitz is that of a master collector of jewels and other valuables and his smooth technique in acquiring such articles without the consent of their rightful owners wins him the title of "Velvet Fingers."

Reports from Pathe state that the play reveals a fresh and ingenious treatment of the ever popular crook story with an effective blending of suspense and sprightly humor.

Emma Dunn Speaks of Her Work as a Screen Actress

MY advice to anyone who contemplates entering motion pictures is that they first have two or three years' experience in a stock company," said Emma Dunn, the prominent stage actress who recently completed her work in a picturization of "Old Lady 31" for Metro. Miss Dunn declared her advent into the picture field a "wonderful experience; one I would not have missed for anything."

"Of course it's hard work," she continued, "but oh, the gratification such endeavor brings when one sees the progress from day to day. Toward the end of the picture I could see where I made great improvement in my characterization of Angie.

"I have been asked whether I missed playing in an audience. I can truthfully say that never once have I felt its absence. I have never been conscious of the camera; nor of the smallness of a set.

"I feel, however, that my stage experience is a big asset. The stage teaches one, to portray emotions, not only with facial expression, but with every bodily movement and gesture."

To Renovate the Eagles Theatre.

The interior of the Eagles Theatre, a motion picture house at Wabash, Ind., will undergo a complete transformation. The Dickson Brothers, who operate it, say the new decorations and improvements will cost about $4,000. The interior of the auditorium will be redecorated, new draperies will be hung, the floor will be recarpeted, a new railing will be installed at the rear of the seating space and an entire new set of scenery and stage decorations will be supplied.

Mary's Latest Pose.

Before starting on her tour of the world Mary Pickford will complete "Op 'O Me Thumb" for United Artists.

First National in Minneapolis Has Free Service Department

THE establishment of a service department with W. H. Lawrence, veteran motion picture man in charge, is announced by the Minneapolis branch of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. Mr. Lawrence's field will be Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Montana and part of Wisconsin. The new department will be an innovation there according to Manager J. F. Cubberley, of Minneapolis, and will give free service to the customers of the exchange in advertising and exploitation of pictures. Mr. Lawrence's time will be placed at the entire disposal of the Northwest exhibitors.

Mr. Lawrence's career in the motion picture game, which began in 1908, started with the singing of illustrated songs in Ohio. Then he went into stock and vaudeville. Since that time, he has been connected with American Feature Film Company of Chicago, where he helped put out the second American made multiple reel feature film in the country; Warner's Features, Inc.; World, Mutual and Fox.

Mr. Lawrence came to Minneapolis in 1917 as acting manager of the local Fox exchange. He remained in this position until the spring of 1918, when he went with Select as assistant manager, which position he held until making his present connections.

Seena Owen Is Leading Woman for Lytell in Metro Picture

SEENA OWEN has been engaged by Metro as Bert Lytell's leading woman in "The Temple of Dawn," a picturization of I. A. R. Wylie's novel upon which production will start this week at the Metro Studios in Hollywood.

Miss Owen's most recent picture was "The House of Toys" in which she was featured by the American Film Company. She has been in pictures since 1914, when she made her initial appearance with the old Majestic-Reliance Company.

Later Miss Owen went with D. W. Griffith and played in both "Intolerance" and "The Fall of Babylon." In the last year she was with William S. Hart in "Branding Broadway," with Charles Ray in "The Sheriff's Son," with Tom Moore in "The City of Comrades," with Owen Moore in "Sooner or Later."

Hobart Henley Joins Directorial Staff of the Selznick Pictures Corporation

THE Lewis J. Selznick organization made another ten strike last week when Myron Selznick announced he had added to the directorial staff Hobart Henley, a director of long experience, with an extensive list of box office successes to his credit. Mr. Henley has signed a long term contract and will confine his future efforts to a series of special productions for the Selznick Enterprises, the nature of which will be announced later.

For nine years Mr. Henley has been prominent in the motion picture industry as an actor, leading man, star, writer of stories and director, who put over pictures that brought the maximum of results to the exhibitor. He is known as a director with the box office angle and believes in combining art with commercialism.

"The first thing the director must consider," said Mr. Henley, when questioned about his future plans with the Selznick organization, "is the exhibitor. There is no lack of loyalty to the producer in making this statement or applying this rule. Unless the director plays to the exhibitor's box office and keeps it continually in mind, his influence does not, and cannot, last long with the producer.

Believes in Continuity Man.

"It's a perfect organization in every department that makes a picture, for, after all, it is the box office that tells whether a picture is right or wrong in the final result. Of course, you have to get a good man to make your picture, for no matter how good your story is it can be killed by poor handling, but if the organization is back of the man, he has 75 per cent. of the battle won before he starts.

"Personally, I am a great believer in the story and the continuity man. He is the man who is going to be consulted more and more as directors wake up and begin to realize his value. I expect to see him one of the real big men in the industry. As it is now, too many stories are absolutely ruined to fit a freak personality. They are torn to pieces to fit some star.

"I always believe in giving the author credit for the story. If it's good enough to read, if it's good enough to pay money for, then it's good enough to use without tearing it to pieces for a star. The star should be created for the story—not the story for the star. Yes, the director is a big man in the making of a picture, but he needs a lot of help. Motion picture making has ceased to be a one man proposition."

Thomas H. Ince Publicity Department Launches Important National Campaign

ONE of the most important exploitation publicity campaigns of the current season is now under way in the press of America through the efforts of the Thomas H. Ince publicity and advertising headquarters in Culver City.

Heading the list of a special syndicate service directed to the foremost metropolitan newspapers, Sunday magazine sections and pictorial supplements is a series of articles on Thomas H. Ince's methods of production, giving in straightforward, concise terms his heretofore unpublished views on matters of general interest to the motion picture public and exhibitors.

Written by Hunt Stromberg, director of publicity and advertising for the Thomas H. Ince studios, following actual interviews with Mr. Ince, the production series, embodying seven articles dealing with various "inside" phases of picture making and studio activity, are described by editors accepting them as among "the most intelligent and educational motion picture articles submitted by studio writers."

Some Leading Papers Named.

Latest reports from the Ince studios claim that twenty big metropolitan newspapers, among which are the Chicago Daily Journal, Kansas City Star, New Orleans Item, Los Angeles Herald, Cleveland News-Leader, Dallas Times-Herald, Milwaukee Sentinel, Duluth News-Tribune, Vancouver Sunday Sun, Waco Times-Herald, Richmond Evening Journal, Manchester Daily American, Winnipeg Tribune, Great Falls (Mont.) Tribune, Baltimore Sun and the Tacoma Ledger, are now running the entire series. Scores of smaller daily papers in practically every section of the United States and Canada are "playing up" the series as a direct-from-the-producer news "beat."

Foreign editors have also been prompt in seeing the educational value of a series of articles which cast the "close-up" on representative methods of modern motion picture production, star making, casting, direction, acting, scene building, set construction, administrative operation and the methods pursued in writing and choosing scenarios.

The entire series is copyrighted by Thomas H. Ince to prevent infringement by local or correspondence schools devoted to picture posing. The articles are syndicated to one newspaper in each city or town and exclusive stills with which to properly illustrate each story are supplied the editors upon request.

Knotty Problems Confronted Director of "Milestones"

GOLDWYN'S production of "Milestones," the stage play by Edward Knoblock and Arnold Bennett, promises to be one of the most elaborate pictures of the year. It is now in the process of making at the Culver City studios under the direction of Paul Scardon, assisted by Tenny Wright.

In the cast are Lewis Stone as John Reed, Mary Alden as Rose, Alice Hollister as Gertrude, Harvey Clark as Sam Sidley and M. Pring as Ned Pym. All of these actors will be called upon to impersonate the characters they play through the three different periods.

While a pretty girl of 16 years might interpret the childhood of Rose or Gertrude satisfactorily, such a youthful actress could not be expected to meet the dramatic demands of the later periods. For each of the three eras special lighting will be utilized in order to heighten the required effects of youth or age.

One problem had to do with smoothing over the lapse of time between the first period and the second, and between the second and third. Mr. Scardon uses a dissolve to bring about the transition. By this means the characters as well as the surroundings gradually change. It is a difficult photographic process that must be handled with great care to get just the right effect.

"Mountain Madness" Completed.

The Lloyd Carleton Productions Company, making a series of pictures which are being distributed by the Republic Distributing Corporation, of which Lewis J. Selznick is advisory director and Briton N. Busch, president, has completed the second of the series which will be released following "Children of Destiny."

The picture is called "Mountain Madness." It is from the pen of Anna Alice Chapin, and was directed by Lloyd Carleton.

Sawyer Off to South America to Study Picture Conditions

C. E. SAWYER, well known to the film trade of the Latin Americas, is en route to Buenos Aires for David P. Howells, Inc. He expects to remain six months visiting the principal cities of South America, studying new conditions in that territory.

Mr. Sawyer's trip is in line with the policy of David P. Howells, Inc., under which representatives from his New York office are constantly in the territories in which he is interested. This plan keeps the Howells organization intimately in touch with the rapidly changing conditions of the foreign picture market. A Howells' representative will return from South America within a few weeks.

Ben Howells is now in Europe and Horace T. Clarke is sailing shortly for the Orient both of whom are gathering information at first hand for the most advantageous marketing of the pictures which go into foreign territories through the Howells office.

Smith Directs "Temperamental Artist."

Noel Smith has been engaged to direct "A Temperamental Artist," a new two-reel Rainbow comedy to be released through Universal. The cast will be headed by Harry Mann. He will appear as a love-sick painter who gets into all kinds of hilarious predicaments through his weakness for the fair sex.

Two other Rainbow Comedy companies are hard at work on their current productions. William H. Watson is directing "She Did and He Didn't," a farcical romance with a cast composed of Zip Monberg, Harry Sweet and Connie Henley. J. A. Howe is directing "Who Is Which and Why," a mystery melange. Billy Engel, Celeste Zimlick, Emily Gerdes and Lynn Cole are in the cast.

Publicity and Exploitation Force to Cover the Country Organized by Robertson-Cole

IN line with its policy of progression and honesty of purpose, the Robertson-Cole Company has started the organization of a publicity and exploitation force that will cover the United States like a blanket. Each of the twenty-five Robertson-Cole branches is to have a trained publicity, advertising and stunt man who will carry out a carefully conceived and concrete campaign of promotion, so planned that the entire force will work as a unit directed from headquarters in New York City.

To accomplish perfect harmony of action "a manual of instruction and duties" has been prepared that distinctly specifies what each and every member of the exploitation organization is expected to do. This manual covers every step to be taken, from the time the pictures are received from the producers till they have been shown to the maximum of attendance in the theatres.

Provides for Simultaneous Stunts.

Initiative and origination will not be curbed in any direction, but the entire field publicity organization will work like a perfectly assembled machine. Plans have been made so that exploitation stunts can be carried out simultaneously in every section of the country without any lost motion and the utmost efficiency attained for both the exhibitor and the Robertson-Cole Company.

Each branch publicity man will be a "service man" in the fullest sense of the term. He will be the realization of the service and promotion helps that the Robertson-Cole organization promises to their customers. The promise of assistance made by the sales force will be redeemed in full, by the exploitation man in each branch and that exploitation man will be trained to carry out the promise with intelligence and vigorous integrity.

One of the outstanding features of the Robertson-Cole exploitation force will be the advancement of the merchandising side of each feature. The old system of playing up "hookum" will be eliminated and the commercial attributes of each picture will be exploited; in the same manner that the distinctive features of standard articles of merchandise, are played up by the big, sound commercial institutions.

Advertising Experience Necessary.

For that reason, one of the main qualifications demanded of their branch publicity man, is advertising experience. Men who have been trained in the advertising field, have been taught to clearly discern the commercial advantages of all articles that come under their attention and know how to put forward these qualities in an interesting manner, will be chosen.

The branch publicity directors will be under the direction of Charles J. Giegerich, who has been appointed to the position of field publicity manager. Mr. Giegerich has had a long and varied experience in the newspaper advertising and exploitation field and has to his credit some of the biggest publicity campaigns conducted in recent years.

Ragland Gets Silver Cigarette Outfit.

The former colleagues of John C. Ragland, who resigned as general sales manager of Realart to join the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation, have presented him with a silver cigarette outfit in token of their esteem and friendship. Mr. Ragland assumed his new position as general manager of the Kane company last week.

In the smoking outfit presented to Mr.

Ragland on the day of his leaving the Realart flock, were a silver cigarette case, a silver match case, and a silver cigarette holder, all engraved in similar design and imprinted with the initials of the executive. In addition Mr. Ragland was given a leather card case, edged in silver and embossed with his name.

Strong Cast in Mack Story.

According to Myron Selznick, head of productions for Selznick Pictures, a cast of unusual importance was engaged for "The Valley of Doubt," written by Willard Mack. Final scenes for this Selznick special production are reported nearing completion.

The cast includes Thurston Hall, Arline Pretty, Anna Lehr, Jack Costello, Bobby Agnew, John Ardizoni and many other well-known players.

R. Cecil Smith wrote the continuity for Mr. Mack's story and Burton George directed the production.

Hodkinson's Detroit Manager Stages Big Midnight Trade Showing of "Sex"

GIVEN only a few hours after receiving the print to make complete preparations, E. A. Crane, Detroit manager of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, staged a trade screening of J. Parker Read, Jr.'s Louise Glaum production, "Sex," in a manner seldom if ever paralleled in Detroit picture annals.

Manager Crane received the first print of "Sex" at noon on March 23 and at midnight of that day the feature was being put on the screen at the Washington Theatre, one of the big downtown houses, before an audience which completely filled the playhouse and one composed of exhibitors, not only from the leading Detroit theatres, but from distant parts of Michigan as well; newspapermen, photoplay critics, picture exchange managers and the entire chorus and many of the principals of Al Jolson's "Sinbad" company, then playing the Detroit Opera House.

The Washington Theatre orchestra and floral tributes added greatly to the effect while the feminine contingent from the "Sinbad" company and a bevy of women club members gave the touch which made the trade showing a decidedly smart gathering.

Crowd Caused Comment.

Immediately upon receiving the print, Crane communicated with the local and up-state exhibitors and in each instance the invitation was accepted, and instead of a few straggling spectators that usually appear at trade showings, there was a crowd entering the theatre which aroused many inquiries as to what was happening within at that late hour.

Comment concerning "Sex" was enthusiastic. Royal Baker, Detroit's police motion picture censor, declared that in his opinion "Sex" was the screen sensation of 1920. Stanley Rushton, assistant city editor of the Detroit Journal, said: "It is without doubt the most lavishly staged offering I have ever seen. There are a thousand and one good things to be said about 'Sex' and it impressed me as a page from the Arabian Nights staged amid Broadway's brightest lights with a luxury which is unsurpassed."

New England Likes "Blind Love."

Herman Rifkin, prominent state rights buyers of Boston, who purchased recently the New England territory to Gerald F. Bacon's six-reel production, "Blind Love," starring Lucy Cotton and George Le Guere, writes Nathan Hirsh, distributor, that the picture has been booked solid throughout New England. "Blind Love" was booked last week over the Loew circuit in greater New York, and played to good business according to reports received by Mr. Hirsh from the Loew offices.

"King Spruce" Trade Showing Brings Volume of Contracts

TELEGRAPHIC requests from fourteen Hodkinson exchanges urging immediate shipment of accessories on "King Spruce," starring Mitchell Lewis, from Holman Day's famous story of the Maine forests, speak volumes for the results obtained from the simultaneous trade showings of the production held by all Hodkinson managers last week. Already five contracts for pre-release engagements in the larger cities are awaiting approval at the home office.

"King Spruce" is a drama that should hold the interest of its audiences by its heart appeal rather than by a series of thrills, but many a scene in the new W. W. Hodkinson release nevertheless raises a thrill of excitement.

Chief among the thrills is a spectacular forest fire said to be one of the greatest incidents of its kind ever enacted for the screen. Although in constant danger Mr. Lewis, his leading woman, Mignon Anderson, and Melbourne MacDowell worked without mishap through the entire episode.

Another thrilling incident is the blowing up of a river dam which was a straight feat of engineering and motion picture generalship on the part of Director Roy Clements. The most thrilling situation is the rescue of a lumberman from under a moving train.

Additions to the Cast of "Whispers."

Elaine Hammerstein's latest production, "Whispers," for the Selznick Pictures Corporation, is announced as having added several actors and actresses to an already strong cast.

Recent additions to the cast include Ida Darling, Charles Gerard and Bernard Randall.

Pictures Show "Gobs" Places to Visit Before Warships Dock in Foreign Ports

MEMBERS of Congress who have been abroad are firm adherents of the plan to give men in the navy plenty of moving pictures. The films play a big part in the recreational work of the navy, both on board its vessels and at its shore stations, and of the $800,000 which it is proposed to appropriate for recreation during the fiscal year 1921, a good part is to be used in moving picture work.

"This is one part of the service that I thoroughly enjoy and that I have enlisted in—that is, the moving picture end of it," declared Representative Butler, of Pennsylvania. "It keeps the men in at night; it keeps them looking at the pictures instead of looking for other sorts of amusements. From the care that is being given these lads there is practically no punishment now in the service. In the cities they put in their time running around to places that were not desirable—running about wild and without proper entertainment.

"Now, the purpose of this fund is to provide for football and for baseball and for moving pictures on shore and moving pictures on the ships. And I will say that when the committee went abroad in 1918 on the battleship Arkansas—and we were about fourteen days on that ship—every night they had fine moving pictures.

"I want to say this to my friend," said Representative Hicks, of New York, following the conclusion of Mr. Butler's remarks. "There is one feature of it that I think he will be interested in knowing about, and what is being done with this fund in part. Whenever a ship approaches a port, say the port of Hongkong, they have a series of colored photograph films which illustrate all the historical points in that city, and that reel is run off for several nights before they enter the port. A little booklet is then furnished as to the places to be seen to every man, so that when a man steps over the gangplank he will know the main places of interest to visit in Hongkong. That is done at every port."

Selznick Buys "The Eleventh Hour."

A story recently purchased by Myron Selznick, head of productions for the Selznick Pictures Corporation, is "The Eleventh Hour," announced as the joint work of three well-known writers, namely, Merle Johnson, Izola Forrester and Mann Page.

Mr. Johnson is a member of the Selznick Scenario staff, and Miss Forrester and Mr. Page are photoplay and fiction writers with many screen successes to their credit.

Selznick Signs Four Actors for Forthcoming Productions

MYRON SELZNICK, head of productions for Selznick Pictures, has engaged Charles Gerard, Warren Cook, Bernard Randall and Philips Tead to portray important roles in three pictures now in the course of preparation and production.

Mr. Gerard, well known as a portrayeur of heavy roles, will characterize "Summers" in the picture called "Whispers" in which Lewis J. Selznick presents Elaine Hammerstein as star. "Whispers" was written by Marcus V. Connolly and pictured by George Proctor. William P. S. Earle is directing the production.

Mr. Cook has signed to play the part of Senator King in "The Flapper," by Frances Marion. Under the direction of Alan Crosland, Lewis J. Selznick presents Oliver Thomas in this production. Mr. Randall will portray Shepley in "Whispers" and Mr. Tead will characterize Mace in the same production.

Plans Pretentious Sets for Selznick's "The Figurehead"

WHAT is claimed to be one of the most pretentious, lavish, elaborate productions ever undertaken by Lewis J. Selznick, president of Selznick Pictures, was revealed recently by the Selznick production department, of which Myron Selznick is head. The production in question is Eugene O'Brien's sixth Selznick vehicle, "The Figurehead," now being filmed at the Selznick West Coast studios. The story was written by John Lynch, scenario editor of the Selznick corporation, and scenarioized by R. Cecil Smith.

Robert Ellis, directing the picture, is reported as having ordered three stupendous sets that throw into bold relief some of the striking scenes of the story written by Mr. Lynch.

Supporting Eugene O'Brien in his sixth Selznick production is Maurice Luxford, amateur golf champion of New Zealand, who has been in this country but four months. Prior to the World War he appeared with legitimate road companies throughout Australasia.

In point of costliness, intelligence to detail and all the other requisites necessary to a perfect production, "The Figurehead" is said to give but a slight glimpse of the magnitude of future Selznick pictures.

"Trailed by Three" Makes Big Initial Booking Record

THE reported signing of practically every house listed as a "Pathe serial regular" for the entire fifteen episodes of "Trailed by Three," the new episode co-starring Stuart Holmes and Frankie Mann, which is to begin its run on April 4, is pointed to by the Pathe serial sales department as evidence that another serial success has been achieved by that concern.

In the main, the reviews in the trade-papers, commending the serial as one having great popular appeal, reflect the opinions expressed by the exhibitors after "Trailed by Three" was shown at pre-views at the various Pathe exchanges.

The advertising helps issued by the company in connection with the picture have met with general approval by the exhibitors. The trailer reel has been highly commended as one of the best possible advance advertising mediums. The campaign book is one of the biggest and most complete Pathe has gotten out on a serial. It comprises thirty-two pages of publicity matter and ideas for newspaper and stunt advertising campaigns. The advertising layouts present a great variety of form and style for one inch space to full page layouts for the newspapers and a half-dozen or more suggestions for the exhibitor who uses stunt methods, in addition to forms for circular letters and very attractive lobby displays.

Building Studio in New York.

A motion picture studio is now being erected at Jackson and Westchester avenues, New York City. The building will cover a plot 224 feet by 175 feet. Stages, carpenter shops, paint shops, property rooms will all be situated on the main floor, and fifty dressing rooms will be equipped with all the latest improvements. Three floors, 40 by 70 feet, will be devoted exclusively to the use of directors.

The operation is being conducted by the Jackson Film Studio Corporation, William H. Weissager, president, and Ed. Davidow, treasurer. The executive offices of the company are at 1493 Broadway, New York.

Bonte Heads Select Art Department.

In placing George William Bonte, for twenty years manager of the art department of the New York Herald, as the art director of the Select art department, Lewis J. Selznick, president of Selznick Pictures, has added one of the best known artists of New York to what is probably the most complete art department in the industry.

For many years Mr. Bonte has been recognized as one of the leading lights of his profession. And the past score of years have found him supervising all the art work of the New York Herald. When the Herald was combined with the Sun Mr. Bonte resigned and last week joined the Selznick organization.

Marjorie Daw's Greatest Success.

Marjorie Daw, who makes her debut for Marshall Neilan in "The River's End," following a successful career as leading woman for Douglas Fairbanks, has achieved the greatest triumph of her career in motion pictures, with her characterization of Mary Josephine in James Oliver Curwood's famous story, according to reports received at the New York offices of the Neilan organization.

When the picture received its initial public showing in New York at the Strand, where it broke all records of six years' standing, the newspaper critics were strong in their praise over Miss Daw's work. The opinion that this was her best portrayal in pictures was unanimous. These reviews were duplicated all over the country where the film has already been shown.

Lucy Cotton to Star in New Emile Chautard Production

MAYFLOWER'S first announcement concerning the cast of its new Emile Chautard production divulges the fact that Lucy Cotton will be seen in the leading feminine role. The statement also carries the information that Director Chautard has completed the work of cutting and assembling the film and is now engaged in titling.

Miss Cotton's role in the new Chautard production is said to be the most important of her career. She plays the part of a fascinating woman possessed of psychic powers which she uses to bring about the vindication of the man she loves. The character, it is stated, is an unusual one, abounding in opportunities for emotional acting.

The actress is well known to followers of both the stage and screen. Her last appearance on the legitimate stage was in "Up In Mabel's Room" which recently concluded a Broadway run of six months. Previous to that she appeared with marked success in the stage hit, "Turn to the Right," in which she played for more than a year.

Miss Cotton's most recent screen appearance was in "The Miracle of Love," a Cosmopolitan production in which she starred. She has also been featured in "Sun-up" and played opposite Eugene O'Brien in "The Broken Melody."

Complete Six Episodes of Leonard Serial.

Benny Leonard, world's lightweight boxing champion, is hard at work at Los Angeles, keeping conditioned to meet the aspiring young westerners who are after his title.

The work Benny is doing now is a little different from the ordinary routine training. He is toiling along under the personal supervision of Wally Van and the direction of J. Gordon Cooper in making his fifteen episode serial, "The Evil Eye" for the Hallmark Pictures Corporation.

The first six episodes of the serial have been completed and Benny as an actor has been acclaimed by the cities as an absolute success, or as one of the hard-boiled critics said, "He can act like he can fight."

Another Bell Novel for Shirley Mason.

A third story written by Pearl Doles Bell has been purchased by William Fox as a vehicle for Shirley Mason. "The Little Pagan" is the title under which the story was purchased. This is to be Miss Mason's fourth picture in the Fox series. This will furnish the star with a type of role different from those in which she has appeared in her previous vehicles. The exact nature of the story or its locale is not announced. The name of the director is not yet announced, nor has the cast to support Shirley Mason been selected.

Miami Valley League, Soon to Convene, Adds Over 200 Members in Two Months

A F. KINZELER, secretary of the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League, with headquarters at Dayton, Ohio, states that this body has added over 200 members to its present strength within the last two months. Mr. Kinzeler further states that two organizers have been hard at work during the past two months and that wonderful results have been obtained.

These men are Homer V. Guy, former exhibitor, and C. J. Donlin, a local theatre owner. Both report that exhibitors of Ohio, West Virginia, Kentucky and Indiana are most enthusiastic over the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League and that they have given their wholesome support in the form of memberships. In some localities entire circuits of theatres were enrolled for membership, such as the eight theatres owned by Fred Dolly, of Louisville, and the Hiller Circuit in Indiana. Most of the towns visited by these men were enrolled 100 per cent., and no opposition was encountered.

Committee Will Visit New York Men.

With a present membership of 207, the new additions to the league will make it one of the strongest in the country. It is affiliated with the New York State Exhibitors' League, and these two strong organizations are considered models for every other group of exhibitors in the country. According to Mr. Kinzeler, a convention will be called either late in May or the first week in June.

A committee from the league will go to New York in the near future for a conference with Sidney Cohen, Samuel Berman and Charles O'Reilly, of the New York State Exhibitors' League. It is known that the Miami League is heartily in accord with every move made by the New York executives, and this applies especially as regards their attitude toward commercial advertising in films. The officers of the Miami Valley League will refuse any film which attempts to camouflage commercial advertising, and threaten to cut from the film all scenes in which the camouflaged advertising appears.

Another membership drive will be started within the next month, and it is hoped that another 200 members can be obtained.

"Bringing Up Father" Series Booked by Strand Theatre

BRREAKING INTO SOCIETY," the first comedy of the famous "Bringing Up Father" series, released by International for distribution through Pathe, has been booked by the Strand Theatre and the New York debut of Johnny Ray on the screen as Mr. Jiggs, and Margaret Fitzroy as Mrs. Jiggs will be staged at that noted theatre. The booking of the comedies is in keeping with the well-established policy of the management in seeking clean, lively comedies for the theatre's patronage and in this case the added advantage of having Mr. Jiggs in his first New York appearance is secured.

The first comedy is to be played for the entire week commencing March 28. Believing in the wide popularity of the famous comic series so well known to New Yorkers, Jack Eaton, the manager of the Strand, will widely advertise the comedies and they will be featured on the marquee of the theatre.

Many Newspaper Tie-ups.

Reports from all sections of the country indicate that the comedies will start off with a large number of advance bookings.

Many newspaper tie-ups have already been arranged between theatre owners and newspapers in which the comic strip featuring Jiggs appears. The theatres will announce the newspaper running the strip, while the newspapers will tell their readers where the comedies may be seen. Practically all of the newspapers are featuring the debut of Jiggs on the screen in news stories.

See How Prosperous They All Look. They're Metro Exhibitors.

Among those in the group are: H. Pitman, Royal Theatre, Clearwater, Fla.; C. R. Barcliff, Royal, Wauchuka; W. S. Taylor, Rex, Arcadia; B. B. Garner, Casino, Lakeland; W. S. Reynolds, Arcade, Fort Keyes; J. D. Woodbeck, Casino, Kissimmee; J. E. Williamson, Grand, Winter Haven; H. G. Griffen, Rex, St. Petersburg, and George Hoffman, Auditorium, Lakeland. They had a meeting in the Lakeland Auditorium on February 15. Mr. Hoffman is manager of the Auditorium.

Twenty New Picture Concerns Formed to Produce, Distribute and Build

Josephine Agnes Egan

Who sails for Japan from Vancouver
April 8.

Josephine Agnes Egan to Visit Cherry Blossom Land

AGNES EGAN COBB, sales manager of the Schomer-Ross Productions, Inc., is buying five cent stamps and thin paper envelopes, for her little daughter, who graduated from a fashionable convent last summer, will sail from Vancouver March 8 to spend two years in Japan, returning by way of China, India and Europe, the entire trip consuming the greater portion of three years.

Her uncle, Paolino Gerli, who is president of the Raw Silk Trading Company, plans to spend the next two years in the land of cherry blossoms and is taking his little niece along with his family and Mrs. Cobb's mother. He has taken a two-year lease on a residence in Yokohama and has purchased a seat on the exchange, preparatory to opening a branch office there. By the time she returns, Mrs. Cobb expects to find her daughter talking with a Japanese accent and doing the butterfly dance instead of the "shimmy."

Clayton White Succumbs to Movies.

The latest stage player to succumb to the lure of the silver sheet is Clayton White, of the well-known vaudeville team of Steuart and White. He has been engaged for the part of George Andrews in "A Whiff of Heliotrope," a Cosmopolitan Production now being directed by George D. Baker. In addition to being an actor, White was at one time a co-producer with Joseph Hart of many successful vaudeville sketches, one of the productions being "A Night in a Turkish Bath," which was written by Richard Washburn Child, who is also the author of "A Whiff of Heliotrope," White's first screen attempt.

Movies for Athletes.

Mirrors and motion pictures will be used in the training of track athletics at Harvard. Runners will have an opportunity to observe and correct their faults before the mirrors, and hurdlers and jumpers will have their efforts in practice criticized from the screen reproductions.

LOOK them over carefully, folks, and see what is happening in your territory. Below is a chronicle of twenty moving picture corporations, including producing companies, exchanges and theatre concerns, which have just recently entered the lists of the industry.

Most of the papers of incorporation were filed in Delaware, of course, but the list ranges from Brooklyn to Los Angeles and back to Oil City, Ill. A list of recent incorporations in New York State will be found in another article in this issue.

Cayuhoga Falls, Ohio.—Portage Theatre Company has been incorporated with $150,000 capital.

Crowds Like Racing Scenes in "The Sporting Duchess"

TELEGRAMS and clippings of half-page newspaper ads are exhibited by Vitagraph as proof that its current production, "The Sporting Duchess," is providing a race track treat throughout the country. Thousands of persons who have never seen a real racing event, are being attracted to screen theatres to see the reproduction of the great English Derby presented in "The Sporting Duchess."

The newspaper spreads and illustrations demonstrate that Vitagraph's publicity department has hit upon an electric idea with its racing theme. Editors are shown to have seized the illustrations of plunging horses as a live feature. Beyond the exploit of the race, the picture and its star, Alice Joyce, are receiving plaudits. The feature has been pronounced by exhibitors and editors entertainment of high order.

George Zeppos, manager of the Rex Theatre, Wheeling, W. Va., presents an example of how the film showmen are exploiting this feature. He inserted two half-page and three quarter-page ads in his local newspapers, focusing attention on the thrilling race track episode. The subject received many columns of editorial comment in addition.

As a result of this campaign and the intrinsic merit of the picture, he reported two days of big box office success.

Famous Players-Lasky Puts Mulhall Under Long Contract

FROM the office of Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, comes the announcement that Jack Mulhall, one of the most popular of the younger leading men of the screen, has just been placed under a long term contract to play leading roles in Paramount Arctcraft pictures, including special productions and those with noted stars.

Jack Mulhall, who is the possessor of more than ordinary good looks, a smile that is genuine and spontaneous, youth and buoyancy, made his first appearance for Paramount in "Wild Youth," a J. Stuart Blackton picture. Later he played a part in Cecil B. De Mille's "Don't Change Your Husband" and in "The Whispering Chorus," always acquitting himself with high honors.

Despite his youth, Mr. Mulhall is a pioneer in the pictures, having been with the old Biograph in juvenile roles.

New Picture for Constance Talmadge.

Joseph M. Schenck has purchased "The Perfect Woman" from John Emerson and Anita Loos for the next Constance Talmadge Production, which will be the sixth of her First National pictures. Miss Talmadge, who has been confined to her bed since her return from Palm Beach, has quite recovered her usual good health, and will return to the studio to begin work on "The Perfect Woman," which is an Emerson-Loos original story, on April 4. David Kirkland will again direct Constance Talmadge.

Motion Picture Concerns Incorporating in New York Reach New Record Figure

THE last few days have witnessed more concerns incorporating in New York State for the purpose of engaging in the motion picture industry than during any similar period of time since the motion picture was first conceived. During the last week, the following concerns have incorporated for the amounts named.

Krellberg Productions, $25,000, S. S. and M. J. Krellberg and Samuel Schwartzmann, New York; Sheridan Theatre Company, $230,000, Max Spiegel, Sol Brill, New York, and William F. Rafferty, Syracuse; Martinique Amusement Company, $500, Walter and L. C. Hast and David Urquhart, New York; Apologue Film Corporation, $30,000, Roswell S. Palmer, Melvin W. Kerr and Harry L. Adams, New York; Majestic Pictures, $5,000, J. J. Unger, J. A. Hammell and M. C. Hughes, New York; Louis Dean Productions, $150,000, Louis and Carey Dean and Benjamin G. Shean, New York; Art-O-Trade Film Corporation, $150,000, James L. Goodwin, Herman Spingarm and Charles F. Schmidt, New York; Dietrich-Dudley, Inc., $5,000, Theodore C. Dietrich, Walter B. Dudley and Harry Hechheimer, New York; Carlton Hoagland and Harry Carroll, Inc., $10,000, Harry Cohen, Harry Hechheimer and Isaac Bernstein, New York; the Kinephotolog Corporation, $1,000,000, manufacturing talking-moving-pictures, Abraham Epstein, Joseph G. Saltzman, of Brooklyn, and Barnett L. Bloch, of Freeport.

Kiss Her Again Corporation, $10,000, Etta London, Marion Elkin and Charles L. Kahn, New York; Number 1350 Southern Boulevard Amusement Company, $1,000, Nathan Matchat, Louis Solomon and Charles Horowitz, New York; B & O Amusement Company, $50,000, Henry Aestreicher and Samuel Rhoheimer, Brooklyn, and I. B. Funt, New York; Lieut. Europe Memorial Theatre Company, $1,000,000, Gustav Casper and Andrew Farley, New York, Frank E. Smith, Ridgefield Park, N. J.; B-W. Film Corporation, $50,000, William W. Brook, George White, Almeda C. Young, New York; the Wien-Kauff Amusement Company, $10,000, Harry and Benjamin Kauff and Irving Wien, New York; Olympic Pictures, $30,000, Frank Barns, William Sherden and Richard F. Weeks, New York; G. M. Anderson Enterprises, $50,000, H. S. Hechheimer, Harry Cohen and Isaac Bernstein, New York; Filmtitles Laboratories, $2,000, Fred E. Baer, William C. Herman and Charles Rosenzweig, New York; Frolic Films, $20,000, Harry Strouse, Ruben Bernstein and Charles Franklyn, New York.

Hodkinson Makes Drive on "The Lone Wolf's Daughter"

EXHIBITOR demand for Louise Glaum productions bearing the J. Parker Read, Jr., imprint has resulted in the signing by W. W. Hodkinson managers of contracts far in excess of 500 bookings on "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," all of these contracts being in cities of upwards of 50,000 population. This thrilling Louis Joseph Vance melodrama has attained a booking level in fourteen weeks not often equalled by the pictures of any of the greatest stars of the screen.

Louise Glaum's success in "Sahara," followed by her bigger success in "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," has "made" her as an emotional heroine. Through the medium of "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" Mr. Read and Mr. Vance have done for Miss Glaum exactly what David Belasco did for Lenore Ulric in "Tiger Rose"—made her a star of great drawing power and lifted her to the sell-out stage with still a third production, "Sex," just as Miss Ulric has reached that position in "The Son-Daughter."

It is unusual that a star through her fine work in two productions already seen by the public should play in 6,000 theatres, or more than 33 1-3 per cent. of the total number of theatres in the United States.

Vitagraph Claims Invention of Storm-Defying Airplane

A SECRET race that has been going on for months among aeronautic laboratories to perfect a storm-defying airplane is revealed this week by a report from Vitagraph. The film company appears to have "let the cat out of the bag" at the same time that it won the race for invention.

Vitagraph reported a week ago that it had obtained an airplane equipped with stabilizer and horizontal propellers, capable of flying straight up, sidewise or backwards, and of standing still in air. No sooner did this statement appear, than a half dozen other reports cropped up from aeronautical stations proclaiming similar achievements.

The film company is arranging to use its newly perfected machine for scenes in "The Girl from the Sky," a special feature which is now being made under the direction of Tom Terriss. The picture is an adaptation from the novel by Gouverneur Morris entitled "Trumpet Island." Vitagraph declines to tell who was the inventor and designer of its machine. It is expected that the full details of how it was designed and constructed will be released when the machine receives its formal baptism.

Goldwyn Aids Campaign for Better Films for Children

CO-OPERATING with the management of the Hudson Store, one of the largest department stores in Detroit, Harry R. Guest, Goldwyn press and service representative in that district, secured some valuable publicity for Goldwyn Pictures. On Saturday morning, March 6, a special showing of Goldwyn productions was arranged for the children of Detroit in the auditorium of the store, seating 500. This free performance was liberally advertised in the Detroit newspapers. The pictures selected were first year Goldwyn releases, "Polly of the Circus" and "Sunshine Alley."

The showing had the backing of the Women's City Club, numbering leaders of the social activities of the city. The Goldwyn productions were selected for the "Better Motion Pictures for Children Campaign."

"The Figurehead" Cast Announced.

From the Selznick West Coast studios comes the report containing the first announcement of the complete cast engaged for Eugene O'Brien's forthcoming production, "The Figurehead."

In the cast are included names of players whose reputations harken one back to the earlier days of the screen. For instance, Kate Price is listed in the production.

Ora Carewe, who has appeared in many Selznick productions, and whose name is known to thousands of "fans" is also listed in the cast. Among the others in the production who have appeared in many screen versions are Edwin Stevens, Anna Q. Nilsson, Joseph Gerard, Frances Parks, Sheridan Dows, Mary Forbes, Sylvia Freeman, James Durfee, Kitty and a Mrs. Devlin.

Lyne S. Metcalfe

Who is scenario editor for Bray Pictures Corporation.

Metcalfe Now Goldwyn-Bray Industrial Scenario Editor

THE Bray Pictures Corporation, producers of the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph—"the Magazine on the Screen"—announces that Lyne S. Metcalfe, formerly general manager of Moving Picture Age and Sunday editor of the Chicago Tribune, has been appointed director of the industrial scenario department of that company.

Mr. Metcalfe was for ten years connected with leading newspapers in New York and Chicago in an executive capacity and has been for some years a successful writer of magazine articles, moving picture scenarios and advertising. He was managing editor of the Animated Newspaper Supplement, the weekly moving picture magazine reel produced for forty-six of the country's leading newspapers in 1916. He has specialized in the creation of ideas and their development on paper and celluloid and is hopeful of the future of the industrial end of the motion picture business.

Mr. Metcalfe will conduct the bureau devoted to the study of the various business films to be made by the Bray studios and will superintend the writing of scenarios. It is the Bray policy to make this an important department, owing to the high quality of studio and laboratory work turned out under the Bray special patents and processes which have been taken advantage of by many of the biggest industrial concerns in the United States.

Enid Bennett Begins on New Play.

Enid Bennett, Thomas H. Ince star, is this week beginning work upon the production of Marjorie Benton Cooke's novel, "The Incubus," which has been scenarized by Agnes Christine Johnston. Elaborate interior sets which have for some weeks been in construction at the Ince Studios, will lend color to the picture. The drama will be directed by Fred Niblo.

King Starts Second Production.

Having completed "The Road to Arcady," a five-reel comedy drama feature starring Virginia Lee, Burton King is preparing for his second independent production, which will be under way shortly. "The Hidden Path" is the working title of the new story, which is said to be a strong story of the redemption of a man from the depths of degradation through love.

Universal Anticipates Great Demand for Wholesome Comedies This Summer

THERE is going to be an unusual demand for comedy on the screen next summer," recently predicted Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, and accordingly instructed his executives at Universal City to proceed with the production of light and humorous stories of various lengths and character, but all of them clean, healthful and wholesome.

"During the past year," said Mr. Laemmle, "the theatregoing public has been surfeited with an overproduction of morbid and emotional drama. Many of the big directors have vied with each other in the presentation of shockers and thrillers, and the result has been that the appetite of film patrons has been satisfied with palsied plays. Universal has not been entirely blameless in this respect, for there was considerable public demand for this sort of fare after the light and frivolous entertainment the people demanded during the stress of war times.

"Now, however, the pendulum is swinging in the opposite direction and I see a return to the lighter drama. By this I do not mean the slapstick farces that passed for comedy in years gone by, but real humor, contained in real stories, played by real actors and directed by men with a sense of the ludicrous. The public will demand clean, smart comedies, in which all the laughs are not derived from the subtitles."

In accordance with instructions from Mr. Laemmle, Universal has begun a series of comedy productions that will cover the entire range of humorous entertainment. Five-reel comedy features will be presented by Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, which, it is promised, will be as bright as any current Broadway farce. The first of these, from the pen of Edgar Franklin, playwright and magazine writer, is entitled "Everything But the Truth," and has just been completed at Universal City. Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran have the assistance of such players as Anne Cornwall, Katharine Lewis, Willis Marks, Nelson McDonnell and Elizabeth Witt, who constitute a strong cast.

Howe Completes "Restaurant Riot."

"A Restaurant Riot," a Rainbow comedy, has just been completed under the direction of J. A. Howe. In filming some rain scenes at the studio an accident occurred which suspended production of the comedy for the rest of the day. During the shooting of one of the scenes the hose burst and shot a powerful stream of water directly at the cameraman who was knocked off his feet. The deluge destroyed several hundred feet of film.

Jacobs Will Not Join Leonard.

Contrary to an announcement recently made to the effect that Joseph A. Jacobs, associated with Sid. Ascher, in Ascher's Enterprises, Inc., producers of "The Evil Eye," the Roy L. McCardell serial, in which Benny Leonard, lightweight champion of the world, plays the leading role, will not join Mr. Ascher on the coast.

Mr. Jacobs states, "Both Mr. Ascher and myself expected to join Benny Leonard and his company at Hollywood, where the final episodes of 'The Evil Eye' are being made, but since Mr. Ascher has left there have been such increased activities at this end of the line that I find it impossible to leave New York at this time."

The Unwritten "Law of the Yukon" Says That If It Is Cold the River Will Freeze.

Edward Earle, on the left, believes it, and so does Evelyn Greeley in Charles Miller's forthcoming production.

Report Two More Films for Paramount-Artcraft Release

SCHEDULED for Paramount-Artcraft release on March 28, in addition to the super-special, "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," are Maurice Tourneur's special production, "My Lady's Garter," and Marguerite Clark in "Easy to Get."

In "My Lady's Garter" Mr. Tourneur is declared to have put over another big melodramatic winner and a fitting successor to "Sporting Life," "The White Heather," "The Life Line" and "Victory." Screen fans like thrills and they also enjoy a good love story. Here, in an adaptation of Jacques Futrelle's well-known mystery romance, are both.

All of the Tourneur artistry of production is present, it is declared, while the cast is fully up to the Tourneur standard. In fact, it might well be called an all-star cast, including as it does Wyndham Standing, Sylvia Breamer, Holmes Herbert and Warner Richmond. The adaptation of the story was made by Lloyd Lonergan.

Izola Forrester and Mann Page, who wrote "In Pursuit of Polly," one of Billie Burke's greatest Paramount successes, were the authors of "Easy to Get." Julia Crawford Ivers adapted it to the screen, and Walter Edwards directed. Handsome Harrison Ford, as the husband, has much to do with making the picture all sunshine, and Rod LaRocque, Helen Greene, Herbert Barrington, "Kid" Broad, H. Van Bausen and Julia Hurley are also in the cast.

DeMille Ready to Start New Picture.

William DeMille states that he is almost ready to begin work at Hollywood on the second of his special productions for Paramount Artcraft, namely, "Conrad in Quest of His Youth." He is merely awaiting the arrival of Thomas Meighan, who is to have the leading role, from New York. Meighan went East and thence to Cuba to make "Civilian Clothes" for the screen and will be in Hollywood, presumably, early next month. Work will then be started on "Conrad in Quest of His Youth," for which a strong cast has been chosen, including Kathlyn Williams, specially engaged; Margaret Loomis, who is just now leading woman for Bryant Washburn in "What Happened to Jones."

"Dangerous Days" Proves to Be Big Box Office Attraction

FROM an idea and an ideal, the production of Eminent Authors Pictures has become a profitable commercial reality," said Felix F. Feist, vice president and manager of sales for the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation. "We thought it was a big thing to get the big stories for the screen and put them on with fitting casts. We are sure about it now. Such pictures as the Eminent Authors are making assure the exhibitor both prestige and profit. Just as surely as big stories are the only sound foundation on which to build big pictures, they are also the cornerstone or the keystone of the arch of exhibitor showmanship.

"Mary Roberts Rinehart's 'Dangerous Days' has proved a great box-office attraction from California to New York, from the California Theatre in Los Angeles to the Strand in New York and the Strand in Brooklyn. Queen's Theatre in Wilmington, Del., has booked 'Dangerous Days' at the highest price ever paid there for a feature production."

Replete with Epigrammatic Subtitles.

Vitagraph announces that it will present shortly a picture which possesses subtitles that exhaust the language of epigram. The picture is entitled, "The More Excellent Way." Anita Stewart is its star.

Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester receive the credit for the unusual editing and title writing. It is declared that throughout the subject, which is in itself an epigrammatic story, the subtitles are couched in the most adroit, vivid and forceful terms.

Melford Takes Company to Sierras.

With a complete equipment, a great number of extras and the entire cast for his special production, "The Translation of a Savage," George Melford has departed for the high Sierras in quest of snow scenes, which will form an important part of the picture. In the cast are Mabel Julienne Scott, Milton Sills, Elliott Dexter, Winter Hall, Ann Forest and a number of others. Mr. Melford will remain for at least two weeks in the mountains, and will return via San Francisco, and from that port will take an ocean voyage with his company for some scenes on the water.

Ince Thanks Press for Co-operation and Says Industry Is Booming Rapidly

BOUND 'round with optimism and smiles that mirrored the pleasures of a four weeks' sojourn in New York City, Thomas H. Ince and J. Parker Read, Jr., arrived in Los Angeles as prominent members of the local press and a party of relatives, and associates of the Ince studios in Culver City, bade "welcome home" to the crusading producers.

Messrs. Ince and Read voiced enthusiastic regard for the cordial reception tendered in Gotham by exhibitors and publishers of representative trade journals, New York dailies and various magazines devoted to the motion picture industry. According to the producers, their visit in the East was one continuous round of "get together" affairs and banquets and the interests assumed in the future plans of the "Big Six" Associated Producers was both encouraging and inspiring.

"I take this second opportunity to thank the exhibitors, motion picture press, New York newspapers and magazines for their most courteous and sincere receptions," said Mr. Ince. "The publishers and representatives of Moving Picture World, Motion Picture News, Exhibitors' Trade Review, Wid's Daily and other journals demonstrated a co-operative spirit that pleased us greatly."

Messrs. Ince and Read also expressed their appreciation of the welcome accorded during the stop-over in Chicago. Scribes of the Windy City dailies, included among whom were Virginia Dale, of the Evening Journal; W. K. Hollander, of the News; Rob Reel, of the Post, and Mae Tinee, of the Tribune, greeted the delegates at the Hotel LaSalle and devoted much space in their respective columns to a resume of the current and coming movements of the "Big Six."

Asked his opinion of trade conditions in New York and Chicago, Mr. Ince replied very emphatically that the forecast is replete with big opportunities for both exhibitor and producer.

Pollock's Career Basis of Success on Stage and Screen

TO have been a press agent, a play reader, and a dramatic reviewer, to top off as a catch-as-catch-can education in Leipsic, Germany, in Salt Lake City and in San Salvador, might well be regarded as a sufficiently varied experience for a successful American playwright, and that is a sketch of the career of Channing Pollock, co-author of "Clothes," the satirical drama, which achieved big success on the stage, and which Metro will shortly produce on the screen.

Mr. Pollock is a typical product of the American theatre. His knowledge of dramatic craftsmanship was gained not from the library, though Mr. Pollock is a lover of books, but from firsthand experience back of the asbestos curtain. It was this training that resulted in his many stage successes, and notably in the season's particular hit, "The Sign on the Door."

Other plays by Mr. Pollock which succeeded "Clothes" were "The Little Gray Lady," "Such a Little Queen," in which Elsie Ferguson starred, and "The Secret Orchard." His most recent successes have been "Roads of Destiny," "The Crowded Hour," written in collaboration with Edgar Selwyn, and "The Sign on the Door," which has been called the best melodrama ever written in America.

The screen production of "Clothes" will be commenced shortly at Metro's Sixty-first street studios. Arthur Zellner is writing the scenario.

Regent Likes Carey Pictures.

E. H. Bingham, of the Colonial and Regent Theatres, Indianapolis, has announced that the Regent will henceforth be known as "The House of Thrills."

In an interview recently, Mr. Bingham said: "An exhibitor should cater to the tastes of his patrons by all means. If they like thrillers, give them thrillers, and give them good ones."

"The management of a theatre is not so far different from that of the management of a large store. Both must give their patrons what they want if they hope to retain their patronage. It is much more difficult, however, for an exhibitor to learn the tastes of his patrons in a short time. We found that our patrons lean especially to pictures of the Harry Carey type, such as 'The Right of the Law,' which contains many thrills."

W. O. Hurst Will Be Studio Manager for Whitman Bennett

W. O. HURST, for the past year supervisor of production of non-fiction subjects for famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has tendered his resignation, effective on March 27, to join Whitman Bennett as studio manager. The resignation of Whitman Bennett as production manager for Famous Players was announced two weeks ago and is now pending. Mr. Bennett has signed up Lionel Barrymore for a series of pictures and will enter the producing field for himself. In his new capacity Mr. Hurst will have charge of the studio for these pictures, the old Triangle studio in Yonkers having been secured for production.

Mr. Hurst entered the motion picture field more than five years ago after fourteen years' association with either the production, direction or writing of musical comedy and stock plays. For the last half decade he has been associated with Kalem, Paramount-Bray animated cartoons and the Paramount Pictograph. In his most recent position with Famous Players-Lasky he had charge of the Paramount Magazine and the production of industrial and educational subjects.

Pathe Records Heavy Advance Bookings on "Deadlier Sex;" Big Theatres Sign

WITH practically every large theatre in the Metropolitan district under contract to show the latest Blanche Sweet production, "The Deadlier Sex," and with the leading theatres throughout the country bidding for dates, the picture is destined to be the greatest success of Blanche Sweet's career, according to all reports received at Pathe exchange.

As a result of its popularity in the Premiere at the Broadway Theatre the picture has been highly commended by B. S. Moss and will be shown at his Regent Theatre and at his Flatbush theatres. Many other big New York theatres have booked the production. All the Keith and Proctor houses will show the picture and the Fox and Loew houses have also contracted for it. In Connecticut it will be played at all the S. Z. Poli theatres.

The fact that the story is from the pen of Bayard Veiller, author of "The Thirteenth Chair" is also a factor which has been instrumental in creating the success of Miss Sweet's latest picture.

All of the action of the picture is in the great outdoors and the scenic background of the story is remarkable for its sheer grandeur. After the young Wall Street magnate, played by Mahlon Hamilton, is kidnapped by the young woman representative of "The Deadlier Sex" he is taken to the great North Woods where he is taught the beauty of nature and the narrowness of life when money-grabbing is its only inspiration. This angle of the picture has made a great appeal.

In addition to an extraordinary advertising campaign designed to appeal directly to the public and to produce results for the exhibitor an exploitation campaign has been successfully launched which will insure the widest newspaper publicity. A series of articles on "The Deadlier Sex" written by Blanche Sweet has been syndicated and the stories will run for a month in hundreds of leading newspapers.

"Girl of the Sea" Gets Big Booking.

"The Girl of the Sea" is credited with being among the first productions that have been booked solid over the entire circuit of Southern Enterprises, according to a statement by Tom N. Parsons, manager of the Republic Distributing Corporation's branch in Dallas.

Mr. Parsons, according to his statement, has started a whirlwind campaign on the Republic production, "The Girl of the Sea," and has closed contracts with Southern Enterprises for showings in sixteen towns, including every key city in that territory.

Northern Children's Society Gives Pearl White Nugget

DELIGHTED that Pearl White is making an Alaskan picture under the direction of Charles Giblyn, the Native Sons and Daughters of the Golden North, an organization composed of boys and girls born "north of 53," has decided to send the star a piece of nugget jewelry as a token of their appreciation for her work in "Tiger Cub," the Alaskan story by George Goodchild which is being finished at the Fox studios in New York.

The honor which the Native Sons and Daughters of the Golden North will confer on Miss White will mark a new era in the history of that organization, which is composed of the children of those hardy pioneers who blazed the trails into that northern territory in the latter part of the last century and the first years of the twentieth century. It stamps with approval the efforts of William Fox, Miss White and Mr. Giblyn to produce a photoplay typical of the country "north of 53."

The exteriors of the picture were made at Arctic City in northern New York. The interiors were constructed in the Fox studios in New York and are said to be exact duplicates of cabins built by Alaskan pioneers.

Read Announces Bosworth's Next.

J. Parker Read, Jr., producer of the Louise Glaum and Hobart Bosworth's productions, upon his return from New York, announced that Hobart Bosworth's next starring vehicle would be an adaptation of the story written by Jack London's widow, Charmian K. London, and the star. The two in collaboration have turned out a vivid story of the South Sea Islands, which story takes Bosworth away from the northland, a locale with which he has been happily identified in his past film performances.

Goldwyn Issues Good Press Book on "Dangerous Days"

EXHIBITORS who have found little to praise and much to criticize in some exploitation aids supplied by producers should see the press book just issued by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation in connection with the Mary Roberts Rinehart Eminent Authors Picture, "Dangerous Days," which is scoring a box office success at first-run theatres through the country.

This press book is filled with practical suggestions from cover to cover. Moreover, its contents are varied enough to meet the needs of all types of theatres. Many of the exploitation stunts presented are inexpensive, easily arranged and of the kind certain to draw business. The book will repay careful study on the part of any exhibitor planning to run "Dangerous Days," for even if he does not adopt the suggestions precisely as they are given, he is certain to get some fresh angles on the handling of a picture of this type.

The inside cover pages carry a strong advertisement worth display space in newspapers. Other advertisements adapted to spaces of all sizes, are printed on the center pages of the book; then come some good suggestions for dressing the lobby, catchy paragraphs for use in programs and a live page on exploitation, including several teaser campaigns.

"Slam Bang Jim" Advance Bookings Indicate Success

SLAM BANG JIM," an American, is living up to its name when it comes to bookings. It has sold to exhibitors all over the country before the prints were out—before the first showings.

Within the past few days extended runs have been contracted for at the Alcazar, Chicago; the Criterion Theatre, at Washington, D. C.; the Strand at Portland; the Majestic at Beloit; the 20th Century at Chicago; Dreamland at Akron; the Casino at Gary, and the Liberty at Springfield.

Never has William Russell appeared in such an assortment of thrilling and funny experiences as the role of the absent-minded and careless Jimmie Page requires. Harvey Clark, as a New York millionaire, traveling about the "wooly West" on a little mountain burro, armed to the teeth, and quaking before the sheriff's posse, taking them for stick-up men, brings many laughs.

Gives Cast of "Invisible Divorce."

Lewis J. Selznick president of the National Picture Theatres, in announcing "The Invisible Divorce," the third production for that organization, brings to light for the first time the complete cast assembled by Harry Rapf, supervisor of productions at the West Coast studios.

"The Invisible Divorce" is under the direction of Thomas R. Mills. It was written by Leila Burton Wells and picturized by Catherine Reed.

The cast includes Walter McGrail, Leatrice Joy, Walter Miller, Grace Darmond, Tom Bates, J. B. Ryder, Pidgie Ryder, John Barry, Claire Kane Barry and Peter Carr.

Would Ya Look at This! Take 'Em Off, Al St. John! We Know Ya!

"Ship Ahoy!" Love—ahem! "I never did any harm so I won't chase those two scared women," says the steward in this laughable comedy, released by Paramount.

Russell Working on Fifth Fox Picture.

Two hundred miles north of San Francisco, in the largest lumber region in California, with trees two hundred feet high as a background, William Russell, Fox star, is making his fifth Fox feature, Julius G. Furthman's "Big Jim O'Kane," under the direction of Emmett J. Flynn. Real lumberjacks have been employed to give true atmosphere.

Vitagraph President Plans Record Output for Company

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Vitagraph, has arrived in Los Angeles from New York to arrange for the greatest year's output in the history of his organization. He will spend several weeks at the studio in Hollywood, preparing to concentrate the bulk of his motion picture production in Los Angeles and in planning the year's schedule with W. S. Smith, general manager of the western studios.

Mr. Smith expects 1920 to create a record for the industry and is expanding his Hollywood studio grounds by ten acres and increasing activities there to ten units. Vitagraph now has twenty acres in Hollywood. Its original site of ten acres has been utilized to capacity and the additional ten acres will be occupied by more stages and permanent sets.

With two special features and three serials included in the ten units at the studio the magnitude of the production schedule has assumed unusual proportions. In addition there is constantly a regular star feature at work as well as a Larry Semon production under way and three separate Big "V" comedy companies working high speed.

"The Silent Barrier" Is the First Louis Tracy Offering

THE first of the Louis Tracy Productions, acquired last week by Inter-Ocean Film Corporation for exclusive foreign distribution, is "The Silent Barrier," adapted from Louis Tracy's popular novel of the same name. William Worthington, noted director, is at present supervising the direction of the initial Tracy picture.

The cast in this production includes Sheldon Lewis, Corrine Barker, Florence Dixon, Donald Cameron, Gladys Hulette, Fuller Melish, Joseph Burke, Jack Raymond and others equally prominent before the celluloid screen.

Inter-Ocean Film Corporation plans to launch an extensive advertising and publicity campaign in behalf of the Louis Tracy Productions in foreign territories.

Date for Directors' Ball Approaching.

Those who have registered most pronounced enthusiasm in anticipating the Motion Picture Directors' Association's supper dance, April 10, Hotel Biltmore, New York, are the fortunate ones who were among those present at the festive occasion in 1918.

The entertainment committee will have to "show" the guests of the previous function if they hope to surpass the unique features and high quality of entertainment, but from all reports it is expected the program will be most surprising.

On account of a great many members of the Association being out of the city, on location or directing elsewhere, a number of them have failed to send in lists of people to whom they would have invitations sent. It may happen, therefore, that some may be overlooked who would like to attend. In that event if application for tickets is made direct to M. P. D. A. headquarters, it will be taken care of.

New Zealand's Independent Exhibitors Would Buy Accessories Direct from Us

EXPLANATION of a cablegram received by Moving Picture World some time ago from the Independent Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, of New Zealand, which read: "Please notify all manufacturers Exhibitors' Association decided deal direct; present conditions unsatisfactory," is contained in letters and pamphlets received last week.

Secretary L. W. Fowler writes as follows:

"The word 'manufacturers' as it appears in the cable does not only mean makers of films but also means, and more particularly so, the makers of machines and other picture accessories. The fact that one of the best machines is marketed by a firm of film suppliers who are also large exhibitors is not very satisfactory to the independent men, who do not hire films from that firm because, it is alleged, they attend to their own wants first and the independent men come a very bad second. The same remark applies to 'spares' and other goods.

"Exhibitors therefore prefer to deal direct with the makers or, at any rate, not be compelled to purchase from opposition exhibitors. About half a dozen years ago the supplying of film in New Zealand was a monopoly in the hands of a firm of large exhibitors and it was impossible to start a new theatre. The advent of Paramount and Fox has effected a considerable improvement, and one of the objects of the association, the first and only one in this country, is to prevent the film supply business from again becoming a monopoly, which would be a most disastrous circumstance for those who have recently erected theatres.

"Do you think, Mr. Editor, that it is in the best interests of the business that supplying of films should be a monopoly or that film suppliers should be large exhibitors who crush the small men? We do not, and that is one of the many reasons for the association and the desire to deal direct with manufacturers."

Java Signs for Selznick News.

After penetrating way down deep into the heart of South America, Louis Brock, export manager for the Selznick Pictures Corporation, has announced that contracts have been closed for the sale of Selznick News in Java and the Straits Settlements.

"And while the natives are partaking of their favorite beverage," says Mr. Brock, "they will also have the pleasure of absorbing the live news of the entire universe as portrayed by Selznick News."

V. P. Whitaker Returns from Tour of Thirty Big Cities

V. P. WHITAKER, general representative of Select Pictures Corporation, has returned to the home office following a tour of more than thirty cities and which covered a period of more than five months.

Mr. Whitaker left the home office in New York on November 1, 1919, and returned on March 22, 1920. He visited every Select branch in the West and South and a number of key cities.

The results of his tour are more than satisfactory to the Select officials. Scores of big contracts were closed as a result of his co-operation with the branch managers and in many instances theatres which never before used Select or Selznick productions are now in the first run list.

From Baltimore, the last stop on his schedule, Mr. Whitaker hurried to Washington to visit his family and then went to New York to assist home office officials in preparing for the annual convention next week.

Secures National Pictures Franchise.

According to Lewis J. Selznick, president of National Picture Theatres, Inc., Max Spiegel, manager and proprietor of the big Newark Theatre in Newark, N. J., has secured the first-run National Picture Theatres franchise for his territory.

The Newark first-run account is considered by Mr. Selznick to be one of the most important in New Jersey, and the indorsement of National Pictures by this theatre is far reaching in significance.

Demand for "Silver Horde" Obliges Making Extra Prints

REPORTS from the Goldwyn branch offices show an unprecedented demand for Rex Beach's next Goldwyn picture, "The Silver Horde." The western division under A. S. Aronson leads the field with interest running strongest in San Francisco, Seattle, Los Angeles, Denver and Salt Lake City. J. A. Koepel, the Goldwyn manager at Seattle, claims that his section is the greatest Rex Beach territory in the country. Extra prints of "The Silver Horde" are being made to meet the demand.

One of the surprise productions on the Goldwyn list of current releases is the Eminent Author's picture, "The Street Called Straight," by Basil King. It introduces a new kind of motion picture and one that is proving to have much appeal. A. S. Aronson was greatly impressed with "The Street Called Straight" from the first showing, and the western territory supports his judgment. Washington, D. C., gave the picture a great reception at Tom Moore's Theatre. The Goldwyn managers, L. M. Remy at Dallas and Nat Barach at Pittsburgh, also report strong trade demands in their territories.

George A. Hickey, at Goldwyn's Buffalo branch office, is leading the field on the bookings for Jack Pickford's first Goldwyn picture, "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come."

It's Now Queen Pauline Frederick.

Pauline Frederick, Goldwyn star, has been chosen Queen of the California Raisin Carnival, which will be held at Fresno, the center of the great raisin industry. This carnival, an annual event that attracts thousands of visitors, goes under the poetic title of "The Carnival of the Sun Maid." April 30 is the date named for this year's festivities.

Miss Frederick will enter Fresno at the head of the colorful pageant procession.

Charles Hutchison, Serial Daredevil, to Appear in Four Serials for Pathe

CHARLES HUTCHISON, the star whose performance in "The Great Gamble" and other serials won him his reputation as a screen daredevil and stunt man, has signed a contract to star in four serials for Pathe. The contract effective in April and the first picture Hutchison will do for Pathe under the new agreement is to be produced at the Robert Brunton studios in Los Angeles under the supervision of Robert Brunton. The scenario has been selected for the first picture but no information as to the author or of production plans were given, further than a statement by one of the officials of Pathe that a picture on the scale of "Daredevil Jack" as regards settings and details of production would be provided.

Mr. Hutchison left New York Tuesday, March 23 for the Coast. He was accompanied by his wife and stated that he would make a stopover in Pittsburgh to visit with his parents there. He will arrive in Los Angeles, according to present plans, in the middle of April and expects to find everything in readiness at the Brunton studio for him to commence work.

Began Career with Victor Company.

Hutchison made his first appearance as a serial star with Pathe in "Wolves of Kul-tur." His second picture, "The Great Gamble," has been pronounced one of the greatest stunt serials produced. He is credited with having actually done all the stunts shown in his pictures and as never having called in the services of a specialist for a special feat of daring during his career.

He began his picture career as a member of the old Victor company after several years of experience on the dramatic and vaudeville stage.

In announcing the new contract Pathe states that the return of Hutchison to the serial program of that company is an important step toward the fulfillment of the announced policy of Pathe to furnish their exhibitors with the biggest and best serial productions possible.

Lichtman Reaches Coast; New Sales Plan Increases Business

AL LICHTMAN, general manager of the department of distribution, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has reached Los Angeles on the Western leg of his journey during which he is visiting the various exchanges of the corporation from which Paramount Arctcraft pictures are distributed. He has been a visitor at the Lasky studio, Hollywood, for several days, conferring with Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president; Cecil B. DeMille, director-general, and others.

Herman Wobber, district manager, stationed at San Francisco exchange, has been in Los Angeles in company with Mr. Lichtman and Harry Ballance, manager of the Los Angeles exchange, has formed a third member of the party on various excursions to the different studios and allied companies' plants in Southern California.

Mr. Lichtman was enthusiastic over the condition of business affairs throughout the country. He reports that the newly developed plan of distribution as agreed upon at the recent sales convention in Chicago has resulted in increased business and satisfaction in every district and in accordance with the recent announcement by Mr. Lasky relative to the movement for "fewer and better" pictures inaugurated by the organization, exhibitors everywhere are displaying the keenest interest in the current and forthcoming released by Paramount Arctcraft.

Tom Mix Returns to Scenes of His Deputy Marshal Days

UP in the Sierra Mountains, at Sonota, Tom Mix, the Fox star, and Jacques Jaccard, his director, have completed the exteriors of "No Limit Carson," described as one of the wildest and most thrilling features that Mix has made. This section was first entered by white men—Mexicans—in 1847. The gold rush which brought the settlers to the Pacific Coast started at the very town which forms the background for the Mix feature. In 1849, the Americans drove the Mexicans out of the country and settled it themselves.

On what is known as "Brown's Flats" the white men stood elbow to elbow and fought for the right to dig the precious metal from the earth. Each succeeding generation has found it more difficult to find the gold. The district now has become a great cattle center and has produced also during the past few years some excellent timber.

After the richer placer diggings had been worked out, Mexican labor returned. The peons from the southern republic were a bad lot and it took a strong man to keep them from breaking the law. Finally it was decided that the Mexicans should be stopped at the border and word was sent Arizona to keep the Mexicans from coming into Sonora, where there was no work for them.

The deputy marshal who received the order in Arizona was Tom Mix. The original message sent by Mix to the sheriff of Sonora acknowledging the receipt of his message is still on file in the town, where the exteriors of the next Tom Mix feature was made, and when the Fox star reached Sonora the sheriff was the first to greet him.

Ince Special in Cutting Room.

"Out of the Snows," the Ralph Ince special production for the Selznick Pictures Corporation, is reported having progressed so rapidly that final scenes were filmed at the Selznick Fort Lee studio on Saturday March 20.

Myron Selznick stated that the cutting of the picture is well under way. Zena Keefe plays opposite Mr. Ince in "Out of the Snows." The story was written by E. Lord Corbett.

Selznick Buys "Gilded Butterfly."

Myron Selznick, head of productions for the Selznick Pictures Corporation, announces that he has purchased "The Gilded Butterfly," from the pen of Earl H. Miller.

Earl H. Miller is the nom de plume of Bradley King, author of "Footlights and Shadows," in which Olive Thomas was starred by Lewis J. Selznick, president of Selznick Pictures. Bradley King, or Earl H. Miller, is a woman and not a mere male author, as her names would indicate.

SIMPLE SOULS

Isaac Wolper Predicts Big Production in Near Future of Well-Known Poems

IN a recent statement to the trade, Isaac Wolper, president of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, predicts that large-scale production of famous poems will soon become an established fact. The steady absorption by picture producers of past and current stage plays and works of printed fiction, says Mr. Wolper, coupled with the inflated valuation placed on available material, has brought about a serious shortage of screen stories. The field of poetry, he asserts, offers a logical means of relieving the stringency.

Mr. Wolper characterizes the works of celebrated poets as a "vast reservoir of splendid picture themes, waiting to be tapped." In the mad scramble for high-priced stage plays, books and magazine stories, he says, producers have neglected almost entirely a fertile source of picture themes of the most desirable kind.

The Mayflower president firmly believes that the ideas and beauty of thought expressed in poetry can be transmitted to the screen. He predicts that many of the great pictures of the future will be those inspired by works of poetry.

"The shortage of good story themes is becoming more acute every day," says Mr. Wolper. "The demand so greatly exceeds the supply that producers are forced to pay fabulous prices for available material. The scarcity is a very real and vital problem demanding a quick solution. Original screen stories are doing much to help producers circumvent the problem, but are not entirely solving it.

Poetry Inspires Fine Inspiration.

We do not look to the poem for plot or dramatic incident. These are mechanical things that skilled technicians can provide. Plot is nothing more than a method of story telling. Poetry gives us something finer and deeper. It gives us a living thing, an idea, a beautiful thought. It is ideas that pictures need most. Ideas lift a picture far above the commonplace level. Analyse one of the greatest pictures ever produced, 'The Miracle Man.' What made it great? Why was the public response to it so eager and spontaneous? The crux of reason is expressed in one word, 'idea.' The picture conveyed a poetic idea of life beautifully expressed."

By using the basic ideas of celebrated poems, and interpreting them by means of logical, well-knit, dramatic stories, Mr. Wolper believes that producers can achieve a two-fold purpose. They can develop a sufficient volume of stories to meet requirements and can offer to the public a finer and more meaningful type of production.

That Mr. Wolper has great faith in the adaptability to pictures of poem themes is indicated by the fact that Robert W. Service's famous poem, "The Law of the Yukon," has been selected as the basis of Charles Miller's initial production to be presented by Mayflower. Around the spirit and ideas conveyed by the Service poem, Director Miller is said to have woven a story of great dramatic force and human appeal.

West Coast Film Publicists in Association Have 'Mouth Organ'

THE MOUTH ORGAN comes to Moving Picture World every week from the West Coast—organ of the Motion Picture Publicity Writers of Los Angeles. It is mimeographed, and its trim-end columns call to mind and supply attendant shudders the weeks when Moving Picture World's staff poked the face of a typewriter, chased commas, captured quotes and wrote wide-measure for reduction and reproduction—al la Literary Digest's pioneering.

Ted Taylor is editor of The Mouth Organ and its mast head tells us that the Studio Publicists Association has C. Walter Huntington as its president; Harry Hammond Beall, vice president; Allan T. Risley, treasurer, and Emma-Lindsay Squier, secretary. Meetings of the S. P. A. are held frequently—but we don't know how often. Bi-weekly is the publication schedule for The Mouth Organ.

Miss Kennedy Heads Cast to Produce "Truth" for Goldwyn

PICTURIZATION of Clyde Fitch's masterpiece, "The Truth," is now under way. The Goldwyn company, which recently purchased the screen rights to the play, has begun work on the new production at its eastern studios on East Forty-eighth street. Madge Kennedy will play Becky Warder, whose penchant for little lies led to the brink of a ghastly tragedy, and the rest of the cast, which numbers only seven persons, includes Zelda Sears, who will portray Genevieve Crespigny, the same part which she took in the original Broadway production of "The Truth" when Clara Bloodgood was starred.

Lawrence C. Windom has been engaged especially to direct the picture. He needs no introduction to the stage or motion picture world. Robert B. McIntyre, eastern production manager for Goldwyn, said that the engaged cast was the highest-priced group of performers thus far engaged by him. Frank Doane will play the part of Stephen Roland, the scape-grace father of Becky; Helen Green will portray Eve Linden, the jealous wife who involves Becky in the net of her suspicions; Kenneth Hill will play the husband, Tom Linden, who mistakes Beck's amenities for other signs, and Horace Haine will take the part of Jenks, the Warder Butler.

David Butler, Newest Star of Screen, Says: "Watch Us Shoot"

HIGH cost of material and construction which deters so much building operations in other fields seems to have no effect upon the plans of moving picture magnates this Spring. Never in the history of picture-making have so many new studios been declared to be projected or under way.

As an instance of determination to produce under modern conditions despite inconvenience or barriers that would ordinarily stop expansion is cited in the case of D. N. Schwab Productions, Inc., who are preparing to launch David Butler as a screen star. The work of preparing the Butler presentations will be in the hands of a group of enterprising men who are "sold" to the idea of pictures to be made on David Butler ideas.

Mr. Butler has not, as yet, announced the name of his director of presentations. He says that when he names him the trade will be convinced of a sincerity in purpose to make the best pictures it is humanly possible to produce.

Youth, combined with experience quite out of keeping with his years, has given Mr. Butler an enthusiasm for "doing things" that seems likely to reach fruition in the backing of D. N. Schwab Productions, Inc.

Isaac Wolper.
President of Mayflower Photoplay Corporation.

Definite information will soon be forthcoming, but the actual work is progressing toward fulfillment in early and actual production.

Goldwyn Buys Irvin Cobb's Play, "Boys Will Be Boys"

IN line with its policy of securing the outstanding book and stage successes of the most popular writers of the day, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has just purchased the screen rights to Irvin S. Cobb's "Boys Will Be Boys," which was adapted for the stage by Charles O'Brien Kennedy and presented by Joseph Hart at the Belmont Theatre on October 13, 1919.

The picture possibilities of this story, which is rich in characterization and human interest, are deemed particularly good. It will be handled with a view to bringing out in full the humor of Irvin Cobb. As the deal for the rights to the play was only closed a few days ago, the Goldwyn executives have not yet had an opportunity to decide upon the details of production. It is probable that within the next week an announcement will be forthcoming relative to the players selected for the leading roles.

Particular interest will center in the choice of an actor for the role Peep O'Day, the delightful character that was portrayed on the stage with success by Harry Beresford. The story, with its rural background and truth to life in characterization and incident, affords other excellent opportunities for telling performances, but the central figure in the picture, as in the play, is bound to be Peep O'Day.

'Twas "The Speakeasy," So Censors Spoke Harshly

THE Manitoba Board of Censors could not see its way clear to pass the Mack Sennett comedy "Speakeasy," which is a travesty on the situation which is found in many "dry" localities. The reported reason for condemning the comedy was that it made light of the "police system." An appeal from the board's decision was made by the Famous-Lasky exchange and arrangements were made for a private showing before local police officials in order to secure their opinion in the matter.

Every Famous Players-Lasky Exchange to Have Exploitation Representative

ONE of the most important announcements made following the recent sales convention of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in Chicago, was that concerning the proposed expansion of the exploitation department. At the convention it was the opinion of all present, salesmen as well as executives, that the exploitation men had more than justified their existence, so to speak, and that the force ought to be augmented so that every Famous Players-Lasky exchange in the country should have an exploitation representative.

Both President Adolph Zukor and Al Lichtman, general manager of distribution, were unreserved in their praise of the work accomplished by the department under the supervision of Claud Saunders, and Mr. Saunders was forthwith given authority to so enlarge the personnel and scope of the department that practically every town of importance in the country eventually would be able to avail itself of the services of an exploitation expert.

List of Appointees Announced.

Since returning from Chicago Mr. Saunders has been largely occupied with the details of his department's expansion, and within the past few weeks nearly fifteen new men have received assignments to the various exchanges. In some cases old men, members of the original personnel of the department, have been given new assignments, the larger and more important centers as a rule being placed in charge of the older man.

The list of appointees is now practically complete, the following being the present personnel of the force: A. G. Birch, Denver; E. O. Child, New Orleans; Frank A. Cassidy, Chicago; Norman H. Dixon, Des Moines; Oscar A. Doob, Cincinnati; John P. Goring, Kansas City; Edgar Healy, New York City; John D. Howard, San Francisco; Benjamin Laskin, Charlotte, N. C.; Walter Lindlar, Minneapolis; John J. Maloney, Pittsburgh; Fred W. McClellan, Philadelphia; John P. McConville, Buffalo, N. Y.; Paul L. Morgan, New Haven; Hal Oliver, Omaha; Eli M. Orwitz, Detroit; N. K. Parkhurst, Salt Lake City; Norman Peel, Oklahoma City; Herman Phillips, Washington, D. C.; H. Wayne Pierson, Atlanta; Al Price, Los Angeles; Charles Raymond, St. Louis; Daniel Roche, Chicago; Wayland H. Taylor, Seattle; Fred E. Walters, Cleveland; Leslie F. Whelan, Dallas; Charles L. Winston, Boston.

In choosing these men, Mr. Saunders exercised the greatest care, picking none but tried and proved showmen. Every man without exception has had long experience in some branch or other of the show business, nearly all of them having served as advance agents of successful theatrical attractions and many of them having had previous experience in the exploitation of motion pictures. Not a few of them, moreover, have been in the newspaper business, an experience which has stood them in good stead in their present work.

Established Reputation.

"The best feature of the work of our department," said Exploitation Manager Saunders, "is the fact that we have sold the exhibitors on the proposition. When we started in not a few exhibitors were skeptical, and of these nearly all practically refused to be shown. But there were exhibitors—big ones, too—who welcomed the aid we offered them and gave their complete co-operation. The result of the work accomplished by our men in putting over George Loane Tucker's 'The Miracle Man,' the first of our super-specials, was an eye-opener. So when Cecil B. DeMille's 'Male and Female' came along, we had a record to point to.

Records Continue To Go.

"What happened? Where 'The Miracle Man' broke records, 'Male and Female' broke them again. The demand for the exploitation men increased 100 per cent. Then came 'Everywoman' and there were more new records set up. And so it has been with 'The Copperhead,' 'On with the Dance' and the other super-specials. Moreover, the expansion of the department makes it possible for us to give personal attention to second and third-run houses, and in many instances houses of these classes have duplicated the successes scored in the larger centers."

In connection with the work of the exploitation men in the field there is now being issued from the home office what is called "The Money Sheet." This is a compendium of exploitation information, each "Money Sheet" being devoted to a single production. The editor is Gordon H. Place, formerly editor of Progress-Advance, and he is assisted by H. S. Fuld.

Many Protest Against Direct Advertising Tax

MANY letters in opposition to the bill introduced in the House of Representatives by Congressman Charles J. Thompson, of Ohio, providing a direct tax on advertising, are being received by members of Congress. It is declared that such a law would have a tendency to slow up promotion work and restrict the business expansion of America.

"In these times," one writer says, "everything should be done to promote business expansion and prosperity—large taxes are to be collected, bond interest is to be met, and funds collected to meet enormous bond issues at maturity. Furthermore, our position as the financial leaders of the world depends largely upon our domestic business prosperity."

put into effect by which Bessie Barriscale in the future will star nothing but super-specials for Robertson-Cole.

The making of this new contract with B. B. Features Company, places Bessie Barriscale in a position to produce four super-features a year in keeping with the recent announcement of Robertson-Cole that only those productions that can meet the Robertson-Cole standard shall be released.

Fausto Theatre, Havana, Plays to Capacity with Paramounts

S. R. O. signs have been at work continuously in the Fausto Theatre, Havana, the first run house for Paramount-Arcraft pictures in Cuba, according to information received by E. E. Shauer, in charge of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Although the theatre has a seating capacity of 1,600, it is crowded continually during the exhibition of the Paramount-Arcraft productions, and is establishing new records for box office pulling power in Cuba.

The Fausto is owned and operated by the Caribbean Film Company, distributors for Paramount-Arcraft productions in Cuba, Porto Rico, West Indies, Venezuela and Central America. As first run house for Paramount-Arcraft pictures it has become one of the most popular theatres in Havana. It is located within a block of the new government palace, and because of this location is in a position to cater to the highest class of picture patrons.

BALTIMORE SUNDAY BILL WINS AT SECOND SESSION

(By Wire to Moving Picture World.)

The bill permitting Sunday motion pictures in Baltimore after 2 p. m. with referendum introduced by Representative George D. Iverson, Jr., of Baltimore, failed in the House of Representatives, Annapolis, on Monday night, March 29, lacking the constitutional majority. The Baltimore delegation was divided, eight members voting against the measure. Fifty-two "yeas" were required for passage. The vote was forty-eight for and forty-two against.

On the night of March 31, the bill was reconsidered and passed with the referendum. The vote was fifty-five for and thirty-eight against. Political action is reported as responsible for the change in decision. It will be voted on next November.

Rivoli Theatre Patrons See Miss Binney's "Stolen Kiss"

THAT large body of exhibitors, who, like buyers in the jewelry, clothing and other trades, get a line on what's what from things shown in New York City, will find some food for thought in the Rivoli Theatre's choice of Constance Binney in "The Stolen Kiss" for the week of April 4.

Not only does this booking make it nine straight for Realart Pictures Corporation in the Broadway houses, but it emphasizes the fact that the Rivoli has booked its third Realart picture. Others previously shown were "The Fear Market" and "Anne of Green Gables."

"The Stolen Kiss" is an adaptation of the popular novel, "Little Miss-By-the-Day," by Lucille Van Slyke. Constance Binney plays three roles. In the early part of the picture she is Felicia Day at the age of 10 years and her mother, Octavia Day. In the later scenes of the picture she plays Felicia Day as a young lady in her "teens."

Rod La Roque plays the leading male role. Others in the cast include Frank Losee, Robert Schaible, Bradlye Barker, Richard Carlyle, George Backus, Edna Davies and Ada Nevil. Kenneth Webb directed and George Falsey did the photography. The scenario was the work of Kathryn Stuart.

Insurance Cut for Picture Showmen as Chamber of Commerce Gets Into Action

ADD one more to the record of accomplishment in co-operation by picture showmen—the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, composed of picture men doing business in the metropolitan district, has secured an insurance rate that cut in half the long-standing tariff prevailing since the earliest day of picture exhibition. By an arrangement, based on representation of the justice of their claims, 230 theatres represented by this new organization of exhibitors, have had their rate reduced from 22 cents per seat to 11 cents.

The Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce is, just at present, little more than a "lunch club," meeting every Tuesday at the Hotel Astor for "eats" and conferences. Tuesday, April 16, the organization will be made permanent by the election of officers to supersede the following temporary roster:

William Brandt, president; Hy Gainsborg, secretary; Samuel Bock, treasurer; Adolph Stockhammer, sergeant at arms. Tuesday's election is not expected to create any particular "stir," as the organization is more keen on results through co-operation than it is active in "politics."

Sane Methods Achieve Results.

The matter of insurance was the first proposition taken up by the Chamber of Commerce. Since pictures have been exhibited theatres have been classed with bowling alleys, shooting galleries and the like as "risks." At the outset, considering the "store show," this basis was reasonable enough, but in later years modern construction and building for safety has made the picture theatre an altogether different "risk."

The owners of these 230 theatres represented in the Chamber of Commerce went about their mission in businesslike manner. They compiled a list of fifty picture houses of the first class, situated in New York City and its vicinity, and proved to the insurance people, with whom they were negotiating that not one of the fifty theatres had ever had an accident since the day they were opened.

Attention was called to the modern construction of every theatre that has been built in recent years; construction supervised by the authorities and strictly up to requirements. The "shooting gallery" type of "store show" was shown to be obsolete—and the prevailing schedule unjust. That rates were cut in half proved the soundness of the representation.

Will Inform Interested Showmen.

Should any picture showman desire further details they may be obtained by addressing Hy Gainsborg, Hotel Astor, New York. A pamphlet has been prepared for distribution among interested showmen, and will be sent on request—although it would do no harm to inclose a postage stamp for mailing.

What the Chamber of Commerce most desires to express is the success of co-operation. With showmen working together, so much more may be accomplished than through divided effort. The matter of insurance is but one of the matters that will come to the attention of the new organization. Sticking together and working as a unit, the Chamber of Commerce expects to accomplish a great deal more of benefit to showmen in this section.

Famous Players Signs New Contract with Ethel Clayton

THE re-engagement of Ethel Clayton on a long-term contract has been just announced by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which assures the public that this star will be seen in many more Paramount Arctcraft pictures. A particularly interesting feature of this announcement is that it has been arranged that in October Miss Clayton will go to London to make two photoplays in the London studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

At least two plays have been specially selected because of their fitness to Miss Clayton's characteristics and they will be made with a London background, which will, it is believed, prove exceptionally effective.

Ethel Clayton has always expressed a desire to make pictures abroad and is naturally overjoyed at this prospect. Further details concerning her forthcoming vehicles will be made known shortly. At the present time she is engaged under the direction of Paul Powell in making a drama titled, "All in a Night," much of which is laid in the Orient.

To Release First Goldwyn-Bray Comic with Cartoons and Lampoons April 18

THE Goldwyn Company announces a new release, the Goldwyn-Bray Comic, a single reel subject that will be distributed weekly, beginning April 18. It will be prepared at the Bray studios, as is the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph, also a single reel which is firmly established as one of the most popular releases on the market. The Comic will in no way encroach upon the specific field of the Pictograph.

The new issue is a split-reel presenting a comedy cartoon in the first half and what are termed "Lampoons" in the second. In material and treatment it will be unlike anything heretofore presented on the screen, enlisting the services of the foremost cartoonists and humorists of the country.

During the first half of the film, the motion picture public will renew old friendships. Happy Hooligan, the Shenanigan Kids with the Captain and the Inspector, also Judge Rumhauser and his pal, Silk Hat Harry, will again make their appearance on the screen. All of these characters are known to hundreds of thousands of newspaper readers, and their humor is more contagious than ever when conveyed through the animated black and white figures on the silver sheet.

The cartoons, produced by the International Film Service for Bray Pictures Corporation are the result of the combined efforts of Gregory LaCava, John Foster, Vernon Stallings and of Max Fleischer of "Out of the Inkwell" fame. The brief stories in which these characters figure contain many surprises of plot and crisis.

Jabs at Follies and Foibles.

The "Lampoons," comprising the last half of the release, present jabs at the follies and foibles of everyday sayings, together with the best jokes of the week selected from the press of the world. The Bray company has secured the services of an efficient staff headed by one of the cleverest editors in the country to make "Lampoons" a consistent laugh-getter. "Lampoons" will be like nothing else. They will have a flavor and tang of their own.

The Bray Pictures Corporation believes it is fortunate in securing the exclusive marketing rights to the International cartoon productions. The popularity of these funny characters, together with the long experience and technical skill of the two staffs, insures releases which are even superior to past pictures in this series.

Price Offers Billie Rhodes in Comedy, "His Pajama Girl"

THE inauguration of the five reel comedy vogue which will be instituted by Chaplin, Sennett, Lehrman and the other makers of comedies will find a forerunner in the C. R. Price offering of Billie Rhodes in "His Pajama Girl." While Miss Rhodes has graduated from the short subject comedy class, it was in this calibre of production that she built her big and original following. Now with her return in the lighter sort of entertainment in feature length, it is expected that her many friends who found her very much to their liking in the longer productions will also put their stamp of approval on this new venture.

The offering of this long length comedy on the state right market is considered a departure in this field. While "His Pajama Girl" abounds in thrilling situations, they are said to be brought out in such a manner as to intensify the comedy situations which follow. Miss Rhodes is surrounded by a cast including Neil Barrie, Harry Rattenberg and George Fischer.

It is the intention of the company to have its complete line of advertising matter fully prepared before making a sale. To this end a line of advertising material is being made up which the Price company expects will mark a new standard in advertising material to accompany a state right offering.

Appoint More Universal Publicists.

Four Comedy Teams Now Featured in New Christies

FOUR popular teams of players are appearing in new Christie one-reel comedies, the titles of which are announced as "Papa by Proxy," "Fuss and Folly," "Call a Cop" and "Oh, Doctor, Doctor!" In playing a variety of people in alternate releases the Christie company is offering the maximum of high-class talent in the shortest of its new releases.

The first of these teams is Bobby Vernon, with Vera Steadman as his chief support. The new comedies that Vernon is appearing in are "Papa by Proxy," a story written around the perils of taking care of a surplus of other people's children. The story is by Frank Roland Conklin and the direction by William Beaudine. Another new comedy with Vernon and Steadman is "Oh, Doctor, Doctor!" the first of the new Christie one-reel comedies to be directed by Frederic Sullivan.

Earl Rodney and Helen Darling are the featured players in "Fuss and Folly," which was directed by Scott Sidney from the story by Conklin. "Call a Cop" presents Dorothy Devore and Jimmie Harrison. The story is an entanglement in which Jimmie, as the lover, is mistaken for a burglar by the police and for a detective by Dorothy.

Laughlin Meets the Better Half.

David Laughlin, former manager of the Cincinnati office of Vitagraph and Miss Jane Carey, popular telephone operator at the Cincinnati Business Men's Club, were married in Cincinnati last week. Mr. Laughlin is now a member of the sales force of Universal, with headquarters at Detroit. Following the ceremony the newlyweds left on a short honeymoon trip to the South. They will make their home in Detroit.

Henry Siegel Is Appointed New York District Manager

OFFICIAL confirmation of the appointment of Henry Siegel, former branch manager of the New York Select exchange, as district manager for New York has been made by Sam E. Morris, general manager of Select Pictures and the Republic Distributing Corporation.

Mr. Siegel's career in the film industry dates back to the days of the World Film Corporation. Forsaking the practice of law, he became a salesman for the World organization and later was placed in charge of the Newark, N. J., branch. About six months later he transferred his activities to the Bluebird office of Universal in the same city.

Mr. Siegel then served another short period under the Bluebird banner and finally joined the Selznick-Select Newark branch. His rental, collection and operating methods were so efficient that he was transferred to New York where for the past few years he has been managing the Select exchange.

The recent promotion of Mr. Siegel as district manager for New York will be more than welcomed by the many exhibitors who have had the pleasure of knowing intimately his sterling character and honorable pursuit of all transactions concerning the productions of the Selznick Pictures Corporation.

Critics Praise "Fighting Shepherdess."

Anita Stewart's Mayer-made First National production, "The Fighting Shepherdess," which is playing at the New York Strand Theatre this week, elicited much favorable comment from the metropolitan critics.

The "Tribune" declared that in the picture Miss Stewart did the finest work of her entire career.

The "World" said: "The Fighting Shepherdess" is well worth looking at."

Similar favorable criticisms from other first run cities would indicate that the picture has a universal appeal and will add much to Miss Stewart's popularity.

The Moving Picture World carries a message to exhibitors in small towns by the hundred where salesmen seldom, if ever, visit in their travels. It is to benefit this great prosperous exhibitor element that the World is compiled—as much to help the little fellow as to help the "first run" man in the large cities.

Vitagraph President Aids in Rescuing Daredevil Actor Torn by Savage Bear

ARMED with rifles, shotguns, clubs and lariats, members of "The Courage of Marge O'Doone" company, led by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, recently risked life and limb to recapture a savage 1,000-pound grizzly bear in an exciting four-mile cross-country chase. One man was nearly killed and twenty others were severely lacerated.

Vincent Howard, well-known daredevil of the films with a reputation for fearlessness gained from his performance in Vitagraph serials, leaped from his horse at the head of the flying column and attacked the bear with a club. When A. E. Smith and the others came to his rescue the bear had torn the left side of his face away, gouged his eye; and the laceration across his body proved that he had missed being dis-embowled by an inch. He may lose the sight of the eye. Surgeons grafted new skin onto his face.

A. E. Smith, Director, and Welch Also Hurt.

President A. E. Smith and Director David Smith showed marks of the encounter, as did Niles Welch, the leading man, and nearly a score of others.

"Get the grizzly alive!" was the order of A. E. Smith when the giant beast escaped. It has registered in many of the scenes and desperate measures were warranted to save retaking most of the picture. Mr. Smith, therefore, instructed that the bear was to be killed only in an emergency.

The population of Chadsworth, Cal., and the surrounding country was aroused when the grizzly's escape became known. Scores of motor cars followed the chase. The pursuit led over roads and fields, into canyons and along precipices and once in front of a speeding passenger train.

Several times the grizzly was surrounded, but escaped again. Twice he was lassoed, but once he snapped the lariat with his teeth and again the train cut the rope as the giant beast leaped across the tracks hardly a yard ahead of the pilot.

Bears Fought Forty Minutes.

The grizzly finally reached the edge of a cliff and turned on his pursuers. Howard, the severely injured man, grasped the piece of rope still about the beast's neck and with a club attempted to subdue him. The bear, with one pass of his paw, ripped Howard from his left eye to his waist, tearing out half of his face. Had not Mr. Smith and the others come up Howard would have been killed.

All this excitement, naturally, put the grizzly in an excellent mood for a vicious fight with the other bear and a highly realistic scene was enacted under the direction of A. E. Smith. The bears fought for forty minutes with four cameras constantly turning. The one that figured in the escape was the victor, as intended by the story, and while these scenes will afford but a few moments of action on the screen in the finished production of "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," they will be unsurpassed as an exciting incident.

Philadelphia Broker Visits Famous Players-Lasky Studio

WHEN Chauncey P. Colwell, prominent broker of Philadelphia, visited the West Coast studio of Famous Players-Lasky recently, the first question he asked was: "Why and how is motion picture production such a 'Big Money' game?"

The visitor explained that his firm, Cassatt & Company, had played a big part in marketing the recent stock issue of Famous Players-Lasky. "I learned then of the millions and millions invested in this one great producing company, but I am frank in saying that I did not understand it. I have never been inside a motion picture studio and am here for two reasons—first, for pleasure, and second, to solve the problem I have been unable to solve thus far—and that is the need of the immense investment, why the millions and millions of capital is required."

Mr. Colwell, who was accompanied by his father, Louis Streit Colwell, Montreal capitalist, was taken on an extended tour of the big Lasky plant.

William Faversham

Who will become a star under Myron Selznick banner

"The Duchess of Suds" To Be Next Pickford "Big Four"

THE name of the forthcoming Mary Pickford production which will follow her first release of "Pollyanna" through United Artists Corporation, will be called "The Duchess of Suds," according to the announcement issued by Hiram Abrams, of that organization, this week.

"The Duchess of Suds" is based upon the international dramatic success made doubly famous through the efforts of Maude Adams, "Op O' Me Thum," from the pen of Frederick Fenn and Richard Bryce.

The production of Miss Pickford's second "Big Four" picture is progressing with rapidity, and from the reports that have come from the Pickford studio it is gleaned that this story has offered Miss Pickford far more opportunities for the display of her inimitable ability than any other picture she has done, for it is the type of story that eats at the heart strings and lends itself to a wonderful variety of accomplishments, and has that measure of humor and pathos that is inseparable from its realism.

There is a great deal of human interest, fun and feeling in this production. There is quaint comedy, proud humility, meek resignation, passionate protest, gay and grave incidents, in the story; in fact, it runs the entire gamut of human emotions.

Hiram Abrams announces that the production will soon be ready for release.

Marie Shotwell with Thomas Meighan.

Marie Shotwell, last seen in support of Benny Leonard in "The Evil Eye" and co-starring with Edmund Breese in "Chains of Evidence," has returned from Havana, Cuba, where she has been with Thomas Meighan starring in the screen version of Oliver Morosco's stage success, "Civilian Clothes," in which Thurston Hall starred last season. "Civilian Clothes" is being produced by Famous Players under the direction of Hugh Ford. Miss Shotwell will be remembered by lovers of the speaking drama as Shirley in the original production of "The Lion and the Mouse," and in chief support of James K. Hackett in "The Prisoner of Zenda."

Selznick Presents William Faversham as Star in "The Man Who Lost Himself"

WILLIAM FAVERSHAM has been engaged by Myron Selznick, president of Selznick Pictures, to appear in star productions. Mr. Faversham adds to the Selznick forces, which have already been brought to a high point in motion picture production, a personality that has packed theatres for years. His record of successes in "Who's Who in the Theatre" occupies two full columns and the favorable criticisms of productions in which he has appeared have filled many hundreds of columns in the press of this country and abroad. Mr. Faversham is considered an actor pre-eminent, whose screen abilities and personality are equal to his stage presence and talents.

The first production in which Mr. Faversham will star is already well on its way to completion. It is called "The Man Who Lost Himself," from the widely read story of the same name by Ernest Stackpole. The combination of story and star is augmented by the capable direction of George D. Baker, who has produced for the screen some of the subjects which have taken rank with the best. Among these is mentioned "Revelation," whose box office value was seconded only by the satisfaction it gave to those who saw it.

Mrs. DeWolf Hopper Plays Opposite.

Prominent in the cast of the Faversham production is Mrs. DeWolf Hopper, who has the role opposite the star. Her appeal in this part is said to be irresistible, and it is confidently expected by Selznick officials that she will capture individual honors in "The Man Who Lost Himself."

The initial Faversham subject for Selznick is described as an absorbing drama with comedy touches. It concerns an American young man who finds himself stranded in England, dejected and unknown. The manner in which he extricates himself from his predicament affords Mr. Faversham the same splendid opportunity for the characterization that won for him a pre-eminent position among the great actors of the American stage.

The work he does in "The Man Who Lost Himself" is similar in character and treatment to that which he gave the theatre-goers of this country in "Lord and Lady Algy," the biggest comedy hit of its time. As an exponent of high-class, refined drawing room comedy, it can be said that there are few actors who compare with Mr. Faversham.

Phil Ryan Now with

Associated Exhibitors

PHIL RYAN, who recently resigned his position as feature sales manager for Pathe Exchange, Inc., has become connected with Associated Exhibitors, with which organization he assumes duties under General Manager F. C. Quimby, which will bring him into intimate touch with the holders of franchises and sub-franchises in the association.

Mr. Ryan is known personally to thousands of exhibitors throughout the United States and Canada, and his knowledge of their needs and problems in general proves of inestimable value to the organization—particularly in its connection with the application of the sub-franchise part of the Associated Exhibitors' plans. It is with the holders of sub-franchises that Mr. Ryan will be concerned most directly.

In his new connection Mr. Ryan will work in close association with Mr. Quimby, with whom he also progressed while both men were with Pathe. Under Mr. Ryan's supervision the feature sales of Pathe swelled to extremely complimentary proportions.

Mr. Ryan has been in the motion picture business for quite a number of years. He joined Pathe on his return from France, where he served in the A. E. F. Previous to his joining the army Mr. Ryan was district sales manager for Universal in Kansas City, St. Louis and Omaha, during which period he established enviable records. After that he was responsible for the promotion of several successful motion picture ventures.

First National Now Reveals Secret of "Don't Ever Marry"

FOR the past month the First National Exhibitors' Circuit has been saying "Don't Ever Marry" in page advertisements in the trade papers. Considerable interest has been created around the trade as to why, what and how, no further information being available at the First National headquarters or exchanges. Now the secret is out. "Don't Ever Marry" is the title of Marshall Neilan's second independent production to be released via First National, following "The River's End," the well known and justly popular screen hit.

The second Neilan offering is an adaptation from Edgar Franklin's story, which created wide interest when it ran as a serial in the All Story Magazine. Every exploitation opportunity available in connection with this striking title will be taken advantage of in what is conceded to be one of the most extensive and novel campaign ever prepared for a motion picture.

"Don't Ever Marry" was adapted to the screen by Marion Fairfax, whose work in connection with "The River's End" attracted great interest in and out of the trade. The story is one in which the hero, played by Matt Moore, is a victim of circumstances throughout. The picture is now finished and will receive its final treatment at the Rothacker laboratory within the next week. A finished print is expected in New York within the next two weeks and prints will be available for review at the First National exchanges throughout the country.

Fay Tincher Plays in Next Christie Two-Reel Comedy

FOLLOWING the release of "Petticoats and Pants," the latest Christie two-reel comedy featuring Bobby Vernon, which, by the way, is Vernon's first appearance at the head of a cast in one of the Christie's two-reel specials, Fay Tincher will start work in a new two-reel fun film, production of which will begin within a week at the Hollywood studio.

After casting about for over a month to find a proper type of story in which the comedienne can appear to best advantage, a story titled "Belinda's Bluff" has been secured from Maie B. Havey, a scenarist of prominence, which will furnish the basis for the next Christie two-reel offering.

W. Scott Darling is now writing the continuity of Miss Havey's original story, while William Beaudine has been assigned to the direction. The story is a farce comedy, not unlike the comedy roles in which Miss Tincher first appeared on the screen in the D. W. Griffith company.

Earl Rodney, Helen Darling, Jimmie Harrison and others of the Christie company of stock players will also appear in the new comedy. Of the twelve two-reel Christie comedies produced last year, Miss Tincher appeared in six.

Consensus of Trade Press Reviews

Here are extracts from available reviews printed in the five motion picture trade papers. It is the aim to present one sentence that will reflect the spirit of the writer's opinion. The papers are indicated as follows: Moving Picture World (M. P. W.); Motion Picture News (N.); Exhibitor's Trade Review (T. R.); Wid's (W.); Exhibitors' Herald (E. H.).

The Strongest

(Renee Adoree—Fox)

M. P. W.—The greatness of the production is to be found in the simple strength of its conception, rather than in its development. Tells an entertaining story.

N.—Clemenceau's name may carry this picture by.

T. R.—It contains numerous rare moments, when the spectator is genuinely touched.

W.—Badly handled production with a big name attached to it.

E. H.—There are exploitation possibilities of great merit, which should result in successful engagements wherever the picture is exhibited.

Shod with Fire

(William Russell—Fox)

M. P. W.—As a whole, is not up to the William Russell standard, though it tells a consistent story, with occasional strong moments.

N.—Its romance, atmosphere and simple heroics will suffice to please the average picturegoer.

E. H.—This star of the ranges exhibits good horsemanship throughout the picture. The story is well suited to his work.

W.—Russell's popularity may help this over its own rough spots.

The 13th Commandment

(Ethel Clayton—Paramount)

M. P. W.—The story will undoubtedly please most spectators.

N.—A strong, real story, particularly timely.

T. R.—A production of undoubted box office value and well worth the attention of exhibitors.

W.—Very human and humorous picture, dealing with the lady-parasite.

The Devil's Riddle

(Gladys Brockwell—Fox)

M. P. W.—The number as a whole is produced with only average skill, but is strong in plot and continuity.

N.—It will please those who wish to see a romantic picture which ends happily, and do not insist upon thrilling suspense before the lovers entwine in the final fade-out.

T. R.—The story is generally convincing, even though in certain spots good manners and naturalness are sacrificed for dramatic effect.

W.—This one doesn't measure up to the standard of plain, unvarnished melodrama.

E. H.—The development of the story seems improbable in a few instances, but, as a whole, the picture is interesting and easily followed.

Alarm Clock Andy

(Charles Ray—Paramount-Ince)

M. P. W.—It will please and satisfy most photoplay audiences.

N.—Charles Ray scores again as bashful youth.

T. R.—Up to the usual Ray standard of story, direction and merit of the cast.

W.—Typical Charles Ray picture that should score big.

E. H.—While not up to the most successful Charles Ray productions, is a very pleasing comedy-drama, which should be well received.

The Daredevil

(Tom Mix—Fox)

M. P. W.—A swiftly moving, humorous production containing much action of a stirring sort. It is one of the best of recent Westerns.

N.—A first rate entertainment—one that travels on high throughout and which is punctuated with unadulterated thrills and humorous touches.

T. R.—Anyone looking for thrills, fast action and laughs, can't afford to overlook "The Daredevil," the newest Tom Mix release.

W.—Tom Mix chalks up a whale of a thriller.

E. H.—His plays have a well-established following, and this is one of the best of them.

Excuse My Dust

(Wallace Reid—Paramount)

M. P. W.—It is a fine production and will certainly please with its speedy action and excitement.

N.—None better when it comes to entertaining.

T. R.—Registers a very pleasing sequel to "The Roaring Road."

W.—Plenty of automobile atmosphere mixed with some comedy and thrills.

E. H.—The production should meet with approval that is universal.

The Forbidden Woman

(Clara Kimball Young—Equity)

M. P. W.—The picture is one that seems likely to meet with public favor.

N.—Artistic production of poorly developed plot.

T. R.—If properly exploited it will attract all admirers of Clara Kimball Young and also win many new ones for her.

W.—Conventional and ill-treated story disappointing.

E. H.—Is well qualified to duplicate the success scored by "Eyes of Youth."

A Manhattan Knight

(George Walsh—Fox)

M. P. W.—It is seldom that a melodramatic feature holds such a well-sustained pace as does this five-reel Fox subject, adapted from a novel by Gelett Burgess.

N.—Crook melodrama makes lively picture.

T. R.—Something is happening of a strenuous nature from start to finish, and the hero's opportune rescues and dangerous predicaments keep him so busy that an amusing flavor spices the events.

W.—Novel and very well produced crook melodrama.

E. H.—Interest is sustained and at no time is the outcome obvious. George Walsh performs well his strenuous activities and he has been given a good supporting cast.

Too Much Johnson

(Bryant Washburn—Paramount)

M. P. W.—A broad farce and, judged in its entirety, is not up to the standard of recent Washburn productions.

N.—Is not up to the Washburn standard.

T. R.—One of the most entertaining comedies in which this star has appeared in recent months.

W.—Not up to the Washburn comedy standard, but may get by.

Lifting Shadows

(Emmy Wehlen—Pathe)

M. P. W.—The cast is very good all through and the story entertaining.

N.—A propaganda picture that for thrills and excitement beats any serial we have seen in a long time.

T. R.—An excellent cast, a lavish production and extremely beautiful gowns worn by Emmy Wehlen combine to make "Lifting Shadows" decidedly more important than its story.

W.—Wild-eyed melodrama about stereotyped film "Bolshevists."

E. H.—Is a pleasing love story, with the Bolshevik movement in America as its setting.

The Loves of Letty

(Pauline Frederick—Goldwyn)

M. P. W.—Should provide a fair entertainment wherever shown.

N.—Artificial picture of a woman's ambition.

T. R.—Measures up to the exhibitor's demands for an averagely strong feature offering.

W.—Below the average program offering.

The Dream Cheater

(J. Warren Kerrigan—Hodkinson)

M. P. W.—Wherever its suggested meaning is even guessed, the whole product will rank as good entertainment.

N.—Makes clean, entertaining picture.

T. R.—In its present state it is just another movie gone wrong.

W.—Muchly muddled picture based on short story by Balzac.

$30,000

(J. Warren Kerrigan—Hodkinson)

M. P. W.—The majority will no doubt be pleased with the mystery surrounding certain incidents.

N.—It will pass as average entertainment with most audiences and be a delight to the admirers of the star.

T. R.—An example of a very good story gone wrong in the making.

W.—Below the average standard of Kerrigan productions.

E. H.—It presents J. Warren Kerrigan in a role well suited to his talent, with a well chosen supporting cast and a better-than-ordinary story.

The Third Woman

(Carlyle Blackwell—Robertson-Cole)

M. P. W.—The whole product is a fair entertainment.

N.—Might be classed as fair entertainment.

T. R.—Capable direction and clever acting by an all-star cast combine to make this picture a stellar attraction.

W.—Poorly produced picture that goes to wild story extremes.

E. H.—While not an elaborate production, it is well made and has many interesting scenes of life in Indian villages.

The Veiled Marriage

(Anna Lehr and Ralph Kellard—Hallmark)

M. P. W.—In spite of the production's defects, the picture contains elements which the ordinary public likes; and there is a chance for its popularity in the average picture house.

Marechek, approach Major Trevor and attempt to bribe him into giving up certain dye formulas, won by America during the war. He refuses and they conspire to get them from him. Learning of Trevor's regard for Enid Solari, they attempt to gain power over both of them, thinking by this means to accomplish their ends. Solari threatens to kill Trevor while Enid is present, but instead shoots wildly and thinks he has killed Enid. The latter has merely fainted, but Solari, overcome with sudden remorse, commits suicide. Trevor urges Enid to flee and he himself is afterward put in prison for the crime. Enid is made a prisoner by the foreign agents, who incarcerate her in an asylum. Later she escapes and hastens to the trial of Trevor, where she gives sensational testimony. The foreign agents are trapped into a confession of their plans by use of the dictaphone. Trevor wins Enid.

"The White Dove"

Robertson-Cole Special Presenting H. B. Warner in an Adaptation from the Dramatic Novel by Locke.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison

PLAINLY serious and less obviously ironical, "The White Dove," a Robertson-Cole special, has to do with those morals and emotions which are usually a century or two ahead of the laws supposed to regulate them. It is an English subject's point of view of the average Englishman's point of view of morality in marriage—it must be entirely that of the wife. The husband, like Solomon in all his glory, may go as he pleases. Locke portrays the Englishman as one who permits his wife to breathe freely at times, but lets her know that the rare privilege is hers by grace of her husband. It is stated in the sub-titles that one gentleman who has eloped with another man's wife is a "good, old-fashioned Englishman," so it is easy to understand why he sets up a double standard for himself.

But it is less clear how he can deplore the infidelity he has helped to promote and call himself a reasonable being. The theme of the novel is brought out in the visualization with clarity and cleanliness. Sympathetic interest is, however, not strong until near the end. The highly moral Englishman's intolerance of feminine frailty breaks under a strain and he becomes a human being. This artistic conclusion saves the story.

H. B. Warner impersonates his role with dignity. It is that of a scrupulous observer of the outward forms of society, who denounces everybody around him for their sins of commission and omission, including his own father and mother. That he repents at last and confesses himself a Pharisee compensates, but the part is without much of a hold on sympathy until then. The balance of the cast is good. The direction fails to bring out strong emotional revelation. The story as a whole is, however, satisfactory.

The Story.

Sylvester Lanyon's ideal of a "White Dove" in human nature is so shattered that he can only apply the term to himself. As a highly respected physician of good family he bitterly denounces eloping women, frail ones and even those who are fickle. He will have none of them. His first bitter disillusion comes when he is living in the country place of his father. Sylvester is a widower with one child, a sweet little daughter. For companionship he has Ella, the ward of his father. For remembrance he has the wife he loved and the mother he adored, both safe in heaven.

A fatal accident to a man he has always regarded as a friend brings forth a horrible revelation. His wife was unfaithful with that friend. Sylvester abruptly severs all ties, leaving father, child and sweetheart behind. After a year in London he finds that Ella is about to marry scoundrelly Roderick Usher. Roderick's father has obtained consent from the elder Lanyon by threatening to reveal a secret in the latter's life. Only an act of folly on the part of Roderick, a quickly discovered forgery, enables Sylvester to forbid the marriage.

Roderick promises to leave the country, but he secretly arranges for Ella to elope with him. Sylvester has the scoundrel arrested at the train and sent to prison. He escorts the unhappy Ella back to the country home. They find the elder Lanyon prostrated. Roderick's father comes and, failing to move Sylvester, proves to him that he was the first husband of Sylvester's mother, divorced because she ran away with his father. Father, mother, wife all guilty, his sweetheart fickle, Sylvester breaks down. He realizes his own humanity, forgives Ella and starts on a life of finer compassion than he has ever before known.

"Old Lady 31"

Emma Dunn Repeats Stage Success in Metro Adaptation of Rachael Crothers Play.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

RACHAEL CROTHERS' play, "Old Lady 31," adapts itself well to screen adaptation. As seen in the Metro production it is mild and wholesome in character, containing a wealth of human interest, enough of comedy, and sufficient suspense to make it a favorite with all who see it. The old couple, whose sorrows at losing their all are alleviated in allowing the old man to become a member of the household along with his wife, are irresistible in their appeal.

Fine individuality is given to each member of said home, including Blossy, whose unquenchable romanticism is one of the amusing features of the play. The opening scenes of the picture move rather too slowly, and could be greatly improved by cutting, and there is evidence of a slight disregard of moving picture technique in trying to stick closely to the lines of the stage production.

Henry Harmon as Captain Abe Rose is sure to carry the house with him, and Emma Dunn gives a delightful interpretation of the character of Angie Rose. Clara Knott lends distinct individuality to the role of Blossy, and Lawrence Underwood as Captain Samuel Darby, and Graham Pettie as Mike, are characters one remembers, partly by reason of their good work and partly by their association with the comedy moments of the play.

The Story.

The old couple in "Old Lady 31," Abe and Angie Rose, have invested their savings in mining stock which has proved worthless, and there is nothing left for them but to sell the old home. With the hundred dollars left after their debts are paid, Angie is to be sent to the Old Ladies' Home, while Abe must content himself with the Poor House.

Before their arrival at the Old Ladies' Home the inmates, some of whom were girlhood friends of Angie's, take a vote on whether Abe should be allowed to remain with Angie as "Old Lady 31," or whether it would be a disgrace to allow one man to live alone in a home with thirty "girls." The decision is against him. But when Angie goes with him to the gate to bid him goodbye the hearts of the old ladies melt, and they send a message after Abe, telling him that they will be delighted to have him remain as "Old Lady 31."

A few weeks of coddling, and a little persuasion on the part of Captain Samuel Darby, recently acquired husband of Blossy, the home's most romantic maiden, and Mike the gardener, causes Abe to "kick over the traces." And one evening, after he has been kept in bed for a week with a cold, he gets into his clothes, climbs out of the window, and goes to the life-saving station for a spree with the boys. Before the next day dawns

Abe is back in the home and when Angei tearfully descends to the dining room for breakfast to look for him, Abe is found snoring on the couch. A letter which has arrived in Abe's absence is then opened and it is found that the stock which was thought worthless can be sold for sufficient money to enable the Roses to buy back their old home.

Exploitation Angles: Don't rest until you have told everyone of the book and stage success of this story and have added that Emma Dunn, who charmed the country in the stage version assumes the role in the film play. The picture will be a tonic to the business of your better class of patrons, so make a special effort to get this class in. You should need little urging.

"Her Five-Foot Highness"

Universal Five-Reel Subject Features Edith Roberts in Delightful Story.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel Universal production, "Her Five-Foot Highness," will add materially to Edith Roberts' list of admirers. It affords her opportunities for varied acting, which she makes the most of. In the beginning she appears as a boisterous ranch girl, who wears chaps and shoots craps with the cowboys. Later she goes to England to claim her inheritance, when she appears as a more demure miss, invading the baronial halls of her ancestors like a timid "Peg O' My Heart." But her courage reasserts itself when occasion demands, and she wins out on her rights as an unafraid American girl.

This is a top-notch production of its kind. There have been multitudes of similar stories, dealing with Anglo-American relations, and there will doubtless be hundreds more of them, but it has never been the experience of the reviewer to see a better one than this. It has the broad underlying general appeal, the romantic plot material, a splendid contrast of settings and a thoroughly agreeable cast of characters. The pictures of quiet, cultured home life in England, disturbed by the appearance of one real claimant, and a second false one, are admirably done.

While familiar in its general outline, the plot has a number of original situations and keeps the spectator guessing. The humorous touches are also good.

The Story.

Ellen Wilshire, in "Her Five-Foot Highness," is the daughter of Charles Wilshire, living in the Texas panhandle. The father died, leaving Ellen sole owner of the ranch, and Martin Saunders, once Wilshire's attorney, is scheming with the railroad agent to get the girl to sign over her rights at a low

In England the relatives and friends of the late Duke of Wilshire are assembled to hear the reading of the last will and testament. Everything goes to them unless it develops that the Duke's brother, Charles Wilshire, left an heir. In due time Ellen is advised of the situation and goes to England to claim her inheritance. Her only means of identification is a note from Slim Higgins and other ranch hands, as Saunders has refused to give up her father's papers.

Saunders, now operating on another tack, goes to England in Ellen's wake, and endeavors to palm off a chorus girl who had once lived in Texas as the real heiress. Ellen, finding herself under suspicion, flees to America. But she is followed by relatives of the late Duke, and in due time her rights are established. She chooses as a husband Slim Higgins in preference to one of her English admirers.

A STORY of old Spain forms the basis of the Robertson-Cole production, "The Brand of Lopez." Sessue Hayakawa, the star of the picture, plays the role of a matador who is in love with an operatic singer, and while the story is rather insipid, Hayakawa to a great extent covers its defects by the skill of his acting. Florence Turner plays the feminine lead in a manner that compels admiration. She is the right type to impersonate the daughter of a proud Spanish family, and is never lacking in her conception of the requirements of the part.

The picture makes no play for the spectacular, and the bull-fight which might be anticipated, will be looked for in vain, in spite of the fact that the hero is a bull-fighter. The romance of the matador absorbs the first part of the production, while the latter part is given over to vengeful emotions.

This is not the strongest of the Hayakawa productions by any means. As already stated the work of the star is quite up to its usual standard, and the production is moderately entertaining. Mayme Kelso and Evelyn Ward also do attractive work in the picture.

The Story.

The hero of "The Brand of Lopez" is Vasco Lopez, a bull-fighter, who has gained favor with Lola Castillo, a Spanish senorita of old Seville. The lady, born of an old and proud Spanish family, is an operatic star, and arouses the jealousy of Lopez by accepting favors from other men. After their secret betrothal he comes to her home one evening and finds flowers in the accustomed place of those which he showers upon her, discovering also that she is escorted home from the theatre by a rival. In a rage he brands the back of her neck with a lighted cigarette.

At the appeal of Lopez Lola enters into a secret marriage with him, for which she is denounced by her mother, and threatened with disinheritance unless she gives Lopez up and returns him the wedding ring. On being cast off as an inferior, and unworthy as a bull-fighter to become the father of thoughts to vengeance, kidnapping and assaulting Maria, Lola's younger sister, who bears a child and then dies.

The child is taken by the old nurse, unknown to Lopez and put in the place of one born of the senorita's second marriage. When Lopez comes with his outlaw gang to destroy her home and put her husband and child to death the situation is saved by the old nurse, who hastens to tell Lopez that he is about to kill his own child. The close of the story registers repentance.

"The Harvest Moon"

Augustus Thomas Play Presented by T. C. Deitrich and A. F. Beck Features Doris Kenyon.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

DORIS KENYON is the star of the Gibraltar production, "The Harvest Moon," distributed by W. W. Hodkinson. The picture, which is in six reel, is an adaptation of the Augustus Thomas play of the same name, and is only fairly well suited to the requirements of the screen. The director seems to have had his troubles in trying to put the story across. After the first excellently accomplished work of fixing the atmosphere for the opening scenes, he has floundered hopelessly with the author's shallow story. The character of Jacques Vavin, an expert authority on thought suggestion, is not a clear conception; a more careful character study of this character might have resulted in better effects.

The role of Dora Fullerton as portrayed by Doris Kenyon is attractive, but the part is not overflowing with opportunities. Miss Kenyon dresses the part elaborately, displaying a variety of pretty clothes. Wilfrid Lytell does his best to make the role of Willard Holcomb, an actor-playwright, heroic. His opportunities are also limited. Some attractive sets have been used in the picture, and it has many qualities to please lovers of mystery and romance.

Length, Six Reels.

The Story.

"The Harvest Moon" has for its principal characters Dora, the daughter of a French actress, and Jacques Vavin, an expert in thought suggestion; Willard Holcomb, a young actor-playwright; Jacques Vavin; James Fullerton, the divorced husband of Dora's mother, and other minor characters.

Madame Vavin, whose marriage to her second husband in England was not recorded in France, died alone in a small French village. A cable from the mistress of the inn brings her divorced husband and his scornful sister, who take the child back with them to America. In response to a letter from Madame Vavin, written just before her death, her second husband, who has searched France to find her, arrives on the scene to find nothing but his baby's cradle and a tiny bootee.

In America Dora grows up in the belief that she is the daughter of James Fullerton. When she reaches womanhood her ambition leads to the stage. Her first venture is with an unscrupulous manager, from whom she is rescued by Willard Holcomb, who is also a member of the company. Later Holcomb writes a play and requests that Dora appear in the leading role. Her foster father and aunt disapprove of her adopting a stage career, but the appearance on the scene of Jacques Vavin, who is lecturing in America on Thought Suggestion, results in a clearing up of the situation, and the smoothing out of the romance which has sprung up between the young people. Considerable complication arises in bringing about the recognition of father by daughter, and vice versa.

Exploitation Angles: Play up Miss Kenyon in this adaptation from the Thomas play. Don't work too hard on this, but let it slide through, making your chief appeal with the fact that it is a story of the stage.

"The Tattlers"

Madlaine Traverse Featured in Five-Reel Fox Subject of Dramatic Strength.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS Fox subject, "The Tattlers," is a notable one from a dramatic standpoint, one of the best of recent features judged from the standpoint of sheer acting ability. The performers, who include Madlaine Traverse, Jack Rollens and Ben Deely in the leading roles, have been given a full measure of "something to do," and they do it with remarkable skill. The production stands out in marked contrast with many features of late that expect a particular star to carry a slight story to success on the strength of his or her personality.

"The Tattlers" is strong in story interest and almost flawless in the matter of direction. It deals convincingly with a situation that in itself reflects a hard and almost sordid phase of real life, but it is real and a strong presentation such as this carries a valuable message to the world. Many a woman has found herself in the same compromising position as that of Mrs. Rutherford and some have not come through it so successfully.

Madlaine Traverse portrays a genuine woman, of the trustful, unsuspecting sort, and Ben Deely pictures the conscienceless villain in compelling fashion. Jack Rollens presents the juvenile role in an intelligent, forceful manner.

The production as a whole is powerful and expertly made.

The Story.

Bess Rutherford, in "The Tattlers," is a happy wife and mother, except for the one skeleton in the family closet. This is the fact that her husband, Tom Rutherford, drinks heavily. They give a party one evening, at which Tom gets intoxicated and tries to teach his son, Jack, to drink. He makes such a degrading exhibition of himself that Mrs. Rutherford is humiliated and she listens to a long time admirer, Jim Carpenter, when he advises her to procure a divorce from Tom and come to him.

In the subsequent scenes Bess has procured her divorce and gone to New York City with Jim. They are seen choosing an apartment, where she is installed surrounded by every luxury. But Jim takes occasion to postpone the promised marriage frequently.

In the course of time young Jack Rutherford, a Yale student, visits his mother in New York. He suspects nothing until Mrs. Dexter, mother of his sweetheart, asks him not to see the girl again. Jack finally learns that his mother is an object of scandalous comment. He confronts Jim Carpenter, who also is secretly hoping to win Gladys Dexter, and in the resulting scene Carpenter is shot and killed. The tragic end is softened by the fact that the New York part of the story is all a dream, and the Rutherfords are happily reunited at the close.

"Vanishing Trails"

Selig Serial Has Splendid Western Atmosphere and Features Franklyn Farnum.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE Selig serial, "Vanishing Trails," foreign rights of which are being handled by Donald Campbell, is rich in western atmosphere, and presents among other interesting features some remarkable horseback riding. Most of the horses used in the picture are genuine western cayuses, and gallop over hazardous slopes in a way which proves that they are "to the manner born." The picture is filled with gun-fighting men who do not flinch at the whizz of a bullet, and in fact, it is not difficult to recall the days of the real wild west when looking at the picture.

Franklyn Farnum is "Silent Joe," an adventurer, and one of the mysteries of the picture lies in the question mark which enters the mind of the spectator after each appearance of "Silent Joe." The production is filled with suspense and mystery. There is a man called "The Shadow," who lives in a cave filled with chemical contrivances, who is always on the job with his bow and arrow and his faithful dog when a rescue of the hero is necessary.

The struggle which the serial depicts originates in the home of a financier named Stillwell, who leaves his guests to bring papers which show to whom he has decided to leave his fortune, which he has converted into a solid gold cube. Just as he takes the papers and the cube from his safe and is about to return to his friends, he is shot by an invisible hand. "Silent Joe," just returned from adventures abroad, also enters the room at that moment and escapes with a paper on which is imprinted the thumb mark of the assassin. Another prominent character of the story is Stillwell's butler, whose hatred for his master is very marked. After Stillwell's death he hurries into the West and becomes a member of the desert devils, who guard the rights of one Durant in the land of vanishing trails. Here the life of no man is safe, and as the serial progresses "Silent Joe" is fighting for his life, in an effort to discover Stillwell's assassin.

The pretty heroine of the play Lou Durant, daughter of the dreaded Steve Durant, secret master of the desert devils, is played by Mary Anderson. Other members of the cast are Luke Lee, Buster Pegg, W. Orlamand, Bud Osborne and the splendid dog Prince, whose exploits are tremendously entertaining. Prince appears to know almost as much as the ordinary human being. He is present when danger threatens, and is his master's most valuable agent in averting disaster for Durant's victims.

One of the strong points of this serial lies in the fact that it is different from the average production of its kind. It has thrills in plenty. The action, which in the opening seemed a trifle slow, develops speed as the picture advances. The serial consists of fifteen two-reel episodes, and was directed by Leon de La Mothe.

Comments

THE PRICE OF A GOOD SNEEZE (Fox). A very laughable Mutt and Jeff animated, in which the pair conduct a school for teaching aesthetic dancing. The antics of both characters are exceptionally funny in this and the climax comes when Mrs. Mutt makes her appearance.

THE CHEMIST (Fox). A characteristic Mutt and Jeff animated, in which they test the properties of gas, drugs and chemicals. The results are funny and are pictured in the usual amusing way.

SQUEAKS AND SQUAKS (Vitagraph). Jimmie Aubrey is the star performer of this comedy in which a Ford car affords a great deal of the fun. The hero is in love with the daughter of the village blacksmith, and when the landlord comes to get the rent, he helps his prospective father-in-law to get the best of him. The landlord hides some money under the seats of his car, and the money stolen by the hero is used to pay the rent. The eloping of the blacksmith's daughter with the landlord, to save her lover and father from jail affords an opportunity for a funny chase in which a horse carriage, a Ford car, and a motorcycle take part.

A NOSE IN A BOOK (Western), April 17.—There is a strong juvenile interest in this two-reel subject, written by Henry Murray and directed by Reaves Eason. The latter's small son, who has appeared before in pictures, plays the role of Bobby Carson. He is kidnapped by bandits and later lost on the desert. The desert scenes, in the second reel, are unusual and furnish a strong climax to the story. The opening reel contains typical ranch humor. Ed (Hoot) Gibson, Mildred Moore and George Field have the adult roles. The picture should have a particular appeal for children.

BETTER EQUIPMENT

CONDUCTED BY E.T. KEYSER

Are You About to Equip a Road Show? Then This Article Will Interest You

FROM C. W. Gorden, of Pittsfield, Massachusetts, comes the following inquiry in regard to the equipment for a first class road show.

Any information you can give the writer on the detailed make up of a first class road equipment will be greatly appreciated. Would not be satisfied with projection that was not equal to the best even if I have to pack a regular Power's or Simplex, for I might sometime wish to use it in a permanent location. What do you suggest in that line? What auto stands up best whose engine could be used to drive the D. C. generator, and what make and capacity of generator has been found serviceable and adaptable.

What booth meets, in general, the requirements of over-exacting authorities?

Any information will be of great help to the writer, who is generally familiar with permanent equipment, but not with road apparatus.

We turned the manufacturers loose on the problem and the following suggestions which resulted are likely to prove of value to many other prospective showmen besides Mr. Gordon.

Nicholas Power Company Advises.

With the rapidly increasing demand for motion pictures in various fields not covered by the regular picture houses, theatres and buildings possessing a permanent projector equipment, a need has developed for a practical road equipment. In many instances only the standard projectors will satisfy the public even in the small and more remote localities.

As a rule, people in these places have seen a professional performance at least once and are apt to demand that all shows shall approximate such performances. Therefore, to obtain satisfactory results the traveling exhibitor will find that he requires one of the well-known standard projectors. These will eventually prove both profitable and economical and their use involves no special difficulties that cannot be overcome.

The Bureau of Commercial Economics is using Power's Projectors in all parts of the world and has fully demonstrated that the traveling projection equipment is practical under the most trying conditions. Trucks sent out by the Bureau of Commercial Economics have been sent to the plantations in Java and to the colonies of the Dutch East Indian Government, Iceland, Greenland, the Straits of Belle Isle in Newfoundland, Battle Harbor on the East Coast of Labrador.

Tell Us Your Troubles

WHENEVER any exhibitor or house manager runs up against a snag in the matter of equipment—its choice, use or installation; whenever you are in doubt as to just what you should do to make a new house attractive or improve an old one—ask the "Better Equipment" Department and we will dig up the dope for you. BUT don't forget to enclose a stamped return envelope with your inquiry.

From Chile to the Levant.

At the mines in Chile, Peru and Bolivia, along the Amazon and throughout the Orient and Levant, the Bureau of Commercial Economics is also operating on a large scale with traveling projection equipment. Surely if the traveling projection equipment can be operated with little trouble in such remote places, the American exhibitor ought to anticipate no difficulties that his own energy, enterprise and ability cannot easily overcome.

The Excelite Incandescent Lamp equipment, developed and manufactured by the Nicholas Power Company, Inc., has made it possible for traveling exhibitors to obtain a light weight electrically operated motion picture projector.

The exhibitor can operate this from a small $\frac{3}{4}$ k. w. 32-volt gasoline electric generator which will supply ample electric force. The Excelite Incandescent Lamp equipped projector operating with T-20 600 watt, 30 volt, 20 ampere Monoplane Mazda lamps, will give excellent results where the throw does not exceed 75 ft. and the picture is not to be larger than 9x12 ft.; if, however, the T-20 900 watt, 30 volt, 30 ampere Monoplane Mazda lamps are used a picture 10x13 ft. may be projected for throws not exceeding 90 ft.

A Weight Saver.

One advantage of the Excelite Incandescent lamp has over the arc lamp is that it gives a constant and brilliant illumination, absolutely free from flicker. Then again the incandescent lamp equipment considered in its entirety is much lower in cost than the arc lamp outfit; and last, but not least, the weight of the small gasoline generators above described is considerably less than the heavier type required to operate an arc equipped motion picture projector.

There are numerous makes of gasoline electric generators on the market, capable of developing 32 volts and 20 amperes, and if equipped with an 80 ampere hour storage battery, a generator of this type is of ample capacity for the operation of the 600-watt lamp; while if a 160-ampere hour storage battery is used, the 900-watt lamp may be operated with equal success.

Traveling exhibitors have encountered their chief difficulties through having on their circuit towns not provided with local electrical service, but this trouble has been successfully overcome by the use of the gasoline electric generator.

The type of illuminant used has heretofore

A. F. WILLIAMS, 166 W. Adams St., Chicago

been a serious problem for traveling exhibitors, as the calcium gas lamp, known as the "lime-light," is very unsatisfactory. Whether traveling by rail, horse-drawn vehicle or automobile, the traveling exhibitor has been compelled to use this "lime-light" as an illuminant and its cost was almost prohibitive. Costing three to four dollars an hour to operate and throwing a light which would not permit showing pictures much over thirty-five feet, the "lime-light" was, to say the least, "unsatisfactory" as an illuminant for moving pictures.

Economy of Operation.

Manufacturers of gasoline electric generators claim that they may be operated at an approximate cost of from five to six cents an hour. It will, therefore, be easily realized by the prospective buyer of a road equipment that, although the initial cost of the generator equipment is much higher than the first outlay for the calcium gas outfit, the gasoline generator will pay for itself within a short time.

When the requirements of the traveling exhibitor do not exceed that of the Excelite equipment, he may purchase a small generator and install it in a light weight automobile.

This will be large enough to accommodate such other equipment as he may require in addition to the projector. Our exhibitor is ready for business and may travel through the various localities on his circuit quite independent of the local electric service.

Upon arriving at his destination the exhibitor can easily install the projector in the building, the automobile is placed close by and a length of cable run from the panel board of the generator to the projector. The exhibitor may now proceed with the show. When the performance is over, the projection apparatus is easily dismantled, placed in the automobile and the journey to the next town made either the same night or the first thing in the morning. In this way the circuit may be covered in accordance with schedule.

Outside Lights As Well.

The generator will not only supply ample electrical energy for the operation of the motion picture projector, but will also furnish light enough for a few lamps outside of the building. Traveling exhibitors will readily see that this is excellent advertising and attracts a great deal of attention in the smaller towns. The resourceful exhibitor may even go as far as to include in his equipment a small circuit of lights that may be readily installed in the various halls in which he exhibits. If properly designed this circuit can be taken down with the same ease as that with which it is put up. A switch in the booth is used for controlling these lights and under these conditions, it is the opinion of the writer, the small town community may enjoy pictures projected in a manner closely rivaling the performances given in the larger towns.

The lamp equipment we have described would not prove practical for the exhibitor whose requirements are such that he will be compelled to project pictures of larger proportions or at greater distances than the specifications mentioned. Under these conditions, he should consider the use of a projector equipped with an arc lamp, operated by direct current.

Requirements of Arc Light.

The electric arc lamp used in motion picture projectors and operated by direct current, requires a gasoline electric generator capable of developing 3 k. w., or, in other words, 40 volts and from 25 to 50 amperes. The ½ k. w. generators vary in weight from 175 to probably 550 lbs., while the 3 k. w. generators average from 800 to 1,500 lbs.

Generators of this type greatly add to the weight of the equipment, but offer the advantage of greater illuminating power. Pictures much larger in size and at greater distances may be projected with excellent results.

Many exhibitors are of the opinion that by simply purchasing the electric generator, this can be installed in an automobile and operated by the automobile engine. However, in most cases this is not practical, for the ½ k. w. generator requires only from 1½ to 2 h. p. to drive them, and the 3 k. w. generator a 5 to 6 h. p. engine.

While it is true that any one of the standard projectors will give good results, for road work, Powers seems to be particularly well adapted to the needs of the traveling exhibitor. It possesses certain points of lightness and strength which make it well suited to road work and the fact that it has been so extensively used by the Bureau of Commercial Economics must be taken as strong evidence that it meets the exacting requirements of that institution. However, the exhibitor will find that it is necessary to write to the manufacturers to secure definite information that cannot very well be supplied in an article of this nature.

The Universal Motor Company Tells How.

The Universal Motor Company, of Oshkosh, Wisconsin, gives the following pertinent advice regarding generating plant:

We believe that Mr. Gordon would find it to his advantage to carry a first-class projector, preferably a Powers or Simplex. Usually, road shows prefer to use a truck of about two-ton capacity. This permits the carrying of a tent for show purposes, where this is desired. The electrical equipment could most probably be covered to the best advantage by one of our 4 k. w. electric generating sets. This could be used for projection purposes as well as for lighting the hall if the show intends to use a hall or for the tent where one is carried, either the 60 or 110-volt outfit has the advantage of being of the voltage in which accessories are much more readily obtainable. The 60-volt outfit has the advantage of being more easily adapted to the arc, which may be done by means of the field rheostat, which permits a regulation of from approximately 52 to 62 volts. Where the 110-volt outfit is used in connection with an arc, it is necessary to reduce the current.

We believe that all additional information

No Vibration in the De Vry!

YOU can balance a De Vry on a tea cup and it produces motion pictures as if shot from a stone wall.

You can put the De Vry on a table, a chair—on any non-rocking object with four legs or none, and it does perfect work. It's in a class by itself in this, as in all other respects. See it and know for yourself.

Preview with a De Vry!

A projector which stands up to that test is what professionals need for previewing.

To a Film Exchange, also, a De Vry is invaluable.

We ask that you let us give you a De Vry demonstration. Say the word and our representative from one of 60 cities will come and show you—in your own office.

There's nothing like the De Vry. So light! So handy! So compact! Remember, a poor projector kills a good film. So see the De Vry before you decide. It is endorsed by the best and most successful people in the motion-picture profession.

desired on our product can be obtained from our bulletin No. 30.

Leon Brownie, of 1114 Pierce avenue, Houston, Texas, has traveled for a number of years with an outfit of this type. He is putting out an additional show and we feel assured will be glad to give Mr. Gordon the benefit of his experience both in connection with our product and to all other requirements on this type of outfit.

The U. T. E. Helps.

The United Theatre Equipment Corporation, of 1604 Broadway, New York, makes the following suggestions:

The Power's 6A road equipment has always been considered a standard for that class of work on account of its being fitted with collapsible legs, light stand, and at the same time retaining the feature of a heavy lamp house with the regular mechanism. This outfit will give the same class of projection as the regular professional model used in permanent installations.

We do not wish to go on record as saying that one automobile will stand up better than another for use in connection with driving a generator for motion picture projection. We can truthfully say, however, that more Ford cars are being used for this class of work than others—possibly because there are more cars of that make in existence. Any standard car would serve, as it is only necessary to jack up the hind wheel belting from the same to the pulley of the generator which would rest on its own sliding base.

There are a number of standard good generators upon the market which are available for this purpose, and our Mr. Hallberg has designed one for this purpose, which is being successfully used. A generator of 35 amperes capacity should be sufficient for good projection.

As to Booth.

Each State has different laws for traveling shows. The inquiry does not say whether the show will travel in Massachusetts only, and would suggest application to the State Bureau in Boston for just what is necessary in the matter of a booth for traveling purposes.

If, in addition to the above, it is desired to use additional lights from the generator, it would be necessary to rig up a little switch-board with rheostat control and ampere meter and field meter. Mr. Gordon would need two lengths of No. 6 switch cable to connect from the generator to the motion picture machine, which presumably would be located some distance from the power.

How to Easily Increase the Durability of Film

THE difficulty sometimes experienced in projecting new film, frequently resulting in unsteadiness and premature breakdowns, may be largely avoided by the application of a thin coating of wax along the perforations. Machines that do this work rapidly and inexpensively are available at small cost.

In the making of the light sensitive emulsion of motion picture film one of the chief ingredients is gelatine, a glutinous substance which readily absorbs from and gives off moisture to the air. In freshly developed film, the gelatine contains a considerably higher percentage of moisture than seasoned film, and when in this condition is easily affected by heat, tending to render it soft and tacky, particularly in moist atmosphere.

As used in motion picture film, the first point at which the gelatine comes in contact with unusual temperature is at the aperture gate of the projection machine, where the light from the arc is concentrated, producing heat to a degree which softens the gelatine and causes it to collect on the tension springs or shoes where it rapidly dries and forms a flint-like deposit.

Careful Waxing Beneficial.

As the film passes through the projector, the hardened deposit of gelatine continues to accumulate and offer further resistance which produces deep scratches along the perforations with added possibility, as the resistance increases, of the teeth of the intermittent sprocket tearing and damaging the perforations, sometimes to an extent where injury to the print is irreparable.

Careful waxing produces, under the action of heat, a smooth and polished surface on the gelatine along the perforations; provides against the liability of strain in the first projection of new prints; materially benefits successive runs, and greatly prolongs the commercial life of the prints.

In view of the benefits to be derived and of the comparative simplicity with which waxing can be accomplished, the advisability of its use will be readily understood.

Gentlemen:

We take pleasure in advising you that over 95% of all projectors used in all studios and film laboratories in and around Los Angeles are Powers Cameragraphs.

In almost every case other machines have been carefully tried out with the result that the respective studios have standardized on your projector.

We are subscribing our affidavit certifying the correctness of these several statements. We are also sending under separate cover letters from fifteen of the more important organizations which show beyond question that we have made no extravagant claims for the popularity of the Powers Cameragraph.

With best wishes for continued Powers success, we remain,

Yours very truly,

Concerning Ritchey Posters

RITCHEY posters stand forth plainly and boldly! They are never washed out, colorless, hackneyed in design and unconvincing! They are powerful poster conceptions, attractively conceived and executed, and they carry conviction always!

They dominate through the sheer force and sincerity that are their essential characteristics. Their persuasive message is so clearly and concisely enunciated as to seem altogether irrefutable. As a result they carry an absolute conviction, for they never suggest or phrase a thought or mood antagonistic to the person who looks upon them.

They call an insistent attention to the wares of the exhibitor. For him they perform the invaluable service of selling his tickets. They are his main aid and his chief adjunct. At all times they have served him faithfully and well, and they thoroughly merit the great esteem he has for them.

If he is called blessed who makes two blades of grass grow where there had been but one before, what should be said of the RITCHEY poster, which fills so many seats that would otherwise remain empty?

Announcement

To all those engaged in motion picture producing and exhibiting, announcement is hereby made of the granting to DAVID WARK GRIFFITH of a patent (No. 1334853) on methods and apparatus for projecting moving and other pictures with color effects.

Mr. Griffith's patent, issued on March 23rd, 1920, on application of May 14, 1919 (Application serial No. 296,964) covers the following specifications:

"The process of producing colored pictures on an opaque screen which consists of throwing pictures by a projector onto one surface of said screen and simultaneously illuminating the screen with diffused colored light from a bank of colored lights thrown onto the same surface of the screen in a direction oblique to the stream of light from the projector."

"In an apparatus of the class described, an opaque screen, a projector for throwing pictures onto one surface of said screen, a bank of differently colored lights with several colors out of the path of light from said projector and adapted to throw colored diffused light onto the same surface of said screen, and means for selectively rendering said lights active and thereby the color of the light thrown from said bank onto said screen."

This method of lighting was first introduced by Mr. Griffith in his production of "Broken Blossoms" on May 13th, 1919, at Geo. M. Cohan Theatre, New York, and in spite of the knowledge that patents were then pending, one New York producer and one New York exhibitor deliberately attempted to copy Mr. Griffith's invention. These and all others are hereby warned against the use of Mr. Griffith's methods and apparatus.

"TMA VAMP"
It is a 1400-foot laugh. This six-foot, 120-pound old maid wanted to be a movie queen, and her Dad had money. The director was greedy but it would have taken four Dads to have given him enough ability to put this over. Result—fast action, ludicrous characters, ridiculous situations and good slapstick, double action, belt-breaking fun.

"FAIRYLAND"
400 feet of rest and tonic for tired eyes and jangled nerves. It brings the beauty, the atmosphere and reverence of God's great outdoors, done in the colors of the master-artist of them all, Nature.

McElliott writes in the New York
"Daily News:"

"'Edgar and Teacher's Pet' is sheer joy to the jaded picturegoer.

"Johnny Jones, with his small boy belligerence, his sincere conviction that the world is pitted against him, is no actor, but real.

"The haughty princess charming is Lucille Ricksen, who looks as if she might be at least nine years old. And Edgar's opponent in a fierce battle is Buddie Messenger, round and spectacled and serious—'Teacher's Pet' to the life.

Dear Mr. Woody:

I am wasting no time, taking no chances, instead have signed contract on "Miss Hobbs," featuring Wanda Hawley.

I have been so pleased with the instantaneous success which Realart productions have met among my patrons, also with the fairness of Realart's policy in declining to ask the exhibitor to sign a series on this particular star at the outset, that I considered a preview of this subject entirely unnecessary.

Following Wanda Hawley's career, her success in all her recent productions, I figure this vehicle, "Miss Hobbs," staged so successfully on the legitimate stage and by so well known a writer as Jerome K. Jerome, could not be other than a picture of unusual merit.

Congratulation, Realart!

Yours very truly,

We Cover the World

WHEN Inter-Ocean Film Corporation was organized, five years ago, it defined its policies as an export concern specializing in the distribution of American films in foreign territories.

In explaining its policies, Inter-Ocean Film Corporation realized that the American Producer who conducted a business largely confined to national boundaries usually concentrated his sales efforts towards domestic distribution and gave little or no attention to his foreign film sales.

That was five years ago. At that time Inter-Ocean Film Corporation occupied an insignificant suite of offices; today the expansion of its business has necessitated the exclusive use of a five-story building.

Success has crowned its efforts.

During its brief career as an export house, Inter-Ocean Film Corporation has taken over the problems of export distribution, and brought the old-world markets to new-world merchants.

If your problem is the distribution of your product in foreign markets, then you need our experience and facilities.

Let us cover the world for you!

A Picture That Is Different

This is positively the most novel and unique theme ever presented in pictures.

Think of it. A young girl, realizing that this is the day of specialization, eschews athletics, science and philosophy and goes in for specializing on the emotions.

She's a love doctor. And what she doesn't know about love could be put in a thimble.

She'll open your eyes and those of your patrons. She pulls off the greatest series of love matches history ever recorded. And she does it in a way that will make 'em split their sides with laughter.

TALMADGE

She Makes a Home Run Every Time at Bat

Constance Talmadge is now acknowledged the screen's greatest comedienne!

Every picture she makes is a winner. And each succeeding picture is better than the one preceding.

There's "A Temperamental Wife," "A Virtuous Vamp," "Two Weeks," "In Search of a Sinner." You know how those went. Now comes the best of all, "The Love Expert."

Constance Talmadge is one of the best box office bets of the year and getting better with each picture. Tie up with her pictures as you would with a life-saver in a wreck.

As to Applauding Pictures

AN inquiring reader in the Evening Sun asks why spectators at a motion picture show indulge in applause, expressing the opinion that such action is asinine and irrational. Seven correspondents in a subsequent issue express as many views as to the custom. One sets forth that producers are begging the public to applaud so that they may know what is liked and wanted. "Movie audiences are only reacting to the same impulses which affect them in theatres where the actors appear in person—they respond automatically," says another.

"The public absolutely governs the class of pictures presented on the screen, so far as its taste can be learned," writes a producer. "If the audience applauds certain situations then it will get certain situations until it no longer wants them. If it could be brought to 'boo' or to hiss pictures it does not like then it speedily would get better pictures."

It is the observation of this writer that applause at the conclusion of the showing of a picture is rare and that the manifestation of approval is just as likely to be displayed in a house charging a high admission as in one where the box office may be passed for 11 cents. If audible approval—that is, other than laughter—of a motion picture is rare it is all the more significant, and the exhibitor who forwards to the distributor any details concerning such applause does the latter a distinct service.

Destiny and the Screen

THE other day a prominent American dramatist who lately has been won over to implicit belief in the destiny of the moving picture put his finger on one of the greatest needs of the screen when he pointed out the lack of proper classification of its product. The theory that all pictures are made to appeal to the same class of patrons was a good working principle at one time, but with every important advance in screen art it becomes more and more apparent that the moving picture is to have as many forms and to cater to as many different tastes as the stage or the printing press. In the words of the playwright just referred to, "The moving picture is now beyond the control of any human power, and will fulfill its destiny; and any man or body of men who attempts to prevent it from following certain channels will merely eliminate themselves." The men prominent in the past that are no longer factors in the business and artistic branches of the picture were left behind because they tried to hold in check a force that was as much beyond their control as is the relentless current of the Niagara River.

Each day sees new gains for the screen among the class of people that have been the last to acknowledge its worth—the so-called "highbrows." Before the birth of the film, the world proclaimed the works of the great masters of the drama and the kindred arts. The lesser examples of the intellectual efforts of past ages went practically unsung. It will always be so, and the same condition will always be true of the screen. As the masterpieces of the shadow stage rise above the general level of their contemporaries the eyes of the many will be directed toward them and the public prints will be filled with their praise.

It is only within the last three years that the daily press of this country has contained anything approaching reviews of individual moving pictures that were worth the reading.

Today the leading critics on most of the big dailies are not above devoting a column to a careful estimate of a moving picture of unusual merit. Last Sunday's New York Times had a long article on John Barrymore in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." The writer went into the subject as critically as the Barrymore stage performance of "Richard the Third" was treated in the same publication. In Boston the papers were equally alive to the importance of the occasion.

In England the production of "Broken Blossoms" brought the leading London critics to the theatre where the picture was being shown, and such men as William Archer and A. B. Walkley were enthusiastic over its artistic triumph. Within the last year there has been a quiet but deep stirring of the artistic waters of the screen. Eminent novelists and famous dramatists have brought their experience to the moving picture and expressed a newly awakened faith in its future. Nothing can prevent the moving picture from advancing in intellectual strength and in widening its field of endeavor. In other words, the moving picture is bound to classify itself.

Certain persons interested in the making or the showing of pictures may deplore the getting away from the simple film fiction that has delighted so many of picture patrons in the past and contend that the screen is for the popular amusement of the masses, but they will never be able to hold back the onward sweep of the moving picture toward a higher expression. It is a part of the scheme of things for the betterment of mankind.

A Pleasant Duty

THERE is to be held at the New Amsterdam Theatre, New York, on the evening of Sunday, April 11, an entertainment that deserves the best support the motion picture industry can give it. It is for the benefit of Sidney Rankin Drew Post of the American Legion, the unit of former-service men named in honor of the fine young man who, in the ranks of the Royal Flying Corps, was the first American actor to fall in the late war. The members of the post are drawn from the motion picture and theatrical business. Of them there now are 300. There are going to be many more, as the organization hardly has got started.

If you are in and of the motion picture industry and situated within the metropolitan district on Sunday night make it a point to be present at the New Amsterdam to enjoy the fine bill incidentally, but chiefly to give your material and moral support to the men who represented your industry in the war.

Another National Convention

IN addition to the National Convention soon to be held as a result of the movement initiated at the sessions of the New York State exhibitors at Utica indications now point to another gathering, called for Chicago for April 26. The convention projected by Willard C. Patterson, president of the Southeastern Theatre Managers' Association, will take up one of the important subjects outlined for discussion at the other and later gathering—that of the producer-distributor exhibitor. As it will be simultaneous with the annual meeting of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit it is likely Chicago will be a lively motion picture city during the last week in April.

ators. Under the provisions of this bill the mayor or the licensing authority of a city is given the power to appoint a board of examiners of not less than three persons to determine the fitness of the applicant for an operator's license.

This board is to consist of one city employee, one motion picture projectionist of not less than five years' experience, and one employer of motion picture operators. These members are to serve without pay, with the exception of the city employee.

The person applying for a license, if the bill is passed, must demonstrate a practical knowledge of moving picture projection apparatus, the electrical connections as well as the optical system, and the various safety and fire prevention devices which go with the moving picture machine. Each license granted is to continue in force for twelve months and can be renewed without another examination.

Each application for a license must be accompanied by an affidavit that the applicant has served as an assistant to a licensed operator for a period of at least six months prior to the date of the application. Any person 21 years of age, or more, who desires to become an assistant to a licensed operator would be compelled by the bill to register his name, age and address. This person, while permitted to assist, is not allowed to run a machine alone except under the personal supervision of the holder of the license.

There is a penalty of $100 and imprisonment of three months for violations. The bill is now in the cities committee.

Postal Employees Are Warned to Handle Films Promptly

COMPLAINTS of moving picture men that shows have been delayed in the mails have resulted in the first assistant postmaster general issuing strict orders regarding the handling of films. For some time, complaint has been general that the post offices did not give films the prompt handling which was necessary, especially in the case of shows due to be used the day of arrival. Frequently, it was charged, the shows failed to arrive at all on the day scheduled.

Much of the trouble, it was shown upon investigation, was the result of carelessness on the part of postal employees in sorting mail. Orders have just been issued regarding the mis-sending of moving picture films, in which all employees of the department are instructed to exercise care in sorting this class of mail and to give it the prompt handling necessary to insure delivery in time for use.

Baker Signs Bert Williams to Star in Two-Reel Comedies

THAT Tarkington Baker's plans are rapidly coming to a head is evidenced in his announcement that he has signed Bert Williams to star in a series of two reel comedies. In recent seasons Williams has been featured in the Ziegfeld Follies and his work has been distinguished for its high quality and particularly for its faithful delineation of negro character.

The comedian next season is to be starred at the head of his own company in a production which early in the year will be given a run at a Broadway theatre.

Mr. Baker announces that some of the Williams pictures will be made at the coast. Later the picture production activities will be transferred to New York City.

Booth Tarkington will write exclusively for Baker productions.

To Have Public Auction of Philadelphia's Opera House

THE Metropolitan Opera House, Broad and Poplar streets, Philadelphia, will be sold at public auction on April 28. The production of grand opera has been a losing financial proposition, despite the successful appearances of famous artists, because of the many months in the year when the property has not been in use.

One report has it that the du Pont interests will buy the property. This might conflict with the plans of the United Artists to present its product in the Opera House within a short time. In the event the building is used for motion pictures, it is said, the Metropolitan Opera House Company, New York, which owns it, may use the Academy of Music in the future.

Persons in a position to know, say that E. T. Stotesbury, of the firm of Drexel & Co., has been financially supporting the institution and that the loans he has made have pyramided to such an extent that they represent in the aggregate about the entire value of the structure.

Independent Producers Form Sales and Exploiting Group

THE convention of independent producers which began at the Hotel Knickerbocker, New York, on Friday, April 2, was continued until Wednesday, April 7. It was held behind closed doors. It was not until the eleventh hour that Joe Brandt outlined the proposed plan of those who attended.

"A limited number of independent producers must get together and create their own sales and exploitation company," declared Mr. Brandt. "Instead of the negatives from the producers being handled on the present state rights basis they will be distributed through the sales and exploitation organization, which will issue franchises to either a group of exchanges, such as the federated exchanges organized in Chicago, or to individual exchanges in each territory."

"These exchanges will handle the pictures of the sales company on a basis wherein the producer will participate in the gross earnings of the picture. A committee of organization was appointed with Harry Sherman as chairman."

There are twelve independent producers who signified their intention of joining such an organization. As soon as this plan of organization is completed full particulars will be given.

Theatre Owners Ask Metro to Stop Using Loew's Name

PRESIDENT RICHARD A. ROWLAND, of Metro Pictures Corporation, has been asked to take the name of Marcus Loew off the Metro product. The request was made in the form of a resolution, unanimously adopted, at a recent meeting of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, of New York. The reason given is that the public does not know of Mr. Loew as a producer of pictures but as the owner of a chain of theatres, and that his name on the Metro product advertises his theatres. "I wonder what Mr. Loew would charge me for the same kind of advertising?" one of the members asked.

Officers and Directors Chosen.

The following officers, directors and committees were chosen at this meeting: president, William Brandt; first vice-president, William A. Landau; second vice-president, Charles Goldreyer; secretary, H. Jainsboro; treasurer, S. G. Bock; sergeant-at-arms, Al Harstn; finance committee, Max Barr, Charles Saphier and Sam Sonin; board of directors, elected for one year, David Picker, S. W. Anderson, John Manheimer, Harry deG. Robinson, Rudolph Sanders, David J. Hennessey, Charles Steiner and Louis Blumenthal.

Ontario's Theatre Ticket Tax Exceeds Revenue Derived From Liquor Licenses

THE theatre ticket tax for the Province of Ontario is more than replacing the revenue formerly derived by the provincial government from liquor licenses, according to the treasurer's department at Toronto. During the last year that spirituous liquor was sold openly over the bars in Ontario hotels, the revenue from liquor licenses in the province totaled $427,888. This was for the year ending April, 1916. Ontario is not yet bone-dry because it is still possible to make legal importations of "Scotch" and fermented beverages, but the provincial government does not collect any revenue from this business.

The provincial estimates for the present fiscal year, ending April 30, included a probable revenue of $750,000 from the amusement tax. Officials of the government declare, however, that the 1919-20 revenue from the theatre ticket tax will be far in excess of this estimate. In fact, it is intimated that the total receipts through the ticket tax will approach the $1,400,000 mark for the current fiscal year.

How Ontario Tax Ranges.

The Ontario ticket tax ranges from 1 cent on tickets up to 20 cents to a 25-cent assessment on the most expensive tickets. A 2-cent tax is charged on 25-cent tickets and 5 cents on a 75-cent ticket. Theatres are allowed to retain from 4 to 10 per cent. of the tax they handle, according to the value of the tax tickets that they use, the smallest theatres—those using 1 cent tax tickets—being the recipients of 10 per cent. of the tax collected. The theatres where high prices prevail take only 4 per cent. of the tax to cover the cost of incidentals.

The Government of Ontario is said to be the first to impose a special tax on theatre tickets, the legal authority dating from 1916. Montreal has been collecting a tax on theatre admissions for a considerable time, but in this instance it is a local measure. At the present time all provinces in Canada with the exception of Quebec are taking an amusement tax.

Fairer Than United States Tax.

It is pointed out by a representative of the Ontario government that Ontario's tax is fairer than the federal amusement tax of 10 per cent., which is collected by the United States government. For one thing, in the States the total proceeds from the tax is taken by the government and the theatres do not secure a share. The Ontario tax averages considerably lower than the 10 per cent. collected by the United States government. In fact, the Ontario tax averages approximately 7½ per cent. of the gross receipts of a theatre.

Ontario exhibitors are permitted to use combination tickets for admission and tax purposes if they desire, or they may use the special rolls of tax tickets which are bought direct from the government. The combination tickets relieve the work of the ticket seller to a considerable extent because it is not necessary to handle two tickets for each patron.

Fred Warren Resigns as Vice President and Sales Manager of Hodkinson Company

FRED B. WARREN, vice president and sales manager of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, on April 7 resigned his position with that company to take effect Saturday, April 10. When Mr. Warren was seen by a Moving Picture World man he asked to be excused from making any statement as to his future activities, saying an announcement would be forthcoming in the course of a few days.

Mr. Warren came to the motion picture trade from newspaper work, having been connected with journals as writer and owner in San Francisco, Los Angeles, Chicago, St. Louis and New York. In St. Louis, Mr. Warren bought the Star when its circulation was at a rather low ebb and brought it in a comparatively short time to a point where it was recognized as one of the important papers of the city.

Early in 1915 Mr. Warren joined the forces of William Fox, occupying a responsible position in connection with the exploitation and sale of that company's productions. Here he remained two years. Then there was a short affiliation of a couple of months with another company. He was one of the organizers, with Samuel Goldwyn and the Selwyn brothers, of the Goldwyn company. He has been from the beginning and still is a stockholder in that concern.

April 1, 1919, Mr. Warren became connected with the Hodkinson company and has been one of the main factors in its rapid advance.

No man in the film industry has been quite so retiring in the way of avoiding publicity regarding himself as has Mr. Warren. He is one of the exceedingly few men of prominence in the trade who has succeeded in keeping his photograph out of the public prints. One of his strong points is his marked ability in the creation of copy that can "talk." He never has lost his grip on the newspaper angle, in his facility in convincing his reader.

Saenger Has New York Offices.

David Mitchell Dies After Illness of a Few Days

ILL only a few days, David Mitchell, special representative of the Special Picture Corporation, died recently at Providence Hospital, Washington, D. C.

Mr. Mitchell had been in Washington only three weeks when stricken ill with internal trouble. He went to Georgetown Hospital, but refused to stay in bed, and attempted to get back on the job. Finding himself too ill to work, he again tried to take a little rest, but, too active to take kindly to enforced idleness, again got out on the street. He became worse as a result of the weather to which he was exposed and was finally taken to Providence Hospital.

Mr. Mitchell was thirty-eight years old. He was born in Philadelphia, but prior to coming to Washington had lived in New York. He is survived by a mother and brother who live in Los Angeles.

As representative of the Special Picture Corporation, he arrived in Washington March 1, distributing Comedy Art pictures through Super-Films, Inc., here. Be-

STATEMENT OF THE OWNERSHIP, MANAGEMENT, CIRCULATION, etc., required by the Act of Congress of August 24, 1912, of Moving Picture World, published weekly at New York, N. Y., for April 1, 1920.

State of New York, County of New York, ss.: Before me, a Notary Public in and for the State and county aforesaid, personally appeared John F. Chalmers, who, having been duly sworn according to law, deposes and says that he is the business manager of the Moving Picture World and that the following is, to the best of his knowledge and belief, a true statement of the ownership, management, etc., of the aforesaid publication for the date shown in the above caption, required by the Act of August 24, 1912, embodied in Section 443, Postal Laws and Regulations, printed on the reverse of this form, to wit:

2. That the owners are: Chalmers Publishing Company, 516 Fifth avenue, New York, the stockholders of which are James P. Chalmers, John F. Chalmers and Eliza J. Chalmers, all of 516 Fifth avenue, New York.

3. That the known bondholders, mortgages and other security holders owning or holding 1 per cent. or more of total amount of bonds, mortgages or other securities are: None.

4. That the two paragraphs next above, giving the names of the owners, stockholders and security holders, if any, contain not only the list of stockholders and security holders as they appear upon the books of the company but also, in cases where the stockholder or security holder appears upon the books of the company as trustee or in any other fiduciary relation, the name of the person or corporation for whom such trustee is acting, is given; also that the said two paragraphs contain statements embracing affiant's full knowledge and belief as to the circumstances and conditions under which stockholders and security holders who do not appear upon the books of the company as trustees, hold stock and securities in a capacity other than that of a bona fide owner; and this affiant has no reason to believe that any other person, association or corporation has any interest direct or indirect in the said stock, bonds or other securities than as so stated by him.

JOHN F. CHALMERS.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 1st day of April, 1920, (Seal) SADIE H. SASS, Notary Public, New York County, No. 486, New York Register No. 2358. (My commission expires March 30, 1922.)

fore joining the Special Picture Corporation, he was with the United Picture Theatres and, all told, had been in the moving picture game about eight years.

David M. Thomas, division manager of the Special Picture Corporation, came to Washington to take care of the body and wind up Mr. Mitchell's affairs.

Samson Resigns as Assistant Treasurer.

Announcement was made early this week by A. W. Samson, of his resignation as assistant treasurer of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation. Sampson is leaving Mayflower to re-enter the advertising field, in which he was engaged prior to the war. After being demobilized from the army, in which he served for more than a year, Sampson decided to engage in the executive branch of motion picture work. The call of his "first love" has proven too strong, however.

Circuit Officials Are Now Perfecting Plans for April Convention In Chicago

INDICATIONS that a score of representative theatre owners from practically every territory will attend the annual convention of members of First National Exhibitors' Circuit, to be held at the Congress Hotel, Chicago, beginning on Monday, April 26, are evidenced through letters and telegrams seeking additional details about the sub-franchising plan coincident with the work of the Associated First National Pictures organization.

It is toward the perfection of all details regarding the convention that the executive committee of First National and the Exhibitors' Defense Committee, composed of members of the circuit, are bending every effort in a series of conferences now being held in New York City. Mapping out the proportionate method of sub-franchising the various districts is being accomplished with a large statistical staff which has been at work for months under the directors of the executive committee, while the Exhibitors' Defense Committee is steadily formulating plans to put before the convention in April.

Seek Public Attitude Toward Prices.

Prospects are that the convention will be by far the largest of any in the history of the organization. Every section of the United States will be represented by the motion picture interests of the respective territories, and it is likely that exhibitor sentiment throughout the country will manifest itself at this gathering. It is certain that the relative territorial situations, insofar as motion pictures are concerned, will be given the fullest discussion, and it is far more certain that an index as to public attitude toward admission prices and the various types of productions will likewise be gained.

Question as to whether the convention will be confined to franchise holders has been ended with the positive announcement that the gathering will be conducted after the same fashion that characterized the meeting held in 1919 in New York at the Astor Hotel. Executives from every First National exchange will assemble for the general consideration of exchange problems. The striking results brought about by the meeting in 1919 is considered evidence that the more important problems of exchange management existing today will be solved in a most gratifying manner.

Exhibitors inquiring as to whether the convention was entirely in the interests of arriving at an equitable basis of sub-franchising the various territories, have been informed that while this matter will be a most salient feature, various other matters of vital import will necessarily play a big part in the convention.

Determining Percentage Allotments.

Probably the most significant feature of First National's plans pending the convention is the fact that a department of statistics has been determining percentage allotments for every independent theatre in the country. This work has been made the foundation for the new sub-franchising plan and upon it rests the basis for arriving at figures that not only insure the highest possible returns to exhibitors, but at the same time apportion the quotas in such manner that comparative instances will show that overcharging is safeguarded and that each exhibitor will be made a proposition that best insures his interests, although a uniform and general method of arriving at estimates has been accomplished.

In addition to the sub-franchising work and the announcements of the Exhibitors' Defense Committee, the question of First National's alliance with additional independent producers is also a proposition of great import. It is said that a number of new production propositions fostered by independent directors, stars and producers and submitted to members of First National, will be given a hearing at the convention.

Those Who Will Attend.

The following First National franchise holders will either be present or represented at the convention:

Jule and J. J. Allen, Toronto; A. H. Blank, Des Moines; Henry Brouse, Ottawa; J. B. Clark, Pittsburgh; R. H. Clark, New York; R. D. Craver, Charlotte, N. C.; W. P. California Praises "Uneasy Feet."

"Uneasy Feet," the first release by Comedyart through Special Pictures Corporation, was applauded at its showing in Goldwyn's California Theatre, Los Angeles, according to a telegram just received. Managing Editor Robert H. Poole ran the film a second time in response to requests from the audience. All the press criticisms were favorable.

The Rialto Theatre, New York, has signed for a second week, with an option on a third week. The Rivoli, New York, has also signed for a second week. Reports from twenty-two exchanges indicate heavy bookings for Comedyart. Its second picture, "Ima Vamp," was released on April 4.

8 A. M.—Golly, that was a fine sleep. Part of Saturday afternoon, two whole nights and all day Sunday. I feel stiff—but comfortable.

9 A. M.—Here he comes to start another day; to beat me in the face and swear because I can't spell.

10 A. M.—Gee, I can't understand how he can look himself in the face in the mirror. I often wonder how his conscience feels after he writes the stuff he does.

11 A. M.—Thank St. Underwood. He's gone into the projection room. The only time I get any rest is when he's in there. He's in there a lot, thank St. Remington. He thinks if he don't pass on a picture it can't go.

12 M.—If he went where he telephoned he was going to he'll be a little toad in a big puddle and his lunch will cost him most a day's work.

3 P. M.—He got back in time to go in and get a "statement" from the boss. Gee, but he had a narrow margin to go on!

3:30 P. M.—I'm getting jealous. He's writing his stuff in longhand. Must-a been a mighty important "statement" he got inside just now.

4 P. M.—He's hopping me again. When he wants to write a story about a million dollar production it's me for him!

5 P. M.—Here's where he covers me up like a canary bird. The end of a pufflictic day.

W. C. Patterson Issues Call to Arms, Urging Show-Down on Theatre Question

CALLS for a meeting of every independent exhibitor in the country, to be held in Chicago on April 26, are being sent out this week by Willard C. Patterson, president of the Southeastern Theatre Managers' Association, and manager of Sig Samuel's Criterion, of Atlanta, for the organization of an Exhibitors' Defense League to evolve a national plan of action in defense of their individual interests against the activities of producing and distributing concerns that are buying, leasing or building theatres in various territories.

According to advices from Atlanta, Mr. Patterson has sent letters and telegrams to hundreds of independent theatre owners throughout the country, outlining a general plan of action which he proposes as a tentative basis for exhibitor consideration of the most direct and practical solution of the situation. As the president of the Southeastern Theatre Managers' Association, which has 375 exhibitor members, Mr. Patterson has been a prominent figure in southern theatre operators' affairs, especially in directing that organization's offensive against representatives of producing and distributing companies which, he declares, have sought to invade the theatre field as competitors of independent exhibitors in that territory.

Time for a Show-Down.

"Theatre competition from producers," he says in a statement accompanying the announcement of his call for a national meeting, "appears that it is time for a show-down between the independent exhibitors and the producer factions which, even now, are competing with them in a small way, comparatively, and which have plans definitely made for very widespread and formidable opposition theatres in every community of consequence in the country.

"How long will it be until big producing units, whose pictures we are showing today as independents, step into our lobbies and announce that they have leased, bought or built a house across the street and that they need their own pictures for their own screens, and that we can go to the devil or anywhere else we please for a film service to replace their productions?"

"I am president of an organization with a membership of 375 independent exhibitors, and this is exactly the condition and menace that confronts every one of them.

There is no longer any use in saying that this producer-exhibitor competition can never amount to anything of consequence. It is that very attitude of passiveness which is making possible the successful and uncombated consummation of producer plans to force their way into every theatre community where present independent exhibitors operate at anything like a profit commensurate with their investment and abilities as showmen.

Want to Know Producers' Stand.

"The 375 independent exhibitors want to know definitely just how far these producer-exhibitors intend to go. The responses from exhibitors to the trade paper statements of three weeks ago on this question prove conclusively to me that there are scores of independent exhibitors in every territory who want an answer to the same question.

"So that there may be concerted action by the independent owners whose houses soon will be in direct competition with producer-owned theatres, I have sent out a call to every exhibitor whose name I could obtain to meet at the Congress Hotel to organize a league, or its equivalent, which will learn from the several producing concerns in question exactly what they intend to do in the future and what we can do.

"Producer units that are constantly gaining greater theatre representation by ownership or purchase of controlling interests, in the aggregate have hundreds of thousands of dollars of independent exhibitors' money in their banks as advance deposits on rental contracts. Every week there is collected hundreds of thousands of dollars more for played and paid business. Our advance deposit money is a pledge of our good faith and a certificate of our honesty of intent with the producers and distributors who depend upon us for their existence.

Must Get Pictures from Other Sources.

"If the producers are seriously intent upon owning theatres in which to show their own productions, then the independent exhibitors must realize immediately that he has to look to other sources for his pictures.

"If the situation has come to this point—and there are many certain indications that it has—let us, as independent exhibitors, find it out at once, so that we can make our plans to continue our motion picture existence. We cannot, over-night, develop public favoritism for new stars and new production brands, or for established stars and established production brands whom fans are accustomed to seeing in other independent theatres.

"It must be realized, too, that if we, as independent exhibitors losing one film service to producer competition, seek to take established independent stars and brands away from another independent exhibitor, we are going to pay dearly for the theft, and the other independent chap is going to face a desperate predicament. It has taken time, money, patience and endless showmanship for independent exhibitors to establish their respective theatre patronages for the very stars and production brands which the concerns controlling them now propose to put on their screens in their own producer-exhibitor theatres as direct competition for us.

No Real Understanding.

"If we must look to other production sources, if we must create public following anew, it is almost past the time that we knew it, and we cannot speed too fast toward the day when we shall understand, definitely, that this is the situation before us.

"There never has been any real understanding between the independent exhibitors and the producers who have theatre-monopoly ambitions. Now one must be had. Every exhibitor who values his place in the future as an exhibitor will be in Chicago on April 26 to add the weight of his opinions to a solution of this national menace which, this week, next month, next fall or next spring—some time within the year—will strike, like a bolt of lightning next door, across the street or around the corner from his theatre, rearing an edifice of equal or greater pretensions as a theatre to drive him into bankruptcy or years of struggle for bare expenses or less.

"The responses I have had to date convince me that the Congress Hotel on April 26 will be a place where motion picture history will be made."

Reviews printed in Moving Picture World are based upon the production exactly as it will be shown upon your screen. And they are dependable, fair and honest in their expressions.

Nature Faking in an Infant Industry

From Moving Picture World Ten Years Ago

LET one of the oldest (in point of grinding) "projectionist" lead off this week's record of "Ten Years Ago," although William Reed takes the plot back several years beyond the gauge. Mr. Reed, who is vice president of Atlantic City Local No. 310, I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. O. U. S. & C., escorts films to the screen of the Steel Pier, abutting the famous Board Walk, these days. Writing from Atlantic City, Mr. Reed says:

"Looking through the March 13 issue I noticed the invitation to 'tell about yourself' and my thought turned back a few years. I have before me a copy of Moving Picture World of May 15, 1909, with its pink cover and 38 pages and the issue of March 13, 1920, with 165 pages. That of itself shows how the industry has grown.

Preparing for "Silver" Anniversary.

"April 23, 1920, will be the twenty-fourth anniversary of moving pictures projected on the screen—not referring to 'Miss Jerry,' with slides, but to photographs on film. The first showing in America was at Koster & Bial's Music Hall. Data can be had at the Public Library in New York.

"Ask for files of April, 1896, and see the write-up in the Herald or World. So many professional writers get their data wrong. One writer in Saturday Evening Post claims he saw moving pictures at the World's Fair, 1893—when in fact it was a machine that had pictures on a large glass disk that revolved with a 'stop' movement.

"I saw the same machine at Mechanics Fair, Boston, in 1892. Another writer in Moving Picture World of March 10, 1917, claims he set up an Edison Vitascope in the Orpheum, Chicago, in 1893, when in fact he set it up in July, 1896. I was the one to go to Chicago as P. W. Keifaber, who bought Illinois rights, wanted me—but I went, instead, to New Orleans with 'Pop' Rock."

That Matter Being Settled—

We take up the case of H. T. Snowden who is at present doing exploitation "stunts" for the Detroit Branch of Robertson-Cole's organization. Snowden remarks: "I notice in your periodical that you desire scandal from folks who were in the industry ten years ago, so I will call your hand and raise you four years.

"Let us go back to the days when a phonograph did the bally-hoo and H. T. Snowden was speeding the steeds with a pair of coconut shells. Back to the days when the song slides came in cracked and operator's 'top' was twelve berries.

"When special representatives, exploitation experts, title editors, managing directors and projection engineers were unheard of. When an Edison Exhibition Model machine, two hundred undertakers' chairs (rented), a muslin sheet and a white-washed front represented a cinema palace.

"It was then that I, H. T. Snowden, was acting in all capacities at the Theatorium, Muncie, Ind. My duties were as follows: Arriving at the theatre at eight a. m. I procured a broom, mop and a duster and proceeded to put the house in shipshape order.

"If the action in the picture permitted it, I spent the balance of the time back of the curtain giving almost perfect imitations of everything that moved in the picture. 'Should the can contain "colored magic"—caught tickets at the gate and relieved the operator. In addition to these duties, I carried a banner on the street during the noon hours and ushered on Saturdays.

"Bill" Swanson, 18 Reels Strong.

"At the time William Swanson had the largest film exchange west of New York at 79 Clark street, Chicago, Ill. I believe his stock consisted of about eighteen single reels. There were two theatres in Indiana—the Bijou at Indianapolis and the Theatorium at Muncie.

"Let us turn over a page. A year later we find nine theatres in Indianapolis and four in Muncie. During the lapse of this time some one slapped me on the back with a copy of 'Wait Till the Sun Shines, Nellie' and told me I was a singer. Believing him I proceeded, to punish the patrons of the Unique Theatre, Middletown, Ohio, with illustrated songs.

"My sojourn in Middletown was not long, as I was informed from 'very reliable sources' that it was only a matter of a few weeks before the picture business would be a thing of the past. Like a boob I flopped and entered vaudeville, doing a six a day and no parades.

"Three years later I returned to the old love in the capacity of salesman for the International Feature Film Company, and was assigned to the coal mines of Southern Indiana, where I was introduced to the art of padding a 'swindle sheet.' This little turn I have just related brings us up to ten years ago when the industry was flourishing (a few houses were getting a dime) and pictures were over one reel in length."

Turn Now to Musty Tomes.

To Moving Picture World dated April 16, 1910, Samuel L. Rothapel contributed a column under the heading "Music and Motion Pictures." Written at a time when "piano, stool and cover" constituted a three piece orchestra it was considerably ahead of the game as then played. Later "Roxey" carried his threats into execution—and it took him under four years to do so.

Independent manufacturers of moving pictures held a meeting—to discuss a proposed agreement formulated by the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company. It was explained that the Sales Company was a corporation formed by the New York Motion Picture Company and the Independent Moving Picture Company.

Horsley, of the Nestor Company; Bowles, of the Pantograph; Dintenfass and Whitman, of the Actophone; I. W. Ullman, of Columbia Film Company; Prieur, representing Lux and Le Lion; Hoffman, representing Eclair; P. A. Powers, speaking for himself, and A. G. Whyte, sales agent for Nestor, were in attendance. History makers in THE Industry—some of them still present and some of 'em long since forgotten.

Days of "Personal Liberty."

Film showmen were less restricted by law in some things ten years ago. For instance, "fight pictures" were in vogue every time a couple of scrappers staged a bout. The Nelson-Wohlgest pictures were being marketed by the Great Western Film Company—a finish scrap in the fortieth round. "None of the other cameras caught anything after the thirty-eighth round," as the fight lasted until after sundown.

G. M. Anderson and Essanay company were on a ranch near Golden, Colo., making "Westerners" to beat the herd.

"When the Car's Away," 950 feet, was a current Lubin.

"Hallberg in the Hospital" was a careless headline that meant only the installation of Hallberg Economizer and a Motiograph in Manhattan State Hospital, Ward's Island, New York City.

"Bill" Kalem Wright, Exploitationist.

William Wright was giving press exhibitions of the Roosevelt Pictures for Kalem in Central-West cities. An early example of showmanship and "exploitation"—exhibitors and exchangemen being included in the audiences.

The Powers Company had just produced for the American Photophone Company the first of a series of "Talking Pictures." Another paragraph referred to Gaumont's Chronophone—a system synchronizing the phonograph with motion pictures.

"A $500 Idea for $5" was advertised by the Omaha Promoting Company. Exhibitors were shown how to exploit their shows with "The Woman in Red." In these days picture showmen get "$500 ideas" in every copy of Moving Picture World for a $3 subscription. Fifty-two $500 ideas a year—not a bad investment, we'll say!

There was a quarter page advertisement printed in German. Couldn't read it then; can't read it now and never want to be able to read it. Tough enough to assemble sufficient English to get past in present company!

The managers of the Pastime Theatre, Madison, Me., reported that the illustrated song, "The Cottage on the Hillside Far Away," proved to be their best drawing card in a long time. Rather tough on pictures.

New, regular honest-to-goodness NEWS, was scarce in Moving Picture World ten years ago. May have said that before—but it still goes.

Threatened Enforcement of Sunday Law Alarms Quebec and British Columbia

CONSTERNATION has been caused in moving picture theatre circles of two Canadian provinces as the result of proposals by the respective provincial governments to enforce drastic legislation that seriously affects the operation of the theatres. In the Province of Quebec a move has been made to enforce the Lord's Day act, a federal law, which will compel all theatres to close on Sundays.

In the Province of British Columbia the legislature proposes to collect an amusement tax which represents 20 per cent. of the gross receipts of all theatres. In both cases it is the belief of the exhibitors that the operation of their houses will be seriously impaired.

In Quebec a peculiar situation has arisen in that some doubt exists as to the authority necessary for compelling the theatres to close on Sundays. L. A. Taschereau, acting prime minister, has issued an explanation in which he points out that the provincial government has advised the exhibitors that they are violating a federal statute by conducting Sunday performances. Mr. Doherty, of Ottawa, federal minister of justice, has stated, however, that the enforcement of the Lord's Day act comes under the jurisdiction of the provincial authorities.

Conflicting Opinions.

Chief Tremblay, of the Montreal Police Department, has warned Montreal exhibitors that they must close their theatres on Sundays, but declares that he has not been authorized to enforce the order. On the other hand, Mayor Cousineau, of Hull, Quebec, announces that he will refuse to enforce Sunday closing because he believes that the Lord's Day act is a restriction upon the personal liberty of the people.

Not Enforced in Quebec.

Quebec is the only province in Canada where the Lord's Day act has not been enforced. The activity on the part of the Quebec government follows a decision by the supreme court of appeal against R. L. Vallee, proprietor of the Casino Theatre, Sherbrooke. Quebec, by which his appeal from a conviction for operating his theatre of Sunday has been disallowed.

Mr. Vallee was first prosecuted two years ago by an alleged representative of the Lord's Day Alliance and he has fought the case continuously since his conviction by the police magistrate at Sherbrooke. The Lord's Day Alliance is said to be behind the move of the Quebec government in the present general development.

In British Columbia, on the Pacific Coast, the exhibitors are also up in arms over the proposal of the provincial government to impose an amusement tax which will be equal to 20 per cent. of the theatres' gross receipts. A large deputation, representing the exhibitors of Vancouver and Victoria, waited upon the Provincial Cabinet at Victoria on March 26 to protest against the carrying out of the measure, but the only definite statement secured from Premier Oliver was that the province needed the money.

Higher Prices Impossible.

The assertion was made by the deputation that the theatre business of the West Coast cities is near the breaking point owing to the increased costs of operation, and it was pointed out that admission prices are now at the highest level possible. If a further increase is necessary because of the new amusement tax, it is believed that patronage will be seriously affected.

Attention was drawn to the fact that the proposed tax is heavier than the theatre ticket tax imposed by another Canadian province. In Ontario, the ticket tax works out to approximately 7½ per cent. of the gross revenue of the theatres, but, of course the patrons pay this tax themselves. In Quebec the civic ticket tax is even relatively lower than in Ontario.

May Stop Building Operations.

That a number of theatres have not made any profit was shown by specific cases. Clifford Denham, proprietor of the Royal Theatre, Victoria, declared that his house had not made a dollar since it was built. The statement was also made that the Orpheum Theatre in Vancouver had not shown any profit on a $625,000 investment.

The highly interesting statement was made that the tax proposal would have such a far-reaching effect that the three large theatre companies which have arranged to build handsome theatres in Vancouver, aggregating an outlay of upwards of $1,500,000, would undoubtedly drop these projects. Two of the big companies interested are the Allen Theatre Enterprises and the Famous Players' Canadian Corporation.

The deputation included a number of the influential theatre men of the Pacific Coast. Those who made up the delegation were: Frank Patrick, Charles Royal, W. P. Nichols, R. Jamieson, R. Milne, J. R. Muir, George B. Pantages, Clifford Denham and R. Brown.

Gives "Other Men's Shoes"

Special Run in Twin Cities

FIRST run accounts on Edgar Lewis's special Pathe production, "Other Men's Shoes," have been augmented by the addition of the Ruben and Finkelstein theatres in Minneapolis and St. Paul. A week's run has been accorded the special in each of the circuit's leading houses in the Twin Cities. Other first-run theatres booking the production the past week include the Albany, Albany, N. Y.; Penn, Uniontown, Pa.; Strand and Knickerbocker, Cleveland; Colonial, Lansing, and Palace, Tulsa, Okla.

Wherever "Other Men's Shoes" has been played it has won the plaudits of the exhibitor and his patrons. One of the most recent tributes paid the productions comes from A. S. Widman, manager of the big Centennial Theatre, Warsaw, Ind., who writes the Chicago office of Pathe Exchange, Inc.;

"Unsolicited, I wish to express to you my appreciation of such a wonderful picture as 'Other Men's Shoes.' To my mind it is one of the greatest pictures I have ever seen. Every character in the production is a star and the climaxes are exceptional."

The Barrymores? Sure! Carpentier? Sure! All the Stars to Shine at Legion Show

IF there has been any doubt in the minds of Broadway or followers of the theatre and the screen as to the all-star bill announced by the S. Rankin Drew Post for the benefit performance at the New Amsterdam Theatre, Sunday night, April 11, the latest report from the business offices of that post shows this group of ex-service men to be a live and wide-awake body.

Heading the bill is no less a trio than the Barrymores, Ethel, John and Lionel. This feature of the bill alone is among the most exceptional ever offered to the theatre-going public of New York. Never before have these three representatives of the famous family appeared together on one bill, and all Broadway is astir over the affair. It is expected that the theatre will be sold out the early part of the week, and those who have already secured their seats are now considering themselves fortunate.

A Galaxy of Favorite Stars.

Among the others of the Broadway stars who will do their share on the eventful night, and who are now rehearsing under the personal direction of R. H. Burnside, general stage director of the Hippodrome, are many prime favorites, whose individual following will do much to pack the New Amsterdam.

Sam Bernard will be there; Irene Bordoni will be there; Clifton Crawford, he of the nimble feet, will be there; Ernest Truex, comedian of the stage and screen; Richard Travers, screen star and world war veteran, as well as the popular Adele Rowland, will be there.

Not to be satisfied with such an aggregation the Drew Post announces the latest additions, which include the old favorite, James J. Corbett, who will do his stunt with Jack Wilson, famous black-face artist.

It is reported that the influential members of the post have already secured assurances that Enrico Caruso will be present. This, at least, is announced by the publicity committee of the post.

Caruso May Be There.

The knockout punch on the bill, from the sporting angle, comes with the news that Georges Carpentier, Frenchman, world's war hero, bridegroom and challenger for the heavyweight championship of the world, will speak to the audience from the stage. It is said that the handsome French fighter will deliver on this occasion a message from France to the American Legion.

Permission for the appearance of Carpentier has already been secured through the genial M. Deschamps and Mr. Curley. The motion picture producing firm of Robertson-Cole, to whom Carpentier is under a starring contract for the screen, has gladly offered its fullest co-operation to the members of the post and promised to have the popular hero on hand.

Will Make You Feel "Swell."

Frank Morgan, known throughout the country as one of our most versatile character actors, will present a sketch, supported by his own company. Demarest and Colette, the latter also a member of the post, will offer a novelty vaudeville skit, and an octette of singers from the United States Navy Glee Club will make you feel the ocean rolling under you in long, deep swells.

The opening overture and the national anthem will be played by a navy orchestra and the Navy Recruiting Service Band.

Mrs. Sidney Drew will do her share behind the "lights." The Drew Post, as you must know, was named in honor of Mrs. Drew's stepson, S. Rankin Drew, actor and director, who was the first American actor to fall in battle.

Mrs. Drew is the president of the Women's Auxiliary recently formed, and the women are doing splendid work in this drive for funds with which to erect a gymnasium for the post.

The Last Word on the Show.

The latest announcement from the committee indicates there is doubt as to the ability of John Barrymore to be present by reason of the sudden illness of the player.

Ed Wynn will be master of ceremonies.

Additions to the bill are as follows: Lionel Barrymore, in the last act of "The Copperhead"; Dorothy Donnelly; Minnie Dupree & Co.; Bird Millman, queen of the wire; Charles Silvernail, twenty-six months overseas, in service and entertaining; Augustus Thomas, introducing six Congressional Medallists, three of whom are members of the post.

In the foyer will be the paintings of Joseph Cummings Chase, A. E. F. painter, guarded by one man from each branch of the service.

At precisely 11 o'clock, regardless of what may be on the stage at the time, a marine bugler will sound "Taps" in memory of the dead, the audience standing.

Frank Keenan's "Dollar for Dollar" Hailed as Masterpiece After Showing

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made by Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., that the latest Frank Keenan production, "Dollar for Dollar," will be released on May 2. The picture is another powerful play of the type created in the last year by Mr. Keenan, and according to the unanimous opinion of all who attended the first showing at the Pathe home office, it will be generally regarded as another masterpiece of the able actor and director.

The picture is a drama of high finance and society and Mr. Keenan has surrounded himself with an excellent cast of screen favorites, several of whom have been with him in other successes. Among them are Kathleen Kirkham, Harry Van Meter, Kate Van Buren, Jay Belasco and Gertrude Clair. In direction Mr. Keenan was assisted by Elliott Howe and the author of the story, Ethel Watts Mumford.

"Dollar for Dollar" is regarded by those who have closely followed Mr. Keenan's work as the highest type of a Keenan picture. It is full of big and gripping situations and the characters are people of real flesh and blood.

Expresses Human Philosophy.

"With a little bad mixed up with all the good," as Mr. Keenan expresses it, the theme has to do with the human philosophy that all men are possible criminals and all criminals are possible men. Some of the deft manipulations of the men behind in politics are touched upon and Mr. Keenan shines as the power behind the elected officials.

The exterior scenes are said to be worthy of particular mention in any discussion of the picture. Some views of a party in the mountains discloses the rugged artistry of nature and gives the tone of the great outdoors to the picture. These scenes were taken at Bear Valley in the mountains of Southern California. The interiors are of the same standard which has characterized every work of Frank Keenan.

Convention of Select and Republic Sales Force Closes; No Details Given

THE second annual convention of the Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises, including Select Pictures Corporation and Republic Distributing Corporation, came to a close Friday, April 9, following five days of business sessions and social activities that brought home forcibly to all members of the Selznick and Republic families that these organizations under Mr. Selznick's direction are forging ahead rapidly. The Astor Hotel, which has housed many conventions in its time, was the scene of activities, which began on April 5.

More than seventy-five branch managers, exploitation men, representatives and executives of the home office were present at the meetings. For the first time following the close of the recent eight weeks' drive by the branches throughout the country, in which 1,700 new accounts were added to the Selznick list, the men who accomplished this booking feat were afforded a chance to give each other pointers at first hand on how it was done. The consensus was that the general quality of the pictures offered was responsible for the big increase in bookings.

Other high lights of the convention which indicate further that the burst of speed shown by Selznick at the beginning of the year will not lessen in degree during the coming months of 1920, included the showing on Wednesday, April 7, of "The New Butler," starring William Collier, long one of the most noted comedians of the American stage. Following this screening it was announced by Mr. Selznick that this production is to be distributed by Select, marking the entry of William Collier into the motion picture field. This followed closely the announcement a few days ago that William Faversham has joined the Selznick forces as a star. Mr. Faversham's first production for Selznick, "The Man Who Lost Himself," was shown to the convention Thursday, April 8, and made a deep impression.

The convention also offered the opportunity for the Selznick branch men and representatives to welcome into the organization Hobart Henley, recognized as a leading producer and director, who is to direct big subjects for Mr. Selznick. Although the acquisition of three such prominent and notable men would seem to be quite enough for one week, Lewis J. Selznick asserted that the near future will bring even more proof of the strengthening of his organization as the leading producing and distributing unit of the industry. The members of the sales force agreed that they were returning to their individual sections imbued with the Selznick spirit of making 1920, which has already established itself as a record-breaker.

Five Business Sessions Held.

During the five days of the convention there were five business sessions, at which all matters pertaining to the plans for the future year were thrashed out in full. Details of these meetings were not made public, with the exception of the opening day, when Lewis J. Selznick welcomed the members of the organization in a pointed and significant address. Upon Mr. Selznick's appearance at 11 o'clock on Monday morning, April 5, the assemblage greeted him with cheers, after which he introduced Mr. Sam Morris, who presided at the meeting. Mr. Selznick, in his brief talk, thanked the men of the organization for their loyalty and endeavor, saying, "I believe there is no body of men to be found in the entire industry so completely loyal and harmonious as those in the various branches of the Selznick Enterprises."

Herbert Kaufman, widely known editorial writer, whose editorials are being produced for the screen by Mr. Selznick, was next introduced by Mr. Morris and made a brief address. On the following days of the convention several of the Herbert Kaufman subjects were screened and made a deep impression upon all who saw them. Upon roll call at the Tuesday afternoon session, every branch manager said that these editorial features in pictures were the greatest short stuff they had ever seen. Three of them had been shown in the morning on Tuesday.

Others Who Made Speeches.

Other addresses at the Monday business session were made by Briton N. Busch, president of Republic; Charles Rogers, director of sales for Select and Republic; Charles Pettijohn, assistant to Lewis J. Selznick; David Selznick, the youthful secretary of Selznick Pictures and assistant treasurer of Select; Warren W. Lewis, editor of "The Brain Exchange"; Lee Kugel, director of advertising and publicity; Randolph Bartlett, of the editing department; Charles McClintock, exploitation director; V. P. Whitaker, recently appointed district manager for the Pacific Coast, and Phil Kauffman, general manager of the Canadian branches.

A luncheon followed the Monday morning session, at which representatives of the trade press were guests of honor. Precedents at this luncheon were discarded and there were no speeches. Instead, the eighty people present were taken in motor cars to the Selznick studios in Fort Lee and the Bronx, where they met the stars and directors, among whom were Olive Thomas, Elaine Hammerstein, Zena Keefe, Ralph Ince, Alan Crosland, George Archainbaud and William P. S. Earle.

The social side of the five days was not neglected, and was entered into with as much spirit as were the business sessions. On the opening night of the meetings the convention witnessed the performance of "My Lady Friends" at the Comedy Theatre. Tuesday night a double social program was scheduled, including "The Hot-tentot," starring William Collier at the George M. Cohan Theatre, and the Ziegfeld Frolic, atop the New Amsterdam at midnight. "As You Were," a musical comedy, was witnessed on Wednesday night, bringing the theatre parties of the week to a fitting close.

All of Friday was given over to business sessions.

Those Who Attended.

Those in attendance at the conference included Select branch managers Charles Walder, from Albany; W. R. Liebman, Atlanta; Benjamin P. Rogers, Boston; A. W. Moses, Buffalo; Ben W. Neither Norma Nor Constance Talmadge Intend to Quit Circuit, Says Schenck

A LLEGATIONS that a sales executive for a producing and distributing organization is making misstatements of facts to members of First National Exhibitors Circuit and to many other independent theatre owners concerning the activities and intentions of Joseph M. Schenck, president of both the Norma Talmadge Film Company and the Constance Talmadge Film Company, are contained in a statement made this week by officials of First National, in which they brand the practice they charge as "a premeditated attempt to victimize and terrorize the exhibitors with lies and slander."

The statement was issued following receipt at the general office for First National of telegrams from its members in the Far West, requesting verification or denial of the statements complained of, to the effect that Mr. Schenck had signed a contract with his organization for the release of attractions starring Norma and Constance Talmadge after his present contract with First National had been fulfilled.

"This is not true," declare the First National officers. "We have heard of several previous instances when information has been imparted to exhibitors by this particular sales executive or his associates, in which Mr. Schenck's affiliation with First National was described as temporary, that he was not satisfied and that he regretted that he had failed to accept their offer of a contract, made at the time he signed the agreement which gave the circuit distribution of a series of special attractions starring Norma and Constance Talmadge."

"Beyond the bare fact that his organization tried strenuously to have Mr. Schenck sign with it instead of First National, there is not a particle of truth or substance in these statements."

What Schenck Wrote to Schwall.

"So that exhibitors may have at least the premise of a few facts direct from Mr. Schenck as one individual involved, we are making public the following letter from him, addressed to H. O. Schwalbe as secretary-treasurer of First National, and in which he states his personal attitude in the matter:

"Rumors have been circulated in the past few weeks to the effect that I have discussed the making of a contract for Norma and Constance Talmadge pictures at the expiration of my present contract with your concern. I have paid no attention to them up to the present time."

"Recently I received a communication from J. J. Von Herberg, a member of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, informing me that a representative of one of the leading distributing organizations in the picture industry made a statement to the said Von Herberg that I have signed contracts for the two above-mentioned stars with that distributing organization, the contracts to take effect at the expiration of my present contract with your organization. This statement is absolutely untrue and incorrect, and I take this opportunity to deny it most emphatically, as I believe it is both injurious to me and to my stars."

"My dealings with your organization have been so satisfactory that I have absolutely no reason to contemplate changing my affiliations, and to do so without any cause or reason would reflect ingratitude on both myself and my stars."

"Kindly deny it in the trade papers just as emphatically as you possibly can, and I am ready to back you up in your denial. To convince you of the truth of my statement to you (although I know that you do not need any evidence—my word to you is sufficient) I will give $5,000 to any charitable organization you designate if any distributing organization can show you any evidence or proof of my having signed contracts with them for Norma or Constance Talmadge pictures."

"In conclusion I wish to say that my relations with you at the present time are so agreeable and satisfactory that I do not contemplate making any change, and I hope that I shall be able to do business with you for years and years to come!"

Frances Marion off to Europe.

Frances Marion, Cosmopolitan Productions' scenarist, who is responsible for the scenarios for "Humoresque," directed by Frank Borzage, and "The World and His Wife," directed by Robert G. Vignola, has sailed for Europe in connection with an important literary mission for Cosmopolitan Productions. Miss Marion will spend some time in England and the continent in conference with some famous authors whose literary works will be screened by Cosmopolitan Productions.

Harry M. Crandall Succeeds Kendall as President of Associated Exhibitors, Inc.

HARRY M. CRANDALL, of Washington, D. C., was elected president of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., during the course of a meeting of the board of directors held this week at the offices of the organization. Mr. Crandall succeeds Messmore Kendall, whose resignation as president was accepted by the board in view of the fact that extreme pressure of other business made it impossible for him to continue in an executive capacity.

Mr. Crandall's office as treasurer is to be filled by H. H. Wellenbrink, who now is secretary and treasurer, as well as a member of the board of directors.

The number of important negotiations virtually closed and the volume of business transacted during the two-day meeting are indications that the Associated Exhibitors, Inc., soon will become one of the most important units in the industry. After the meeting announcement was made by General Manager F. C. Quimby that, while arrangements for at least one source of product practically were completed, and while assurances of several other channels of ingress of big special productions were forthcoming, there still remain formal details to be gone through which make it inadvisable to make the arrangements public at the present moment.

Change Will Not Affect Plans.

Mr. Quimby stated that the changes in executive personnel would in no wise affect the workings of the organization. He is known to have been negotiating with many important individuals and factors in the industry during the past few weeks, and it is said that the Associated Exhibitors are holding off from making definite announcements until they have lined up propositions formidable enough to make the organization a leader among the "big fellows" from the moment the first gun is fired.

According to members of the board of directors, Mr. Kendall's resignation was accepted with regret. It is understood that Mr. Kendall stated that no matter what his personal wishes in the case might be,

McAdoo and Price Resign from the United Artists

WILLIAM GIBBS McADOO, general counsel, and Oscar A. Price, president, have retired from United Artists Corporation. No statement is forthcoming from either at this time. Mr. Price also has been a director of the corporation. Hiram Abrams, general manager, left New York City on April 1 for the West Coast.

What prompted the resignations of Mr. Price and Mr. McAdoo is the subject of considerable speculation. The former is reported to be a heavy stockholder in United Artists.

The first annual meeting of directors and stockholders will be held on Monday, April 12, in Wilmington, Del., instead of in New York City. Those who are expected to be present are Mr. Price, Dennis F. O'Brien, representing Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Fairbanks; Nathan Burkan, representing Charlie Chaplin, and Albert H. T. Banzhaf, representing David W. Griffith.

That Mr. Abrams may succeed Mr. Price is being discussed as a possibility by the trade. He is in Los Angeles and attempts to reach him for a statement have failed.

he felt that the affairs of the Capitol Theatre and affiliated business interests required so much of his time that he could not possibly do justice to the Capitol and to the Associated Exhibitors at the same time.

Capitol Theatre Keeps Kendall Busy.

Mr. Kendall explained also that, inasmuch as the Capitol Theatre Enterprise already is engaged in the production of pictures to a small extent and, undoubtedly, will go into production on a much larger scale soon, he felt that such activities would not be consistent with a continuation of his holding office in the Associated Exhibitors.

Kentucky Legislature Fails to Pass Censorship Measure

THE Kentucky Legislature recently adjourned without getting around to final passage of the moving picture censorship bill, which was passed by one division, and which threatened to cause considerable trouble if it got through. This board would have been composed of a women representative of the Women's Clubs' Federation, State Exhibitors and State Superintendent of Education, each to receive $1,000 annually. However, appropriation bills had practically no chance either with the Senate or Governor, and the work of the house was lost. The secretary was to have received $5,000 a year, and expense held to $8,000 annually, while $1 a reel was to have been the censorship charge.

The Legislature did enact a new license bill into law, under which all theatres will pay twenty cents a seat as a state tax, on top of their city tax. On a house seating 1,000 persons the tax hereafter will be $2,000 a year to the state, as against $40 prior to the passage of this law. However, the picture houses got off light alongside of the hotels, which pay fifty cents a year a room, and others were hit as hard.

Circuit Statistics Afford Exhibitors Chance to Justify Admission Charges

A PRACTICAL statistical compilation affording exhibitors infinite opportunities to justify respective admission prices and at the same time to compare personal responsibilities with those of several hundred other showmen has just been completed by First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Covering a total of 238 theatres in eighteen states and twenty-one cities, this bit of practical research has brought out a number of general axioms, several theories that have held true under severe tests and the outstanding fact that only about 5 percent of the first and second run theatres seating 1,000 people or more have a smaller top admission price than 25 cents for night performances.

Seeking further than surface reasons for the fact that the larger houses charge the highest of admission prices and generally are the most successful, even in a proportionate way, First National's compilers find that usually a special feature attraction is responsible for the high scale of prices. A typical accounting for the fact cites the case of a western theatre where a uniform 20-cent admission price had been charged. A feature was booked and prices were boosted to 35 cents. "Auction of Souls" pointed out the way to bigger receipts and profits.

Interesting Observations.

The management decided to keep the admission price at 35 cents for a two-weeks' tryout. The idea was a success. Special features were booked and today the price is popular locally. If there is an exhibitor conclusion that can be drawn, it is the fact that experience has shown that the most practicable method of raising the admission scale is to book a special feature, advance prices and through the use of succeeding features keep the price up to that scale.

A number of interesting exhibitor observations can be drawn from the table of statistics that follow below. For instance, contrary to the law of "larger theatre, larger admission prices," it was discovered that the Auditorium Theatre, Saginaw, Mich., seating 3,000 people—100 per cent more than any other theatre in the city—has a 10-15-cent admission scale, whereas eight second run theatres in the same city seating between 250 and 300 people have a uniform admission price of 20 cents.

Another novel case may be cited concerning a condition at Pittsburgh. Here, three theatres, the William Penn, Garden and Alhambra, all seating between 1,000 and 1,200, have an admission scale that ranges from 17 to 22 cents. These theatres are second run houses, whereas the Grand, Olympic and Liberty, all seating more than 2,000, have a scale that ranges from 25 to 35 cents.

Lowest Frisco Price Is 20 Cents.

It is interesting to note that only two out of twenty San Francisco theatres seat less than 1,000 people, and that the top admission price goes no lower than 20 cents. The Central Theatre, of that city, with 400 seats, charges a general admission price of 25 cents. Prices here are on a higher scale than elsewhere, regardless of what may be said about inexpensive living conditions in California. The Imperial, Strand, Rialto, California, Portola, Tivoli and others have a top price of 75 cents or more and a number of second run houses have a scale the top price of which is 50 cents.

Denver presents another interesting case to the exhibitor. In this city are twenty second run houses charging an admission price of 10 cents. Seating capacity of these theatres ranges from 50 to 960. The Thompson Theatre, with 1,100 seats, charges night prices of 20 and 25 cents.

One of the several first run houses with a seating capacity of 1,000 or less and charging an admission price of 20 cents for night performances is the Alhambra Theatre, Indianapolis.

An odd condition exists at Springfield, Mass., where three second run theatres have a proportionately higher minimum admission scale than the first run houses. The smallest admission price of the Phillips, Strand and Garden—second run houses—is 17 cents, while that of the Palace, Broadway and another theatre is 10 and 15 cents.

Alpha	300	Second	10	HARRY N. CRANDALL, of Washing- ton, D. C., chairman of the exhibi- tors' branch of the Americanism Com- mittee of the Motion Picture Industry, has just returned from a trip which brought him as far west as California and into con- ference with various exhibitors in nearly all the larger cities of the country. Mr. Crandall was very enthusiastic over the way that exhibitors are taking hold of the Americanization program of the in- dustry and has set to work on elaborate plan in the hope that every single exhibi- tor in the country will get behind the movement and will make it a success. The statement sent out by Mr. Crandall to exhibitors this week follows, in part: "I am proud of the way exhibitors are responding to the appeal of our govern- ment in its fight against Bolshevism. I find that the exhibitors are solidly behind this movement and intend to make a success of it. Put Aside All Differences. "However, there yet remains a great deal of work to be done and it is for this reason that I am writing to you today. We exhibitors have an opportunity we cannot afford to ignore. We must put aside all differences that we may have had with our competitors—the mere fact that he may plan an Americanization picture before we do, does not mean that we are not obligated to play this picture. We must get away from the dollars and cents idea and must respond to the call of country. "We cannot afford to fail in this emer- gency. To do so would be a severe indict- ment to the industry and the prestige that we have gained by our past work would be wiped out and our great influence would be laughed at. Unless we can muster our forces and stand united in this movement we are very apt to be legislated against as was the liquor business, and every leg-				islative body in the country will attack us if we fail in this movement. "The producers have agreed to make fifty-two pictures and they will be produced at the rate of one a week. It is our duty to see that we show every single one of these pictures in our theatres. I want to impress upon you at this time that not a single cent of profit is to be made by anyone connected with the industry. In- stead, I know that producers and distrib- utors will lose thousands of their own dollars in order that this campaign shall be a success. "The first of the Americanization pic- tures, 'The Land of Opportunity,' proved to be a big winner, not only from a box- office standpoint, but from the point of view of the public. I played the picture in my eight houses and could repeat the same, as I have had many requests to do so. Hundreds of people have requested that I show this picture especially to the foreign element and to the children. If you have not already played this picture it is your duty to do so. Urges Use of Trailers. "I also want to impress upon the exhibi- tors the importance of using the trailers that have been made. They are now being sent out by the various distributing com- panies and should be used at the end of all big feature pictures. Franklin K. Lane, former secretary of the interior, and chair- man of the Americanism Committee, spent much time preparing and writing these trailers himself. "If you have not already done so, will you not have all slides made at once con- taining the subject matters of these trailers and show three or four at each perform- ance. In my recent trip throughout the country I found that many exhibitors were doing this and were meeting with good results."

In China, Where Time Is No Object, Theatre Patrons Decline to Go Home

During Chinese Holidays, Whole Families Spend Twelve Hours at a Time in Movie Houses, While Creditors, Carrying Lanterns in Broad Daylight, Tour Streets and Their Debtors Meet "a Capon's Destiny"

By F. MARSHALL SANDERSON

BUSINESS in the China motion picture houses has been nothing to boast of lately. Many strong counter attractions are moving around the big centers and there are yet more to come. It cannot be said that our picture houses are asleep either, as some remarkably good programs have been offered of late, but what with the cafes and cabarets and vaudeville companies all making a strong bid for patronage, competition has been keen, and with our very small foreign population, comparatively speaking, it becomes a hard task to fill every vacant seat, or anything like it, whatever the attraction may be.

The Apollo Theatre, Shanghai, is screening really high class features and the management puts out strong advertising. In fact, some of their publicity stuff is of a most attractive character and there is no doubt that the combination of good offerings and proper advertising is responsible for the full houses seen here lately. The Victoria Theatre, Shanghai, has put on one or two big features, including "The Honor System" and "Virtuous Men" and are now covering our walls with posters announcing Nazimova.

Commit Suicide to Escape Evil Spirits.

We are in the midst of the Chinese New Year holidays just as I write this, starting on February 19 and continuing more or less for about a month. New Year's day and the days following are, with the Dragon and Moon Festivals, the only time when the Chinese cease their exaggerated activity. Like our Easter, the date upon which the New Year falls is regulated by the moon and is generally about the middle or end of February.

For days past the streets have been thronged with Chinese making their purchases of food and gifts. Many shopkeepers are said to sometimes sell at a loss in order to realize money to meet their liabilities, for New Year's day is the greatest of the four annual settling-up times of the Chinese. He who cannot pay his debts then is said to have a capon's destiny, in allusion to the number of fowls killed at the festival. The doors of his shop may be carried away and evil spirits allowed to enter his premises. In these circumstances many commit suicide.

Creditors Ape Diogenes.

It is not considered good form to dun anyone for a debt on such a joyful festival as New Year's day, so the creditor looks about with a lantern in the broad daylight. By a social fiction the sun is not supposed to have risen, for there is the lantern, it is still yesterday and the debt can be claimed. Every shop and house has red inscriptions on door posts, junks, in fact, on almost everything. The inscriptions are generally the work of literary men and sold at tables in the streets.

Theatres and motion picture houses are crowded during the festival, and even the foreign theatres share in the increased business, due to the fact that all business is absolutely at a standstill for three or four days, and time hangs heavily out here at this period of the year when outdoor recreation is impossible.

In the Chinese picture houses performances commence about 2 p. m. and continue with short intervals until the early hours of the following day. Sometimes whole families will sit and see the same picture through several times. Time is no object, and as all kinds of food and refreshments are being constantly offered for sale, there is no need to return home for meals, and as they are out to spend the cash why not spend the day in the theatre.

Censoring an Unprofitable Business.

Peking, of all places in the world, now has organized a censorship on films. Before exhibited every picture must be examined and approved by a government censorship board. There is only one foreign theatre in Peking, the remainder, probably not more than six, are Chinese. Except Hongkong, where censorship is somewhat strict, no other place outside of Peking demands this, though on more than one occasion the foreign police authorities in Shanghai have exercised the right to stop the exhibition of any picture endangering the morals of the people.

Much has been said and written regarding the wonderful progress of the picture business in Canton. I paid this city a visit a few weeks ago and was very much surprised to find most things that had been written about the business were greatly exaggerated. Business is not good and the prices offered for features and super productions were absurd, and the reason assigned was lack of patronage and the small prices charged for admission. I found on investigation that this was true. There are several theatres, and every one that I visited was poorly attended and certainly not showing much of a profit to the owners.

Isis Takes New Lease of Life.

The Isis Theatre, Shanghai, formerly run by A. Rumjahn, has now been taken over by Tsung Hwen-daung, who also runs the Great World, a very popular place of amusement for the Chinese during the summer months. It looks as if the Isis, under its new management, is in for a new lease of life. It is probably the largest cinema house in Shanghai and caters more or less to Chinese and other Orientals.

The New World, an amusement concern, which is not to be confused with the Great World, situated in what may be considered the best location in Shanghai, and doing a big business in pictures during the summer months, was recently closed, failure being attributed to indifferent management. I noticed, however, the place had opened its doors again on China's New Year's day and was flying the American and Chinese flags. I learned also that a fresh start was being made, and there is no doubt that with wise and careful management it can be made into a very profitable amusement house.

Reviews printed in Moving Picture World are based upon the production exactly as it will be shown upon your screen. And they are dependable, fair and honest in their expressions.

"The Inner Voice" Is Silent Because Silence Is Golden in Such Scenes as One and Two.

But we'll bet it's all "outer" shouting in the closing picture. E. K. Lincoln is the star in this production made by the American Cinema Corporation.

D. W. Griffith Patents Apparatus for Picture Projection with Color Effects

D. W. GRIFFITH has received from the commissioner of patents at Washington the exclusive right to make, use and vend certain methods and apparatus for the projection of motion and other pictures with color effects.

The Griffith patent, which covers a term of seventeen years, will give the producer ample protection against the copying of his lighting effects in color as first introduced by him in connection with the showing of "Broken Blossoms" at the Cohan Theatre, New York, last May.

It has been said that several producers attempted to appropriate the Griffith method of lighting immediately after the initial showing of "Broken Blossoms," and that in spite of warnings from Albert L. Gray, of the Griffith offices, the practice was continued. Attorney O. Ellery Edwards made application for a patent to protect Mr. Griffith's interests, with the result that the Griffith method and apparatus now are fully protected.

The Griffith patent covers a wide range of lighting for the projection of both motion and other pictures and covers both the process and the mechanism by means of which pictures may be projected upon an illuminated screen which has colored lights blending with the pictures shown.

Oblique Stream of Colored Light.

The Griffith process is described as follows:

"Producing colored pictures on an opaque screen, which consists of throwing pictures by a projector onto one surface of said screen and simultaneously illuminating the screen with diffused colored lights thrown on the same surface of the screen in a direction oblique to the stream of light from the projector."

The apparatus patented is as follows:

"An opaque screen, a projector, a bank of colored lights out of the path of light from said projector and for the purpose of throwing diffused colored light onto the same surface of said screen, so that a colored picture is shown when the apparatus is in use."

Those who saw the Griffith production of "Broken Blossoms" will recall the curious, vibrant mauve and salmon pink tints that came and went across the surface of the screen like fleeting colored shadows during the unfolding of the story and added attractiveness to the play.

"STREET CALLED STRAIGHT" IS SELECTED FOR SUNDAY EVENING CHURCH SERVICE

ANOTHER indorsement of the spiritual quality of Basil King's "The Street Called Straight," produced by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation as an Eminent Authors Picture, comes in the news that the film has been selected for showing at the Oak Cliff Christian Church, Dallas, following the regular Sunday evening service.

The picture has already been run at the Queen Theatre, Dallas, where it attracted so much attention that there was a general demand for its presentation before the Sunday evening congregation.

Basil King's story, an adaptation of his novel of the same title, is exerting a great influence throughout the country in converting religious bodies to a recognition of the good in photoplays.

Recently it was made the subject of a sermon at the Pro Cathedral in Los Angeles and everywhere it has been highly endorsed by organizations interested in developing the moral consciousness of a community.

Robertson-Cole Secures Screen Rights to Arsene Lupin Stories for Period of Year

ROBERTSON-COLE has announced the signing of a contract whereby it obtains the complete screen rights to the Arsene Lupin detective stories, which were written by Maurice Leblanc, and which are the most celebrated series of criminal studies and romances from a world standpoint. The Robertson-Cole contract will cover a period of years, and during this time the distributing company will have the exclusive right to use all the stories from the collection.

Arsene Lupin, the character who has the central role in all these stories, is the master criminal of fiction. He has even been pitted against Sir A. Conan Doyle's famous character, Sherlock Holmes, whom he repeatedly bests in one of the most popular books of the Arsene Lupin series, the book known as "Arsene Lupin vs. Sherlock Holmes."

"813" to Be the First.

The pictures which will be based on the Arsene Lupin stories for distribution by Robertson-Cole are not the first screen productions which have been made in this country. Paramount-Artcraft and Vitagraph have each made one picturized version. The present plan is to release a limited number each year and to market them as specials. Work on the first production is to start shortly.

Robertson-Cole in contracting for the Arsene Lupin series of stories dealt directly with Joseph Menchen who controls the world rights. The first one of the stories which will be put on the screen is "813," one of the most dramatic and mysterious of the whole series of Arsene Lupin stories.

Nowell to Portray Leading Role.

Robertson-Cole has under contract for appearance as the leading character of this story, Wedgewood Nowell. Mr. Nowell was born in Portsmouth and was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania. He had a stage career in which he supported Blanche Bates, Amelia Bingham and William Faversham, before going on the stage. Recently he has been appearing in many current successes. The first Arsene Lupin story will be produced by a well known director, whose name will be announced later.

Arsene Lupin is described in the Leblanc stories as having been first a noted criminal with whom the police could not cope and later having mended his ways to become a government agent. His vast fund of information regarding the methods of criminals was of such help to the French Government as to render him invincible in the detection and pursuit of criminals. Besides the book "Arsene Lupin vs. Sherlock Holmes," four other volumes have been issued of these stories. They are: "The Extraordinary Adventures of Arsene Lupin," "The Exploits of Arsene Lupin" and "The Hollow Needle." Each volume contains a great number of stories, furnishing in the aggregate an enormous wealth of material for the director seeking a story of mystery.

Gladys Brockwell Plays in Two Films During Same Day

COMPLETING work in "Rose of Nome," an Alaskan story written especially for her by Barbara DeMarr Deely, and in which she was directed by the veteran Edward J. LeSaint, Gladys Brockwell, Fox star, stepped at once before the camera in the role of Elinore Duane, central character in "Sister to Salome," on the same day she finished her previous vehicle.

"Rose of Nome" was finished by Mr. LeSaint in the morning and the scenario checked by cameraman and director. During luncheon at the studio the star and director studied the story of "Sister to Salome," and at the end of the meal Miss Brockwell went to her dressing room and donned her make-up for the new tale written for her by Julius G. Furtman, who is a recent addition to the Fox scenario staff in California.

That same afternoon the first scenes of the new picture were shot—meaning that the versatile star enjoyed not even a day's rest from the tiresome work of the great out-of-doors picture she had just completed. William Scott will appear once more opposite the charming star in "Sister to Salome." Ben Deely will be seen as the heavy.

Maryland Lawmakers Pass Sunday Bill, Giving Baltimore City Vote Privilege

THE bill permitting moving pictures on Sundays after 2 p. m. in Baltimore City, which was introduced in the House of Delegates by George D. Iverson, Jr., of Baltimore, has passed both branches of the legislature at Annapolis, Md. The voters in Baltimore City will be given an opportunity to vote on the measure at the election which will be held this November, as the bill carries a referendum.

In both the House and the Senate the measure failed to pass when it was first taken up, due to not having a constitutional majority. Later it was reconsidered in each branch and passed.

The moving picture exhibitors, who strongly backed this bill, and who were led in the fight by George A. McDermitt, manager of Loew's Hippodrome, included Charles E. Whitehurst and Louis A. DeHoff, of the Whitehurst Theatrical Enterprises, who were represented at Annapolis by Elmer J. Cook, an attorney; Joseph Castberg and Bernard Depkin, Jr., representing the Castberg and Nixon-Nirdlinger interests in Baltimore; Guy L. Wonders, of the Wilson Theatre; Wallace High, chairman of the legislative committee of the Exhibitors' League, of Maryland.

At first the league maintained a neutral attitude, stating that it would let the people decide. Later on a special meeting was called and a vote taken on the question, and it was found that there was an overwhelming majority of the theatres in Baltimore who were in favor of Sunday opening.

In a statement published on March 28, the Baltimore exhibitors who were in favor of Sunday moving pictures outlined their stand. Operators' Union, Local 181, opposed Sunday opening.

Educator Takes Issue with Managers Who Fear Effect of Non-Theatricals

The Moving Picture World in its issue of March 20 told of the concern manifested by Washington City exhibitors and exchangers at the growing proportions of the "non-theatrical" business. Complaints were being heard that schools, churches and community centers were cutting into their business. A member of the grievance committee operating in the District, Virginia, Maryland and North Carolina, following complaints from a number of the larger cities in the territory, expressed the views of his associates in strong terms, declaring the community shows were becoming a menace to the commercial motion picture business. The following letter has been received from a prominent educator, one who has had much experience with motion pictures in school work. If any exhibitor or exchanger cares to take issue with him the Moving Picture World will be glad to print his views.

WE read an interesting article in the Moving Picture World which was headed "Non-theatrical hurts regular trade; Washington exhibitors protest in alarm." Poor exhibitors of Washington, D. C.; how short-sighted they are! If schools and community centers are making inroads on their business they have only themselves to blame. Either the exhibitors were failing to meet the demands of their patrons or they have been paying too much attention to their box office and not giving enough time to the creation of good-will.

Essentially, the theatre is the place for entertainment; the church, school and community center for religious, secular or social education. It is a mistake to make a school or church out of a theatre and the reverse is likewise true. If the "grievance committee" will hold its 25 cent price (admission) just a wee bit farther from their eyes, they might be able to see the larger field of usefulness in which they themselves may work.

How About the Other Side?

The Washington exhibitors wail about alleged competition which the churches are giving, but do they ever consider the other side? When a preacher discovers that the motion picture men are running full blast seven days a week from 11 a. m. to 12 p. m., and when he discovers that the movies do get the crowds, he would be narrow indeed who could not see how the motion picture may serve God as well as man.

Who dare blame the preacher who uses the cinema to draw a fair share of attention churchward? Foolish and short-sighted indeed is the church which will not make use of so valuable an instrument as the motion picture projector. By the investment of a few hundred dollars it is possible to pack the vacant pews.

Mr. Theatre Manager, you make no apology for the fact that you run your theatre on Sunday and thereby compete with the church. You have six unhampered days in which to bid for the business. The church asks only for one. You will make a plea for a liberal Sabbath, but you fight the idea of more liberality in the church.

"Consistency, Thou Art a Jewel."

Truly, "Consistency, thou art a jewel." If I were a preacher (and I am not) I would put a motion picture projector in my church, and if it were necessary to serve my boys and girls, young men and women five reels of celluloid in order that I may bring them to my church, I surely would do it. No manager who opens his theatre doors during the Sabbath day would have any license to object.

Now for a glance at the school and community center. Surely the "grievance committee" isn't serious when it purports to try to make anyone believe that the time will come when the exhibitor will say to the exchanges, "We cannot pay you $200 a day for your picture, because our receipts have fallen off, etc." And surely the committee is attempting to be facetious when it tries to draw its analogy between the saloon business and the motion picture business.

No One Class Should Have a Monopoly.

We fear the "grievance committee" is guilty of making a generality from one statistic. The matter of competition is more apparent than real. If the exhibitors are compelling the schools to compete, whose fault is it? No one class of people have or should have a monopoly on any good thing. Why should schools not offer the best?

The "grievance committee" ought to get into immediate touch with motion picture exhibitors of Pasadena, Cal., and Alta, Iowa, for some tips as to how they may tie up to the schools for the mutual advantage of both. No competition there; just good feeling all the way 'round, and what is more—excuse me—there was some competition at Pasadena when the exhibitors, themselves, were bidding against each other to determine who would be the man to give his picture to the schools (notice that the word is give, not sell or rent). Carl Carlson, a former school man now in the industry, proved to the exhibitors in Pasadena that motion pictures in the schools actually help the show business.

Creating Good Will.

The theatre manager in the little town of Alta, Iowa, pays to have some pictures run in the local consolidated school. He has learned how to cash in by expending a few dollars to create good-will. The youngsters see the picture in the afternoon at school, then go home to tell their parents about it. The theatre is packed at night by whole families.

Just one more illustration. There is a certain chain of motion picture theatres owned and operated by a Chicago show concern, the name of which is as familiar to theatrical men as Eastman is to film men. In a certain Michigan city this show concern has rented an opera house at a high figure merely to control the local show business. Some of the local people got the community center idea into their heads and wanted to use the opera house. Naturally the Chicago show syndicate controlled the situation. What happened? The Chicago concern rented the building to the community at $15 a night plus cost for heat and light—then threw in a free film program for good measure.

Worth $1,000 a Week.

Other theatre men who had the same breadth of vision as has been evinced by the Washington, D. C., "grievance committee" declared that the Chicago concern was surely throwing away perfectly good dollars. Not so; instead of throwing away money the venture is worth $1,000 a week to the Chicago syndicate. People who never before had been inside of a theatre got the motion picture habit by attending the free shows. The preachers of this Michigan city have not been running around trying to clamp on lids of censorship, nor have they been lifting any other bugaboo with which to frighten exhibitors.

The same representative of the Washington "grievance committee" fears that awful time when some so-called non-theatrical organization will be able not only to produce, but to dictate the kind of pictures it wants, the prices it will pay and the way the pictures are to be distributed. Let every one hope the members of the "grievance committee" are better prophets than their other statements would warrant assuming.

Co-operation Defined.

A great difficulty producers heretofore have experienced in the so-called non-theatrical field is to determine what schools, churches and community centers want, how much they can pay and how they will take care of the film. Settle all these points, you solve the problem and the success of a film producer will be assured. The producer will welcome the day when he may be able to know before he starts just how great the demand will be for his product.

In the last analysis the "grievance committee" has no grievance at all. It needs to learn the meaning of the word "co-operation," which has been defined by Lucas E. Wilson as follows: "Co-operation means so to conduct yourself that others can work with you."

Scenarists Have Not Reached Development Attained by Magazine and Stage Play Writers

THE greatest need of motion picture producers today is to develop writers for the future—specialists in screen material—because only in that way will the motion picture ever attain the standing of true literature, the highest form of pictorial expression, which is its destiny," said William LeBaron, scenario editor for Cosmopolitan Productions, at the studio in 127th street and Second avenue, New York.

"Under present conditions we do not compare with the magazines, the book publishers, or the stage as a medium of original expression. We are not their equals because we do not create as they create. We merely take what they have already brought out in original form and recreate it to suit our needs. We don't tell new stories; we tell somebody else's stories over again. That is not our real province. Ultimately, I believe, we shall have a literature of our own which will be in its way as great as the literature of the printed word or the literature of the spoken word."

Successful at Play Writing.

William LeBaron is well qualified to hold down the post of scenario editor. He has been a magazine editor for many years, during which time he has had a hand in the development of many promising writers. Prior to his association with Cosmopolitan Productions he was editor of Collier's Weekly, and he is also well known as a playwright. Two of his best known hits are "The Very Idea," which played all last season at the Astor Theatre, New York, and "Apple Blossoms," the current musical hit at the Globe Theatre, New York. He is one of the few writers who have been able to make a success both at the magazines and at the stage. His association with the motion picture business is due, according to his own statement, to his belief that eventually the screen will attain as high a literary quality of its own as is enjoyed today by the magazines and the stage.

"There isn't any doubt in my mind," said Mr. LeBaron, "that so far as the scenario department is concerned, the screen is still in its embryonic state. Nor, in my opinion, will the motion picture come into its own until it has established a story source within itself."

Scenario Writers Can Improve.

"While we have today several scenario writers whose weekly salary mounts up to a thousand dollars, we have not one writer who is as expert in his or her field as any one of thirty or forty playwrights I can name is in the production of stage plays, or magazine writers in the production of magazine stories. I mean to say that playwrights and magazine writers have achieved a higher degree of excellence and perfection at their respective callings than have any of our scenario writers at the screen."

"Contrary to first impression, this is rather a hopeful condition, because it shows that, however good some photoplays are, there is still room for improvement. And the improvement lies with the producers. It is up to them."

"The idea, as I see it, is to encourage able writers to take up the screen. A magazine writer writes his story with the magazine in mind. The playwright writes his play with the stage in mind. The technique of the photoplay is vastly different from the technique of either of these. To adapt a magazine story or a play to the screen and to do it as it should be done requires a thorough knowledge of the screen's latitude and scope. We have playwrights who can take a magazine story and make a play out of it not only to do them proud, but to uphold the best traditions of the stage. But we have no scenarists who know their trade as well as the playwrights know theirs and who can turn out as good work comparatively."

Must Interest Able Writers.

"What we need is able technicians, writers who can adapt for the screen as successfully as playwrights adapt for the stage. We must interest able writers in this new form of expression. We must make it profitable for them both from a literary and artistic point of view and the financial point of view to devote their best energies towards the production and development of screen material. To do so we must compete with the stage. We must establish some sort of basis of reward whereby the writer will profit from his writings in accordance with their value as established by the public. Perhaps a royalty arrangement like the playwrights will do."

"But only when we succeed in establishing a field of able technicians who will be as thorough in their work as are the playwrights in theirs, will we have started right toward insuring and giving to the screen a high quality of photoplays."

Wilson to Make Serials for Manheimer.

Fox New York Exchange Leads.

The William Fox third annual drive for increased business which covered the entire country, has just concluded with the New York sales exchange, of which Louis Rosenbluh is the executive, as the leader with the greatest volume of new business to its credit. The standing of the salesmen, according to their respective sales ability, will be announced soon.

It is expected that Cincinnati, Dallas, Cleveland and Detroit will be close on the heels of New York.

Charging Abuse, Washington Managers to End Sending Films for Examination

CHARGING that exhibitors have abused the privilege, the exchange managers of Washington, D. C., have decided to discontinue the sending out of films for screen examination. It seems that several cases have recently developed where films that have not been exhibited in the theatres have been sub-rented or loaned to clubs and societies for private viewing. A number of the companies here are interested in the matter because of their ability to market their product and there is a rumor to the effect that the Federal Trade Commission is to be apprised of the condition and the business activities of the men in question investigated.

One complaint involves the unauthorized use of a feature film in Baltimore, where it had been sent for screen examination and in some manner loaned to a manufacturing concern for exhibition for its employees. This was brought to light when an exhibitor having a theatre in the neighborhood of this concern declined to book the production on the ground that it had already been seen by a large number of people. The exchange was deprived of a first run booking.

Screen Exhibitions in City.

One of the exchange managers stated that in the rush to do business with the Baltimore exhibitors the exchanges have been sending out for screen examination more films than any single exhibitor could view, and that at one time there were twenty-eight or thirty film cases in the lobby of one of the theatres to be shown after the close of the regular performance.

Cases were also reported where films were ruined during screen examinations by the carelessness of the operator in rushing the film through and because of worn-out machines, the exchange deriving no benefit from the transaction. On and after April 15 no Washington exchange will send out for screen examination in any out-of-town theatre any production. Arrangements are being perfected whereby regular screen exhibitions will be given in this city, to which all of the exhibitors will be invited.

The exchange managers are anxious to co-operate to the fullest possible extent with the theatre men, but are not desirous of subjecting their merchandise to unauthorized use and unfair trade practices. The matter of the unauthorized use of the films in the cases already reported will be considered by the Washington Exchange Managers' Association.

Start Work on "Marooned Hearts."

The newest picture announced for production by Lewis J. Selznick is "Marooned Hearts," written by Lewis Allen Browne, famed for his writing of the first Americanization picture, "The Land of Opportunity," released by Selznick through Select Pictures.

Prominent in the cast of "Marooned Hearts" are Zena Keefe and Tom Lytell. George Archainbaud will direct.

Mildred Harris' Next Picture.

Mildred Harris Chaplin's second First National release, "Polly of the Storm Country" is now ready. The release date will probably be set shortly. It is entirely different both in theme and treatment, from "The Inferior Sex" and gives ample opportunity for the display of versatility which Mrs. Chaplin is known to possess.

Expect Enactment of Laws Regulating Child Problems and Advance Deposits

WITHOUT opposition, two bills of importance to the motion picture industry, each introduced by Senator Cotillo, were passed in the New York State Senate on April 7 and stand a good chance of ultimately becoming laws through favorable action on the part of the Assembly. The first of these bills, if it becomes a law, will permit children between the ages of 10 and 16 years to be admitted unaccompanied in the motion picture theatres of New York City, and once inside the building, they will be seated with other children, and all will be under the supervision of a matron whose references have been approved by the children's society. The services of this matron will be paid, according to the bill, by the proprietor of the theatre, who will also pay not more than $15 annually to the children's society.

The bill serves to put the regulation of children inside rather than outside of the theatre and is a constructive measure which it is generally believed will become statewide in the near future. Children will be allowed within the theatres after school hours and up until 8 o'clock at night, likewise on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays.

Situation Fraught With Danger.

At the present time, thousands of children attempt to enjoy motion picture shows, but in doing so they seek to have any stranger whom they may chance to meet at the entrance to the theatre, buy their admission tickets. The situation is one which is fraught with considerable danger to the children and one which, it is hoped, the passage of Mr. Cotillo's measure will remedy to a considerable extent. It is believed, also, that if the bill becomes a law it will encourage photoplays more suitable to children.

The second bill passed in the Senate on April 7 amends the general business law in relation to money deposited or advanced upon a contract to be applied to payments when due. It is a bill of interest to all motion picture exhibitors in the country, who are now forced to pay anywhere from 5 to 100 per cent. of the amounts of their contracts and are frequently victims of fly-by-night film concerns. The measure is along safety lines, and would protect exhibitors in many ways.

The bill reads as follows:

"Whenever money shall be deposited or advanced to secure the faithful performance of a contract, which may be applied to payments upon such contract when due, such money, until so applied, shall continue to be the money of the person making such deposit or advance and shall be a trust fund in the possession of the person with whom such deposit or advance is made and shall not be mingled with other funds or become an asset of such trustee."

It is claimed that there are a number of film companies which have been enabled to begin business, or nearly so, on the so-called advanced payments, running into the tens of thousands of dollars and on which no interest is paid and which, becoming a part of the company's general funds, are frequently involved in bankruptcy to the loss of the exhibitor.

Arthur James Resigns from Fox Film to Form His Own Publicity Organization

ARTHUR JAMES, who successively directed the publicity and advertising for Mutual Film Corporation in the days of its greatest prominence, for the Metro Pictures Corporation for four years during its growth from small beginnings to one of the big factors in the industry and for Fox Film Corporation since July, will on April 17, begin business for himself. Mr. James will conduct a general advertising and publicity business, handling both personal and company accounts, giving special attention to campaigns on big pictures.

He will have his headquarters in New York City and will have branch offices in Washington and Chicago. John Bowman will be in charge of the Chicago office, with headquarters in the Monadnock Building, and the Washington representative will be Theodore M. Knappen, with headquarters in the Southern Building. Carolyn Lowery, who was formerly on the staff of the Morning Telegraph, will be attached to Mr. James' organization and will leave within the next two weeks for a trip to the Pacific Coast as a representative of Mr. James.

Praises Fox and Sheehan.

Mr. James made the following announcement: "It has been my belief, after an experience of more than six years in publicity and advertising activities for motion pictures, that as a selling force it represents 50 per cent. in business importance. I do not believe that publicity will make a poor picture a success, nor that an indifferent director or actor can be elevated to greatness solely by the same process, but I do believe that publicity will make a great picture greater and enable directors and stars to receive their true rewards both in fame and in money, if they are well advised regarding their relationship to the public and to the exhibitor.

"I tendered my resignation to Fox Film Corporation with a sense of deep personal regret because of the fine spirit which pervades the organization and because of the full and free opportunities given to me to be active in its behalf, and I cannot omit a word of the highest praise for the showmanship and the fine personal qualities of William Fox and W. R. Sheehan, the big figures in the great organization.

First Head of A. M. P. A.

"I am glad to say that I begin business for myself with the cordial good wishes of my friends and with active accounts with which the public and the trade will shortly be made, I trust, very much acquainted. The National Council of Defense and the American Business Association will receive my immediate attention together with motion picture clients. In each case I shall give the campaigns my personal attention."

Mr. James has been actively identified with the growth of the motion picture industry, having served as vice-president with the National Association and as the first president of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers.

New Contract Indemnity Association to Seek Abolition of Deposit System

THROUGH the formation in Albany, N. Y., on April 7, of what is termed a Contract Indemnity Association of the New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, of which Sydney S. Cohen is president, a most important step was taken toward doing away altogether with the necessity of a deposit on the part of the exhibitor by guaranteeing all film contracts between members of the state league and producers. A. A. Fennyvessey, of Rochester, has been named chairman.

The association is really the outcome of a movement that has been under way for some little time, and which came to a head at the meeting of the executive committee of the State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League in Albany. It is now proposed to take up with the manufacturers the question of doing away with the deposit system by guaranteeing the contracts which the members have with the producers.

The Charter Members.

The association starts with the following membership: George E. Simpson, Rochester; L. A. Buettner, Cohoes; C. A. Hayman, Niagara Falls; Walter Hayes, Buffalo; Sydney S. Cohen, New York; H. Manus, Charles Cranidies, A. H. Schwartz, S. I. Berman, Brooklyn; Raymond O. Gillette, Waterville; J. W. Schatt, Gowanda; W. Bernstein, Albany; T. Jelenk and W. Shirley, Schenectady; George Roberts, S. Suckno, Albany; Harold Franklin, Buffalo; George W. Jackson, Elmira; Harold Dygert, East Rochester; G. A. Roberts, Middletown; F. C. Howe, Ithaca; W. Huxford, Skaneateles; H. G. Lux, Utica; F. F. Peters, Hornell; James Papayanskos, Watertown; J. C. Ellis, Alexandria Bay; F. C. Bitner, Olean; J. W. Schwartzwalder, Auburn.

Gus Konigswald, Brooklyn; W. J. McFarlane, Canadaigua; F. Kornbleite, Binghamton; William Smalley, Cooperstown; J. S. Burnham, Cortland; William Dillon, Ithaca; C. A. McCarthy, Hoosick Falls; Benjamin Young, Ilion; J. J. Farren, Rochester; C. L. O'Reilly, D. V. Picker, Charles Steiner, S. Saphire, New York; Ira Mosher, Buffalo; S. Heavy Bookings on Hank Mann.

Arrow Hank Mann Comedies are apparently becoming more popular with each new release. Letters and wires have arrived at the offices of the Arrow Film Corporation congratulating W. E. Shallenberger, president, upon the manner in which they are taking with motion picture theatre audiences all over the country.

The Hank Mann series have been booked into the largest houses in the land, among them Clune's Broadway, of Los Angeles, and the Capitol, New York.

Dramatic Critics of London Newspapers Give High Praise to "Broken Blossoms"

REPORTS received by Guy Croswell Smith, Ltd., foreign distributors for D. W. Griffith's "Broken Blossoms," indicate that this picture is attracting as much attention, and meeting with as much success in London as it did in New York. It is being presented three times daily at one of the most prominent theatres, the Alhambra, to capacity audiences. It is now in its third week, and as there has been no diminution in the crowds, it looks as if it were in for an indefinite run in order to accommodate all who wish to see it.

What is said to have been one of the most distinguished audiences that ever attended a London theatre was present at the premiere at the Alhambra, including as it did, Ambassadors, Cabinet ministers, Peers, Members of Parliament, Royal Academicians and celebrated authors.

Prior to the presentation at the Alhambra, a private showing was arranged by Emil Wertheimer, who controls the British rights. This was not only attended by leading members of the film trade in Great Britain, but by the dramatic critics of the leading English newspapers, and it is claimed that this was the first time that these critics have taken the cinema seriously and reviewed a film as they would a dramatic stage production.

A curious coincidence in connection with this showing of Griffith's "Broken Blossoms" is the fact that it was a Griffith film "The Birth of a Nation," which five years ago, achieved the same result with the New York dramatic critics. As in the case of "The Birth of a Nation" in New York, the unanimous verdict of the London critics on "Broken Blossoms" was favorable, and it was heralded as a distinct advance in the art of the cinema.

Great praise was given by the papers to the production and the wonderfully effective acting of Lillian Gish, Richard Barthelmess and Donald Crisp. William Archer, one of the world's foremost critics and writers on the drama, says in "The Star": "The production is technically a considerable advance on anything I have previously seen. * * * The acting is really remarkable. Lillian Gish makes a wonderfully pathetic figure of poor little Lucy. Mr. Barthelmess, as the Chinaman, produces admirable effects with great economy of means; and Mr. Donald Crisp, as Battling Burrows, is like an allegorical type of cruelty."

The "Post" said "it is quite an event in the history of film-craft and is one of the first steps on the road to really artistic wordless plays; while the "Morning Advertiser" says: "An extraordinary medley of love, purity, pathos, revolting brutality and incidents of life in the underworld admirably portrayed to the accompaniment of enchanting Eastern music, 'Broken Blossoms' holds one spell-bound without an interval from first to last."

The critic in "The Daily Chronicle" writes: "What is undoubtedly the finest tragedy ever set upon the screen has come to us from America. I have been waiting to see 'Broken Blossoms' for months, and now the picture surpasses expectations." Says "The Evening Standard": "It is a triumph in the creation of atmosphere, and most interesting of all, it shows that the art of the cinema is steadily advancing and is becoming, like opera, a blending of several arts. It is the last word in the art of the cinema," while "The Daily Sketch" says: "No words could add to the dramatic intensity with which the silent figures enact their story. There is 'atmosphere' produced by superb photography, an excellent setting to music, and the result is pure tragedy, such as the screen has never before achieved."

"The Daily Mail" says: "Depressing as the story may seem, the whole production is filled with a spark of genius which raises it above any film drama yet made and opens a new road for the expression of the highest dramatic art on the screen." "The Daily Express" says: "It is undeniably a wonderful film" and "The Daily Telegraph" says: "'Broken Blossoms' is a picture play which no lover of the screen art should omit seeing, if possible. * * * It holds us fascinated for more than an hour while the story is being unfolded!"

Spring Is Here!

So much love-making has been going on among the boys and girls of Watertown, N. Y., in the motion picture theatres of that city, that managers are now about to use slides requesting their patrons to refrain. Newspapers in Northern New York have commented quite freely and often in an unsympathetically amusing way on the situation.

An interesting sidelight on the London pre-showing is published by the critic of "The Daily Express," who viewed the picture in company with Thomas Burke, author of "Limehouse Nights," from one of which "The Chink and the Child," the picture was adapted. He quotes Mr. Burke as saying: "Prejudiced against the cinema, I came to smile. I went away to cable my high appreciation. I did not think that the screen could be so used to convey the essential spirit of the story."

To paraphrase a familiar saying: "They who came to laugh remained to praise."

Laemmle to Revive the Star Series Plan; Six Players To Be Featured in 48 Pictures

PREVIOUS to the release of the "Big Twelve," "The Big Money Twelve," and the "S. R. O. Twelve," Universal released its pictures under the Star Series plan. While the three series have been most successful for exhibitors, there has been an insistent demand for a resumption of the star series plan, and Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, has not only agreed to put the old plan into effect again but to extend it considerably.

The star series plan contemplates forty-eight exceptional pictures produced in rotation by six popular Universal stars. The first picture under this policy will be released the first week of July, and will be followed every week.

Mr. Laemmle was not only guided by the expressions of exhibitors, but the leading exchange managers of the organization were consulted. At conventions held in New York and Chicago two weeks ago, the unanimous opinion of exchange managers was to the effect that the star series plan is the most popular, and one which enables any exhibitor to obtain high class Universal pictures suitable for his particular theatre and patrons.

Stars Who Have Been Chosen.

The stars chosen for the series are Harry Carey, Edith Roberts, Carmel Myers, Frank Mayo, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran (co-starring) and one other star not yet named. Each of these stars will make eight pictures during the ensuing year.

"I believe," said Mr. Laemmle, discussing the star series plan, "that Universal will be able to give the best possible service to the maximum number of exhibitors under this plan. We have taken into consideration that some of our stars draw better than others in certain localities. An exhibitor now will be able to book pictures by the stars he knows are popular with his patrons. He also will be certain of eight pictures by each of the stars he books. He will be insured against competition for an entire year.

"We are announcing this new series now so that our exhibitors will know that they can count on first class Universal pictures with which to fill their theatres during the hot summer months.

"Particular attention is being paid to the selection of stories. We have had experts analyzing the kind of pictures in which our stars have made the greatest appeal in all sections of the country.

"Those are the kinds of pictures our exhibitors want and those are the kinds we are going to give them. Already a number of popular magazine stories by well-known authors, several original screen stories of unusual merit and the rights to several successful plays have been obtained.

Hubbard in Charge of Scenarios.

"Douglas E. Doty, known as one of the ablest fiction buyers and writers in the magazine world, has been engaged to occupy a prominent post in the Universal scenario department. He has just arrived at Universal City.

"Lucien Hubbard, a New York newspaper man of wide experience and who recently was the chief scenario writer for the Vitagraph company, also has just arrived at Los Angeles to take charge of the scenarios for the star series."

Clergy Rejects Sunday Receipts.

Ministers in Carthage, N. Y., declare that they do not wish the local moving picture theatres opened on Sundays even if the proceeds would be turned over to religious and charitable purposes. A few days ago, the local board passed a resolution to permit the theatres to run on Sundays with the understanding that the receipts were to go to local charities and to the churches. Without a single exception the pastors, through the local ministerial association, have declared themselves against the scheme, saying that they do not want any such funds and that the move was one that plainly commercializes the Sabbath.

Mary Thurman Painfully Burned When Incense Burner Exploded

Mary Thurman, who is featured in the Allan Dwan productions, "In the Heart of a Fool," and "The Scoffer" under the Mayflower banner, was painfully burned in her apartments in Los Angeles, when a Chinese incense burner exploded.

Miss Thurman's face was spattered with burning incense. The presence of her maid in the room at the time, saved the little star from possible disfigurement.

Although her face was painfully blistered, physicians declare Miss Thurman will be able to commence production on the next Allan Dwan picture May 1.

We Have with Us To-day

Dynamic Ella Fabrique, Who Combines Feminine Intuition with Business Acumen

B EING just natural," as Ella Fabrique expresses her character, is the simple reason why Detroit's woman manager of a photoplay house has made a remarkable success of her work.

But that isn't all, for Ella Fabrique is a miss of 22 summers, pretty, plentifully supplied with the intuition of her sex,

Ella Fabrique
Detroit woman exhibitor.

lots of Detroit's dynamic energy, beside "being just natural." So she knows what her patrons want, and for these manifold reasons she is acquiring a young but substantial fortune through the sale of thrills, heart throbs and a great deal of laughter. It is not because Miss Fabrique just happens to know what her pleasure-seeking audiences desire that she watches them go away satisfied. It is because she has studied these audiences as well as her own emotions and has learned the provincial tastes appealing to that part of the city which her theatre serves.

So Miss Fabrique knows exactly just what sort of chills the folks like to have play tag up and down their spines, just the right kind of sob stuff to furnish a delightfully weepy time for her feminine subjects, and the variety of humor that will produce a regular man's-sized, vest-button-bustin' laugh.

A Vanity Bag? No, a Job.

When the war made men almost as scarce as brass nickles, and Warren and Cohen, owners of Detroit vaudeville and photoplay theatres, were scouring Detroit for a competent man to manage their Coliseum Theatre, a neatly dressed young woman appeared at their office.

"What do you want?" questioned Cohen, expecting an inquiry for a glove or a vanity bag lost in one of the theatres.

"A job."

Explanations followed.

"I never ran a theatre in my life," Miss Fabrique told Mr. Cohen, "but I know just the way the Coliseum fans would like to have one conducted."

The young woman followed this with a smile that would have done credit to Doug Fairbanks and so ended all argument. Her only stipulation was that she should not be annoyed by any mere men employees puttering around her and that she should be given free rein in the selection of pictures and in the conduct of the house.

Kids and Cats Denied Admission.

The managing of the theatre was even more than some men might dare to tackle. Among other disagreeable matters was the presence of a "gang" of youngsters, which the neighborhood harbored, of the sort whose chief ambition in life is to make themselves known by creating disturbances ranging from sheer devilishness to the innocent pleasure of bringing a cat into the theatre and then pulling its tail.

But the gang that terrorized the Coliseum in pre-Fabrique days died a sudden and ignominious demise. Miss Ella quite radically blacklisted every gangster and denied him admission until his reformation was complete. The grown-up kids that attempted roughhouse tactics were invited with severe respectfulness to enjoy the outside air. The house became a model of refinement.

The young manager's smile and her strictness are not her only assets by any means. She flings a wicked paste brush or tack hammer when it comes to sticking up posters, and if the operator should fail to appear on time she steps right into the asbestos-lined booth and shoots an accurately focussed film from the projecting machine, like a veteran. Other times she will hurry back to the box office and throw Uncle Sam's silver around like a bank cashier, or check up the releases with a pencil and turn out next week's program for the waiting printer.

Played Detective Successfully.

Nor is that all. When Warren and Cohen suspected a cashier and a ticket taker at one of their theatres of practicing a small graft whereby they pocketed a fourth of the box office receipts, they did not hire an expensive private detective to discover the offenders. Instead Miss Fabrique was sent to the theatre to be put to work. It was explained that she was a stranded actress whom Messrs. Warren and Cohen desired to aid until she could get an engagement. The very first day Miss Fabrique learned full details of the petty grafting as well as all parties concerned.

Miss Fabrique came to the conclusion many months ago that movie patrons relish the spice of vaudeville, no matter how amateurish, just as long as it is refined. Immediately she initiated an amateur booking office of Detroit talent which she furnishes to a dozen other movie houses; the cream of her amateur circuit she plays at her own theatre.

Miss Fabrique is maidently reticent about the secrets of her success, but she has said that movie owners would do well to heed the fact that men follow women's notion of entertainment.

Big Demand Created for Cotton Pictures.

Gerald F. Bacon's six-reel production, "Blind Love," starring Lucy Cotton, is the fourth play by Max Marcin, author of "Cheating Cheaters," "The Eyes of Youth" and "The House of Glass," to be adapted for screen presentation. The picture was released recently on the independent market by Nathan Hirsh, president of the Aywon Film Corporation, and reports from buyers in the New England and Western territories are to the effect that the bookings are above average.

Buys Rights to "Road of Ambition."

Myron Selznick, president of Selznick Pictures, announces that he has purchased the rights to the novel, "The Road to Ambition," written by Elaine Sterne. "The Road to Ambition" was especially purchased by Mr. Selznick as a starring vehicle for Eugene O'Brien.

Reviews printed in Moving Picture World are based upon the production exactly as it will be shown upon your screen. And they are dependable, fair and honest in their expressions.

This Shows Ella Fabrique at Work on Her Theatre.

Just proving that it is not alone the man but the woman that can put on movie programs.

Director Miller Overrides Precedent in Producing "The Law of the Yukon"

PRECEDENTS that have stood for years were completely disregarded by Charles Miller in making "The Law of the Yukon," the first of his series of specials for Mayflower Photoplay Corporation. The picture is about completed and will be released soon by Realart Pictures Corporation. It is inspired by Robert W. Service's famous poem in the volume, "The Spell of the Yukon," published by Barse and Hopkins, New York City.

More than 100,000 feet of film were exposed in making the picture this winter at Port Henry, N. Y. This amount was used in the two takes of all scenes and presented a heavy task to Mr. Miller in cutting to the required 6,000 feet for the final negative.

Director Miller has proved, according to Mayflower officials, that "atmosphere" in a dance hall need not connote orgy and lust and that touches of "atmosphere" merely suggested can be made as effective as those actually represented.

In the scenes picturing one of the most famous dance palaces of the Yukon country, Mr. Miller has achieved an animated portrait of local color as it is found in the resorts of the Northwest, without resorting to the banalities associated with dance hall scenes since the early days of motion pictures. Not one drink is seen to be taken. Gambling is subtly suggested, not pictured. The female attaches of the place disport themselves with an abandon tempered by discretion. There is a fight but not the customary long drawn out, rough and tumble affair. It is brief but thrilling.

Director Miller is reported to have handled the scenes of tempestuous whirl of pleasure in the Alaskan dance hall so that they glow with life and color and yet are free from anything that might be considered objectionable.

George Eastman Sails for Orient from Seattle April 10

GEORGE EASTMAN, head of the Eastman Kodak Company, will sail for the Orient from Seattle on April 10 as one of a party of American business men who have been invited to be the guests of the Welcome Association of Japan. The party will sail on the Kashima Maru and is expected to spend eighteen days in Japan and one day in Honolulu, and arrive back in San Francisco on May 30.

The Welcome Association is made up of the leading men and members of the royal family of Japan. The party has been invited to visit Japan for the purpose of sightseeing and the promotion of intimate relations between Japan and America. Such national figures as Frank A. Vanderbilt, president of the National City Bank of New York; Darwin P. Kingsley, president of the New York Life Insurance Company; Jacob Gould Schurman, president of Cornell University, and Lyman J. Gage, former secretary of the United States Treasury, are included in the party, made up of about a dozen leading men in American life.

Carpentier Special Will Have Big Appeal to Americans Who Were Under Arms and Others

GEORGES CARPENTIER on the screen will be an irresistible attraction to the 4,000,000 Americans who were under arms in the great war, to their families and their friends. This, Robertson-Cole, which is to present the noted Frenchman in an American society drama pictured by John G. Adolfi, believes to be the surest bet in connection with the distribution of the Carpentier production which is to be released before many weeks.

It feels that the Frenchman's appeal to former soldiers and those who are close to the ex-service men will be more certain, even, and more powerful than the many other angles of appeal which Carpentier will have. In making this assertion Robertson-Cole is in no wise discounting the fame of Carpentier as pugilistic champion of Europe, his reputation as a war aviator, his honors won through the highest decorations of France and her allies, and his social distinction in the great centers of the Old World.

The company, which will distribute the Carpentier picture, points to the eagerness with which Carpentier is being entertained in New York by American Legion Posts, and to the great call which has come for him from ex-service men all over the country. Robertson-Cole is counting upon the 4,000,000 former soldiers as the nucleus of a nationwide audience for the Carpentier picture which they feel will have a wider appeal than anything else of a similar nature ever produced.

Work already has been started in the Solax Studio, New Jersey, on the Carpentier picture. During the first two weeks that the noted Frenchman was in New York, John G. Adolfi, who is directing the production which Carpentier is making for Robertson-Cole, was busy in settling the details. He has now engaged a company which will support Carpentier adequately and little time will be lost in turning out this release, which is to be released in the late spring.

Mr. Eastman said that suspension of operations on all building projects in which he was interested would not be continued until conditions become stabilized. Recently Mr. Eastman caused the suspension of operations on all buildings in which he was interested, owing to the high cost of labor and material, and the fact that these two commodities had reached unreasonable standards and were still on the upward trend. Many millions of dollars were tied up by the suspension.

Ore-Col Film Buys Post Story.

The Ore-Col Film Corporation, recently organized in Portland, Ore., with A. D. Frost, president, and O. D. Woodward, vice-president, have purchased the "Black Sheep," by Will Payne. This dramatic story was published in the Saturday Evening Post in November and has just been issued in book form under the title of "The Scarred Chin." The continuity is being written by Mr. Arthur Maude.

The Ore-Col Film Corporation has secured the services of the well-known director, John B. O'Brien.

"Wedding Bells" for Constance Talmadge.

There has been considerable bidding recently among motion picture producers for the film rights to the delightful comedy, "Wedding Bells," which has had a successful run this season at the Harris Theatre, featuring Wallace Eddinger and Margaret Lawrence. But the prize goes to Joseph M. Schenck, who has just purchased the rights for Constance Talmadge. "Wedding Bells" is by Salisbury Field.

Did You Ever Seen Anyone Go Out and Meet Themselves Coming In? There's Some Mystery About This. Notice the Veil.

It is from Marshall Neilan's First National picture, "Don't Ever Marry." We know right well from these scenes that it is just what they are not going to do.

Hugo Riesenfeld, Director of Rialto, Rivoli and Criterion, Seen at Close Range

THE achievements of Hugo Riesenfeld are well known to everyone who makes any pretensions to keeping in touch with the development of the motion picture. As managing director of the Rialto and the Rivoli Theatres, on Broadway, New York City, his face is familiar to the patrons of both houses. But of the man himself and the method by which he accomplishes a task that requires not only thorough knowledge of music but of showmanship in all its branches and imposes a vast amount of mental and physical application, only his intimates have any conception.

And on the twenty-fifth of this month he takes up his additional task as supervising director of the Criterion Theatre, in Times Square.

Evidently he belongs to that highly organized class of select souls whose one system of relaxation consists in accumulating new responsibilities and thereby lengthening their hours of work.

Quiet Efficiency Marks Riesenfeld.

In looking for the hidden springs of a man's nature, it is always well to begin by giving his temperament careful study. When Hugo Riesenfeld comes quietly through the door at the Rivoli or down the steps at the Rialto and takes his place at the conductor's desk, he reminds me of a man whose profession it was to perform the most death-defying feat known on the stage. This sounds like a strange statement; but I am referring only to temperament. In this, the cultured musician and the man who relied solely upon his nerves of steel and his powerfully developed muscles have much in common.

Curiosity took me back on the stage one night when my friend, the acrobat, was filling an engagement at a local theatre. His turn had just started and I stood in the wings and watched him do the first part of his act. It was hard, nerve-wracking work. When this was finished, he stepped into the wings and gave the motorcycle used in the act a last inspection, while the stage hands wheeled into place the lattice-work steel globe inside of which he was to ride. As he ran his eyes carefully over the machine, he chatted lightly of one thing and another, and not for an instant did he betray any quickening of the pulse from fear or doubt of himself. His attitude was that of a person who had made every necessary preparation and had himself so well in hand that his one thought was to accomplish the desired result with quiet effectiveness. When his music cue came, he bade me a pleasant good night and stepped out before the audience with that same air of unobtrusive efficiency that is Hugo Riesenfeld's chief characteristic.

His Reputation in Europe.

It is told of Mr. Riesenfeld that when he came to this country he was actually diffident about seeking an engagement on the strength of his past associations. A member of the Royal Imperial Opera Orchestra, Vienna, and numbered among Richard Wagner's musicians at Bayreuth, he was content to let his ability speak for him, and soon found recognition. As assistant conductor of the Century Opera Company and next as concert master and assistant conductor of the Manhattan Opera Company, he gained the reputation that made S. L. Rothapfel select him, in 1915, as musical director of the newly-erected Rialto Theatre. The first musician of any prominence to go into motion pictures when others of his class spoke of them as "cheap" and "vulgar," Mr. Riesenfeld revolutionized the presentation of the silent drama by using the best music of the masters to accompany the features and the other screen numbers, instead of improvising, as had been the fashion hitherto.

Other innovations of Mr. Riesenfeld's in the presentation of the moving picture are: Working out the theme in music as it developed on the screen; giving new music and new life to the program each week instead of playing the same worn-out pieces over and over again; establishing a music library which has 20,000 numbers and is still growing; making the program numbers harmonize with the feature; using real artists—Urban, John Wenger, Pogany—to decorate the stage and make the picture stand out as it should. In other words, combining art, music and pictures to make a real theatre instead of a movie house.

Sunday Afternoon at the Rivoli.

The managing director's office at the Rivoli is a spacious, handsomely furnished room, with a large flat-topped desk near the Broadway windows and comfortable armchairs scattered about. A grand piano stands in one corner. It is the custom of Mr. Riesenfeld at times to serve afternoon tea in this room on the opening day of each week to those of his friends who care to drop in upon him. Very frequently the tea is attended by one or more of the better known film players. Gloria Swanson and Thomas Meighan were present the Sunday "Male and Female" was first shown at the Rivoli, and Dorothy Dalton came during the run of "Aphrodite" at the Century. Mary Miles Minter and Jeanie Macpherson, the scenario writer, have been among the director's guests. Friendly, informal affairs, these teas, with now and then an interchange of opinion on the merits of the program at either the Rivoli or the Rialto that is enlightening to both persons in the conversation.

Nearly all the guests have arrived by the time Mr. Riesenfeld has seen that the bills at both houses are in good working order and he is at liberty to sit down and store away a sandwich and a cup of tea where they will do him the most good. He comes quietly along the hall, enters the room with no indication of having just completed six or seven hours of the closest application to his arduous duties and is ready to discuss any and every subject that may arise, with a calm and cheerful tolerance of the other fellow's views that makes him an ideal host.

Trapping an Interview.

Last Sunday afternoon Mr. Riesenfeld was seated at the piano when I entered his office, running over a selection from the musical setting of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" to illustrate his answer to a question from one of his guests. Without the slightest intimation that I was trapping him into a short interview, I engaged him in conversation at the first opportunity. Words of wisdom followed—to which I listened and made mental note of. Presented in the form of aphorisms, their terse discernment stands out like an electric light sign in front of the Riesenfeld theatres:

The day is coming when Broadway from Times Square up will be a street of lights, illuminating practically nothing but motion picture music houses.

The public is demanding music—but the exhibitor must not mistake that demand as meaning more and more music.

You can give the public an hour of music for the same price that you now give twelve or fifteen minutes. Don't try it—it takes more art to keep your numbers down to twelve minutes or, better, five minutes.

Don't let praise of your music numbers turn your head. The music, after all, is only the trimming; the PICTURE IS THE THING.

Foolish critics talk about high-brow drama and low-brow pictures. Moving picture audiences form a world of their own. They do not judge pictures by drama standards nor dramas by picture standards. Nor do they go to the two kinds of entertainment for the same reasons.

The motion picture is the best friend music ever had.

Donald Crisp Will Direct

Wanda Hawley's New Picture

PRESSURE of other work has forced Sam Woods to resign the assignment to direct Wanda Hawley in "Miss Hobbs," her first production for Realart Pictures Corporation, and Donald Crisp, well-known director of comedy dramas, has been obtained in his place.

Mr. Crisp has directed the last five pictures in which Bryant Washburn has appeared, the last of which, "The Six Best Cellars," has been reported to have enjoyed unusual success. He has for some time been known as a character actor for the screen, but recently has devoted most of his time to directing.

In the Griffith production of "Broken Blossoms" Mr. Crisp played the role of the prize fighter, and his work was described by dramatic critics as a masterpiece of screen acting. He is equally proficient as an actor and as a director, but in the later work has had his best success with comedies.

Tamar Lane Says "Mad Scramble" for Big Authors Is Producers' Camouflage

THAT too much stress is being laid on the importance of the "big author" to motion pictures is the belief of Tamar Lane, production manager of the Character Pictures Corporation. He says:

"It has been amusing during the past few months to watch the producers in their mad scramble to secure 'big authors,' vying with one another to get an imaginary corner on the imaginary market. It seems time that some one gave the infant industry a new bottle of milk and scratched up the surface a bit. The producers who are scrambling to get these 'big authors' are merely covering up their inability to secure good stories by a camouflage of big names. The worst of it is that the exhibitors are paying dearly for it.

"This does not mean that Character Pictures is averse to buying the works of successful authors and playwrights, as we have already purchased several, but they were not bought because they were written by 'big authors,' but because they were 'big stories.' And that is what the screen needs. It matters not who writes the stories.

Neglect Scenario Writers?

"Before the 'big authors' were awarded such royal receptions and treated with such deference they should first show at least a sympathy in their motion picture work and evidence an ability to write as well for the screen as our own original scenario writers. The main trouble with the motion picture business today is that it has been paying too much attention to the 'big authors' and neglecting other and more able talent.

"If one searches the records of the motion picture it will be found that the 'big authors' have by no means contributed to the majority of successes to the screen. It has been lesser known authors and scenario writers who have done the most towards advancing the photoplay, such as John Emerson, Anita Loos, Frances Marion, John Lynch and C. Gardner Sullivan. These writers, having already proven their ability to create the material that is needed for the screen, are a much greater asset to the motion picture than authors who are unknown quantities."

Houdini Guest of Magicians.

Houdini, star of the Paramount Artcraft pictures, "The Grim Game" and "Terror Island," writes from Glasgow, where he is fulfilling a vaudeville engagement, that he has appeared in person at trade showings of the first named picture in London, Birmingham, Liverpool and Glasgow, and that the film is being received with high favor. Houdini was guest of honor recently at a session of the Glasgow society of Magicians.

Indications Point to Big

Success for Directors' Ball

THE biggest affair of the season in motion picture social circles, as well as an after-Easter event of interest to the many friends and attaches of the industry, is the Motion Picture Directors' Association Ball, Hotel Biltmore, Saturday, April 10.

Interspersing the dancing, the music for which will be furnished by two Orlando orchestras, will be entertainment of a quality heretofore unknown in connection with an affair of the kind. Only members of the entertainment committee know what the great surprises are to be, and, after all they have said "it had better be good."

Supper will be served in the banquet hall adjoining the large ball room, and the entire seventeenth floor will be taken over by the association for the evening.

Many requests for invitations and tickets are now coming into headquarters from those who were unintentionally overlooked, and who desire to attend. According to advance sale of tickets it will be a big night for the picture producers, directors, players and their friends.

The continuity of the dance, for which many favorite numbers popular this season have been selected, looks as if lovers of fox trots to old fashioned waltzes will have their dancing ambitions realized. There are boxes in the M. P. D. A. headquarters, said to contain favors, which are being secretly guarded until Saturday night!

Ince Announces Series of Specials by Vance

THE first of a series of big special attractions written by Louis Joseph Vance and enacted by all-star casts will enter production at the Thomas H. Ince studios within the next ten days.

"Beau Revel," a modern society drama depicting the undercurrents of the transgressing smart set, heads the list of Vance stories to be pictured and produced under the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince.

Louis Joseph Vance, who recently signed an agreement which gives the Ince studios exclusive motion picture rights to his original stories and published novels, is at present in New York City, where his work on the continuity of "Beau Revel" is nearing completion.

Big Features to Follow Vance Story.

Following on the heels of the initial Vance special will come six or eight more big feature productions from the pen of the noted author and traveler.

Thomas H. Ince and his casting staff are now engaged in selecting principals and players to portray the unusual characters suggested by the original "Beau Revel" story. The locale of the piece is along New York's Great White Way, where the "Beau Revel" of Broadway's "shimmy-ized" cabarets becomes entangled in certain romantic complications which involve his son, Dick, and lead to startling dramatic situations described by the author as establishing a precedent in originality and novelty of conclusion.

"A Child for Sale" Latest

Ivan Abramson Production

THE civilized world has made rapid progress in art and science. Inventions that are making life worth while are the order of the day. In order to supply the energy necessary to mechanically perfect the realization of inventions, nature is being harnessed. Man stops at nothing! Progress, no matter at what cost! But is it progress; is it an age of enlightenment, when community indifference creates or fails to remedy conditions under which parents are forced to sell their children on the open market in order to save them from grim want?

Writers have from time to time attempted the thankless task of focusing on this deplorable condition the attention of the thinking public. It has been left to Ivan Abramson, the well-known author and motion picture director, in his last dramatic creation, "A Child for Sale," to center the attention of the public to the issue of the hour. Every angle of the problem, not sex, that the story sets forth is outlined in the various situations. Mr. Abramson possesses an advantage over other producers in that he is his own manager, author, scenarist and director, and in this way is enabled to put his ideas upon the screen exactly as he conceived them. "A Child for Sale" is perhaps the strongest of his long line of sociological photodramas, with beautiful love interest interwoven, which no doubt will command the close attention of every kind of audience.

One of the accomplishments of the picture is the evolution of Creighton Hale into a dramatic artist.

Equity Reports "The Forbidden Woman" Breaking Records Wherever It Is Shown

EQUITY PICTURES second Clara Kimball Young production "The Forbidden Woman" is carrying away honors in every city in which it is shown, according to telegrams and box office reports from every exhibitor who has already shown the picture, and has broken records in all parts of the United States.

"The Forbidden Woman," by comparison, is causing new reports to issue in that it is even exceeding the results obtained by exhibitors with "Eyes of Youth" and promises to surpass that picture by many hundreds of days of additional rentals and longer runs.

At the Capitol Theatre, New York, the picture proved to be one of the greatest attractions in the history of that house. "The Forbidden Woman" opened to more than 20,000 admissions Sunday, and more than 22,000 Monday, which record Managing Director Bowes described as the largest business the theatre had known since it opened. In his statement on business done, which continued record breaking throughout the entire week, he credited Equity Pictures with having given the Capitol staff perfect co-operation in every respect.

At the California Theatre, San Francisco, the picture broke all records and the latter part of the week exceeded the business of the first half. This record was duplicated at the Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles, where it was described as "Clara Kimball Young's, greatest production."

The picture opened at the Playhouse Theatre, Chicago, Sunday, March 28, and created a sensation the first day when it broke all records, and Manager George Smith was compelled to give a midnight showing of the picture to accommodate the crowds—this being the first time in the history of the theatre that the house had sustained a midnight showing.

The record breaking business established Sunday continued the entire week, in spite of the fact that it was Holy week, the one week in the year capacity houses are unknown and box office receipts dwindle perceptibly. To date, "The Forbidden Woman" has smashed all records held for the Playhouse, Chicago, and has exceeded by many thousand admissions, the record established there by "Eyes of Youth." The picture is booked for a minimum period of three weeks, and is now entering on its second weeks' record.

Marshall Neilan Announces the Cast for His Second Independent Picture

FOLLOWING "The River's End," which is being discussed as one of the most successful pictures of the year, Marshall Neilan will present "Don't Ever Marry," a comedy drama, from the magazine story of the same name by Edgar Franklin.

"Don't Ever Marry" is said to have a multitude of humorous situations. Mr. Neilan has assembled an all-star cast which includes no less than ten prominent players. Heading them is Matt Moore, brother of Owen and Tom Moore, who is best remembered for his work in "The Unpardonable Sin" with Blanche Sweet; "Heart of the Wild," with Elsie Ferguson, both of which were directed by Mr. Neilan; "Sahara," with Louise Glaum; "Glorious Lady," with Olive Thomas, and "A Regular Girl," with Elsie Janis.

Opposite Mr. Moore is Marjorie Daw, who has added to her wide popularity by her characterization of Mary Josephine in the first Neilan production, "The River's End." Previous to that she was with Lasky as well as leading woman for Douglas Fairbanks.

For the part of the alleged vampire, Mr. Neilan engaged Christine Mayo, who entered pictures after a short career on the stage and has recently come to the front by her acting in "Fair and Warmer" with May Allison, "Raffles" with John Barrymore and other pictures.

Betty Bouton, another in the cast, is a girl of rare beauty and may soon be one of the leading celebrities of the screen. She will be remembered as one of the supporting players in "Daddy Long Legs" and "Heart of the Hills" with Mary Pickford, and other successes. Wesley Barry, Marshall Neilan's 12-year-old boy star, plays the peephole kid and little need be said of his accomplishments.

League Will Investigate Finances of Co-operative Exhibitor Organizations

IN connection with a meeting of the executive committee of the New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League in Albany, the league officers were on April 7 authorized to carefully investigate the financial condition of all co-operative exhibitors' film organizations to ascertain just how responsible each may be from a financial standpoint and one which will protect the exhibitors' money. The methods of doing business will also be carefully gone over and at the conclusion of the investigation a full report will be sent to each member of the state league.

This move intends not only to protect exhibitors but likewise to destroy certain prejudices that have arisen by reason of bogus stock having been marketed and fostered on the general public who, finding their stock later on to be of little or no value, have turned the cold shoulder to the motion picture theatres and unreservedly declared the entire outfit to be crooks.

If it is found necessary members of the league, on advice from the officers, will utilize their programs and screens in protecting the general public from purchasing stock in motion picture companies whose sole object in organization is but to fleece the general public.

A report of the league insurance committee revealed that considerable saving has been made for the members the past year by reason of the liability insurance having dropped from 22 to 11 cents, while the fire insurance also decreased anywhere from 25 to 35 per cent. This was brought about by the league submitting to the insurance companies authentic figures showing the small losses that had been sustained in either liability or fire insurance in motion picture theatres and that these figures justified a lowering of the prevailing rate.

Murray W. Garsson Preparing to Make Several Pretentious Two-Reel Films

AFTER a trip through the South and Middle West in connection with "A Dream of Fair Women," Murray W. Garsson, general manager of Foundation Film Company, has returned to New York. This picture is in two reels and features the winners of a Fame and Fortune competition conducted by Motion Picture Magazine, Motion Picture Classic and Shadowland.

Mr. Garsson reports that exhibitors are enthusiastic over the manner in which this picture is being received by their audiences as it provides the opportunity to see four of the country's most beautiful girls selected out of a list of more than 100,000, and in many instances exhibitors are conducting local beauty competitions. Newspapers and photographers are lending valuable assistance and local pride is being manifested.

Mr. Garsson is a believer in the appeal of the two-reeler, and is convinced that the time is coming when producers and directors will restore it to its former prestige. "America is the birthplace of the short story," says Mr. Garsson, "and has developed it into one of the great literary art forms, and what is true of the short story can be equally true of the motion picture."

"A Dream of Fair Women," in addition to its unique cast, is founded on Tennyson's poem of the same name, and because of the success of this picture, Mr. Garsson is planning to produce several pretentious two-reelers. New York, New Jersey and several Southern states were recently sold in this picture. Mr. Garsson will leave soon for a trip to the state right exchanges in the Far West.

Numa and Artclass Erect Big Studio on Long Island

A STUDIO comprising four stages and complete laboratory facilities is planned by the Messrs. Weiss of Numa and Artclass Corporations, to be erected on Long Island. According to the announcement, work will start within a month and it is expected that four companies will be at work by June. A ten acre tract has been purchased for the site.

Messrs. Weiss also state that quarters for a complete "agency" for supplying animals for the screen will be maintained on the land. There are already eighteen lions and two orang-outangs, and a camel and elephant are under contract, and Walter Beckwith is due to arrive from Cuba soon with five more lions.

Work will be started on further animal and adventure pictures presenting Gene Pollar, featured in "The Return of Tarzan" within a short time. Walter Miller Artclass' feature players will start work soon on the first of a series of society plays.

Both Numa and Artclass will remain at the Yonkers studio until the Long Island quarters are ready.

Harry Cohn Is Producer of Hall Room Boys Comedies

JACK COHN, president of Jack and Harry Cohn productions, has announced that Hall Room Boys Comedies are no longer produced by the National Film Corporation of America. This popular series is now being produced under the personal supervision of Harry Cohn in the Behrmann studios at Culver City, Cal. Three releases have been completed since the Cohns took over the Lehrmann studios six or seven weeks ago.

They are "Oh, Baby!," "This Way Out" and "Four of a Kind." The latter was received at the New York office last week.

Jans Second Production Receives Much Praise at Private Showing

The second of the Jans Pictures, Inc., starring Olive Tell, "A Woman's Business," adapted from the book, "Nothing a Year," by Charles Belmont Davis, was privately shown recently and is said to have received great praise, exhibitors and buyers declaring it to be an exceptionally strong box-office attraction.

"A Woman's Business" was made under the personal supervision of B. A. Rolfe, and is the second of a series of super-features in which Miss Olive Tell plays the lead, and she is announced as having an exceptionally suitable role, while the supporting cast is above the ordinary, and that the production has been made in an elaborate manner.

Big Demand for Pioneer's "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde"

SHELDON LEWIS, in Pioneer's version of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," is reported as enjoying great success in all parts of the country. In New York territory the demand for this picture has been such that several additional prints have been ordered to fill first-run contracts.

Herman Rifkin, of the Eastern Feature Company of Boston, who holds the Pioneer franchise for New England, indicates that "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" will be the greatest success that has ever been shown in that territory under the Pioneer banner.

Every exchange of the Pioneer Co-operative Distribution System are announced as having doubled its order for prints, with the result that the laboratories handling the Pioneer work are running night and day.

Work on the other pictures, Marie Doro in "Midnight Gambols" and Emily Stevens and Montague Love in "The Place of Honeymoons," is progressing rapidly and these pictures will be released on the dates originally set. Mary Anderson in "Bubbles," which has been given a month's showing on billboards, is also meeting with success not only in the New York offices, but at other exchanges centers.

Feature Exploitation Planned for Kremer's "Screen Smiles"

The animated topical weekly, "Screen Smiles," will be given an exploitation campaign equal to that accorded the average feature film, says Victor Kremer. There will be a novel one-sheet, 22 by 28, illustrated, and serving as a stock sheet for each release, also a two-color herald showing cartoons and bright sayings from the reels.

There will also be a unique lobby display, presenting a glimpse of the science of animated photography, special slides and stories for newspaper use.

How "Screen Smiles" Is Introduced.

View shown in center dissolves into the one on left, then changing to completed main title as shown on right. This attractive series is released by Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc.

"Coo Koo!" That's What All Cameramen's Trained "Boids" Chirp.

Fox Circuit Books Chaplin Reissues.

Following the showing of "The Champion," a Charlie Chaplin reissue, at the Rialto Theatre, the local Victor Kremer exchange announces a heavy demand for bookings. Ira H. Simmons, manager of the exchange, has booked the series, which also includes "The Jitney Elopement," "Work" and "By the Sea" for the entire Fox circuit of theatres, beginning with the Folly Theatre in Brooklyn, April 12. The showing will range from two to four days.

Current Events Burlesqued in "The Weakly Indigestion"

RADIN PICTURES report that inquiries have been received from all parts of the country, following its announcement of the acquisition of A. Lincoln Miller's "The Weakly Indigestion," and it is expected that many contracts for territory will be closed within a short time. Several large circuits have expressed a desire to book these single reelers.

"This series is truly a novelty as nothing of its kind has ever been attempted before," says Matthias Radin. "It is a presentation of important current events of the day produced in burlesque and enacted by a cast of prominent comedians. Audiences have become accustomed to seeing News Weeklies and 'The Weakly Indigestion' will come to the people as a surprise on account of its timeliness and up-to-date comedy. The topics burlesqued are of great moment and occupy places of prominence in the affairs of the world. Miller sees them from a different angle and his pictured results are a comedy surprise."

New Type of Posters for "Hawk's Trail."

Louis Burston, who promised exhibitors something new in the way of slide material and posters for the serial, "The Hawk's Trail," starring King Baggott, announces that the first shipments were made recently. The "new" feature is the absence of ballyhoo slogans from the slide and descriptive matter, as well as from the picture itself. Exhibitors and buyers are reported as being pleased, and stating that it draws more money than the melodramatic matter formerly used.

Brandt Announces Extensive Program Now Under Way at Studios of National

JOE BRANDT, the new director general of the National Film Corporation, announces that an extensive program under way at National studios. Marion H. Kohn is concentrating on two-reelers while Harry M. Rubey, president of National is producing features.

The following productions are either finished or are now being filmed: twenty-six two reel comedies featuring Polly Moran; Grace Cunard in twenty-six two reel serio-comic westerns, and twenty-six single reel "Smiling Bill" Jones comedies; also twenty-six single reel issues of Will Roger's "Illiterate Digest."

The National feature productions now ready are "Nobody's Girl," a five-reeler starring Billie Rhodes, and a seven reel picture "Parted Curtains" with Henry B. Walthall in the leading role. "The Valley of Silence," a five reel western comedy in which Betty Blythe is starred also appears on the list. In addition, the Norma Talmadge film "Captivating Mary Carstairs" is being re-edited, and Mr. Brandt reports that already considerable territory has been sold on this reissue.

George H. Davis, who is at present making his headquarters in Mr. Brandt's office reports that territory on "Confession" has been sold in record breaking time, all sections being disposed of except Ohio, Kentucky and Tennessee, and that foreign rights except continental Europe have also been sold.

Five Salesmen Appointed for Kremer's New York Exchange

VICTOR KREMER announces the formation of a sales force to handle the Chaplin reissues distributed by his exchange in New York and northern New Jersey, "The Champion," "The Jitney Elopement," "Work" and "By the Sea."

Ira H. Simmons, general manager of the exchange known as New York Independent Masterfilms, Inc., has picked five capable salesmen. George Faulkner, Jr.,

Louis Burston Enthusiastic Over the Future of Serials

SINCE attending the recent convention of state right men in Chicago, Louis Burston is more enthusiastic than ever regarding the future of serials. "The public is deciding the direction of film stories, serial and otherwise, just as it decides the direction of plays for the stage and fiction. Today's public demands a high tone of consistency, a swift succession of incidents and a common sense expression of the emotions of characters, with the result that the footage may be used for vital drama instead of unnecessary detail," he declared.

Mr. Burston negotiated many sales on "The Hawk's Trail" during the convention, and is now busily engaged in preparing for the market his next serial, with Francis Ford as the star, in which a novel effect is achieved by the appearance of miniature players in most of the scenes.

Quick Sales on Harry Carey Film

Film Specials announces that within three days it has disposed of by wire to state right buyers over fifty per cent. of United States territory on "The Square Shooter" starring Harry Carey. This is said to be the only Harry Carey picture ever offered on state rights, and inquiries for territory and bookings are being received from all over the country.

the son of George Faulkner, connected with the First National exchange for New Jersey, will handle northern New Jersey and M. Meyers, formerly with Aywon, will cover New York City; in addition there will be two other salesmen covering Brooklyn, and an extra salesman for the Bronx.

This sales force will be equipped with an extensive line of exploitation material and will assist the exhibitors in securing the fullest possible result with the Kremer attractions.

Cohns Advance Release Date for New Issue "Screen Snap Shots"

Following a conference with independent buyers, Jack and Harry Cohn have advanced the release date on the first issue of "Screen Snap Shots." This series is being produced in Los Angeles by Lewis Lewyn, a former newspaperman, and its purpose is to escort patrons of photoplay houses through the mysteries and intricacies of motion picture production, and to show famous stars as they appear in private life.

The first issue will be released in a few weeks and will contain studies of Nazimova, Bessie Barriscale, Bert Lytell, Alice Lake, J. Warren Kerrigan and others. It was shown recently to several buyers and, as one expressed himself: "It is the answer to one of my problems, it means entertainment and instruction for my audience, and is the type of material they all like."

Kohn Plans News Weekly.

The Marion H. Kohn Productions, which includes several features, including the Grace Cunard westerns, the Polly Moran comedies, the Smiling Bill Jones comedies and Will Rogers' Illiterate Digest, is planning to add another strong link to its chain in the form of a news weekly. Marion H. Kohn, president of the company, announces that negotiations are now under way, and further details will be announced later.

Newspaper Tie-Up Working Well on "Hall Room" Films

THE newspaper tie-up undertaken by Jack and Harry Cohen in connection with the exploitation of Hall Room Boys Comedies is well under way. This tie-up is a mutual one, by means of which the newspapers who use the famous Percy and Ferdie Hall Room comic strips are given publicity in the film versions, and the films are given publicity in the newspapers.

More than eighty newspapers are now using the comic strip, and a great number are running a daily story to the effect that theatres in those territories are booking the Hall Room Boys Comedies.

The campaign is said to have resulted in an increased number of subscribers to the comic strip, so that there is very little territory left in which the adventures of the two boys do not appear in the daily newspapers, and theatre owners have reported increased popularity of the comedies.

Many Inquiries on Carey Film.

Film Specials announces a big demand for its Harry Carey feature, entitled "The Square Shooter," five reels. From every territory inquiries have been coming in by wire, mail and telephone, and they believe a record will be established in marketing this production.

Arrow Productions Selected to Meet Exhibitors' Needs, Says Shallenberger

IT was only after a most careful study of the field that rights to the new productions which this company now has ready for release, were acquired," says W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation. "Among them is 'Love's Protege,' in which Ora Carew is featured, which I believe to be an ideal subject for the independent field as it is today.

"There is in it a charming romance, a good mystery element, and a scenic setting that beats anything of the kind I have had the pleasure of seeing in months."

"Love's Protege" was photographed in the mountain country of the West, and is the type of story which has ever been popular. It tells of a beautiful mountain girl, Ruth, portrayed by Miss Carew, who, clad in rags and without shoes or stockings, romps through the five reels a veritable mountain flower. "It is a picture which will stand extensive exploitation. No picture in which Miss Carew has heretofore appeared offers her in a more advantageous role. She is given a world of opportunity to display her rare charm and winsome talent. At a preview given several western exchangemen recently, all were enthusiastic, predicting a great success for the picture."

Arrow announces a special press book has been prepared, in keeping with the spirit and beauty of the picture. All aids usual in the exploitation of feature productions will be provided.

Meade Reports More Sales on Mona Darkfeather Films

C. A. MEADE, secretary of C. B. Price, Inc., has returned to New York after attending the recent meeting of state right men in Chicago, and also visiting Detroit, Cleveland and Pittsburgh. In Detroit he sold the Mona Darkfeather series to Minter United Amusement Company, and in Cleveland he sold the Dave Warner films.

The Price company announces that more than half the territory has been sold on this series, and exhibitors report they are

We're Glad That at Least Some of These Comedians Use Their Heads Occasionally. Hank Mann in a reclining moment in his latest Arrow comedy, "The Gun Riot."

Jans Pleased with Press Reviews.

Herman F. Jans, president of Jans Pictures, Inc., has expressed pleasure at the manner in which his initial state right offering, "Love Without Question," was received by the trade in general, including buyers and critics of the trade press, as result of the trade showing at the Strand Theatre. He feels that this bears out his judgment as to the needs of the independent market and announces further that his second productions will soon be ready for a trade showing.

All Indian Cast Makes Arrow Offering Unique

THAT no more unusual picture was ever offered state rights buyers than "Before the White Man Came" is claimed by Arrow Film Corporation. This feature tells a story of a tribal war between two factions of Indians in the Old West.

The fact that every member of the cast is an Indian, and that the thrilling struggles of the western plains before the advent of the white man are done over again for the camera, is said to make it an ideal subject for road showmen and for special showings and worthy of a place on any program, also because of its historical and technical exactness.

Feature Ready for Release.

Arrow has already many letters and telegrams, and while territory has not yet been offered for sale, there is already a demand for the rights.

"This feature is ready for release," says Mr. Shallenberger. "We purchased it because we deemed it of the type needed at this time, and because it has received the praise of every exchangemen who has seen it."

Big Store Used for Comedy Scenes.

In the filming of Reelcraft comedy, "Bargain Day," in Chicago, some of the scenes were taken in Marshall Field's store, and it is said that this is the first time this establishment has been used in connection with a moving picture. The scenes were taken under the supervision of Frederick J. Ireland, vice-president and supervising director of Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, who is also chairman of the film division for the big drive to boost Chicago.

Victor Kremer Enthusiastic Over "Skinner's Dress Suit"

Victor Kremer, president of Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., is highly enthusiastic over the possibilities of his recently acquired production, "Skinner's Dress Suit." "In my opinion it is one of the finest comedy dramas ever filmed. Starring Bryant Washburn, a screen favorite, the picture is even better than the story from which it was made, and which appeared originally in the Saturday Evening Post."

Comedy and drama are cleverly intermingled through the production, and the humor of the tale is enhanced by a series of cleverly written sub-titles rich in humor. A capable supporting cast of well-known screen players appear with Bryant Washburn. The lesson driven home of Skinner and his dress suit is applicable to thousands of men who have probably found themselves in Skinner's fix.

Rogers' "Illiterate Digest" a Clever Bi-Weekly Release

Will Rogers' "Illiterate Digest," the one reel novelty film which will be issued every other week by Marion H. Kohn Productions, will answer the demand for topical films according to Joe Brandt, eastern representative for the Kohn interests. This is described as a mixture of the editorial columns of a newspaper and its comic sheet. The wit and sarcasm of this Follies star being injected into a series of epigrams on current topics, interspersed with comical shots of the star.

The first three issues are now ready for release. A trade showing will be arranged shortly.

Canyon Company Has Sold Majority of Territory on Franklyn Farnum Films

JACK WEINBERG, president of Canyon Pictures Corporation, reports that a majority of the territory on the Franklyn Farnum series of two reel westerns have been sold. Northern Illinois has been purchased by Doll-Van Film Corporation, 207 South Wabash avenue, Chicago; Florida, Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina and Tennessee by Savini Films, Inc., 63 Walton street, Atlanta; and Virginia and North Carolina by Truart Pictures Corporation, Seventh and Franklin streets, Richmond.

Arrow Photoplays Company, 1735 Welton street, Denver, has secured rights to Colorado, Utah, New Mexico, Wyoming and South Dakota; Apex Pictures, Inc., 414 Penn avenue, Pittsburgh, has West Virginia and Western Pennsylvania, while Strand Features, 201 Film Exchange Building, Detroit, has Michigan.

Indiana rights go to Doll Van Film Corporation, 1606 Merchants Bank Building, Indianapolis; Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey to S. S. Bloom, 251

North Thirteenth street, Philadelphia; California, Arizona and Nevada to All Star Feature Distributing Company, 191 Golden Gate avenue, San Francisco; Ohio to the Greenwald and Griffith Exchange, Belmont Building, Cleveland; Greater New York, Westchester County and Long Island to Sol Lesser's New York exchange, Northern New Jersey to Frank Gersten, Inc., 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York.

Southwestern Film Corporation has secured rights for Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas; Merit Film Corporation, 126 West Forty-sixth street, for New York north of Westchester County, Truart Pictures Corporation, for Maryland, Delaware and District of Columbia; Crescent Film Company, 315 Floyd Building, Kansas City, for Kansas and Western Missouri; and United Film Service, 3628 Olive street, St. Louis, for Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois.

Sol Lesser, R. M. Savini, and in fact practically all of the buyers have ordered additional prints to take care of the demand, says Mr. Weinberg. The star in this series is well known for his work in feature production, while a prominent member of the cast is Buck Jones, who is now being starred in five reel features by another producing company.

Prizes Offered to Ministers for Best Sermons Based on the Modern Magdalene

MINISTERS throughout the United States and Canada are said to be evincing great interest in the contest announced by Lester Park and Edward Whiteside, 500 Fifth avenue, New York. Prizes of $590 down to $25 are offered without restrictions for the best sermons on the modern Magdalene. The sermons are to be made in connection with the new film, "A Good Woman." No definitions of the title are drawn—the minister who competes has the privilege of making the morality laws as stringent and conventional as he chooses, or he may throw the doors wide open and protect the fallen woman.

A committee of distinguished men will serve as the judges. Headed by Dr. Frank Crane, it will contain a well-known Catholic priest, a Protestant minister, a Jewish rabbi and a free thinker. Theological dogma will not enter into the discussions of the committee. They will judge each sermon on these points: "How convincing and logical is the definition of 'A Good Woman?' How much aid, salvation and religious good will be the fruit of the sermon? Is it what God Himself would sanction?"

The contest closes May 1. All sermons must be mailed before midnight of that date to be considered eligible. The judges immediately will read the manuscripts and decisions will be made as soon afterward as possible. The names of the winners will be published broadcast throughout the United States and Canada. Prizes will be awarded immediately after the decisions have been reached and the winning sermons will be published in a book for distribution throughout the world. All sermons must be accompanied by return postage.

A pamphlet has been published to aid the contestants in making a right start. It will be sent to any regularly ordained minister, rabbi, priest or theological lecturer on receipt of signed request. Address Sermon Contest Editor, Suite 203, 500 Fifth avenue, New York.

Company Formed by Hammell and Unger Will Reissue Mack Sennett Comedies

A NEW entrant in the list of state rights distributors is Majestic Pictures, Inc. J. J. Unger, formerly sales manager for Triangle, is president, and John A. Hammell, who was New York exchange manager for General Film and also for Pathe is treasurer.

The company has secured the negatives of the productions made by the old Majestic company and originally released through Triangle, consisting of one and two reel comedies made by Mack Sennett and distributed under the Keystone brand. From 150 to 200 of these subjects will be selected and reissued in blocks of twelve.

Many well-known players who have since been starred or featured in other brands of comedies appear in these productions, such as Alice Howell, Mabel Normand, Ford Sterling, Chester Conklin, Charles Murray, Fatty Arbuckle and others. Mack Sennett himself appears in several of these comedies, and many of the subjects have several of these comedians in the cast.

This company also has, in addition to the above, seven of these comedies which have never been released. Two are two-reelers and five are one-reelers; also several feature productions which will also be reissued, including Sessue Hayakawa in "The Typhoon" and George Beban in "The Italian."

National Announces Titles for Flanagan and Edwards Comedies

National Film Corporation of America announces that the first four of a series of twenty-six two-reel comedies featuring Eddie Flanagan and George Edwards have been completed. "The Road to Ruin," "His Wife's Husband," "In and Out" and "A Burglar's Paradise" are the titles.

Releasing arrangements will be made by Joe Brandt, eastern representative of National, and the releasing of this series through its own organization is being contemplated by the company.

Herman F. Jans Second Picture

Is Ready for State Right Market

Following the successful showing of the first Jans picture, "Love Without Question," many inquiries have been received regarding the second production, "A Woman's Business." This feature, made under the supervision of B. A. Rolfe is now ready for the market, and a release date will be set as soon as prints are forwarded to the various exchanges.

Foreign rights for this production have been sold to the Export and Import Film Company, and Canadian rights to Jules and J. J. Allen, while domestic territory is being rapidly disposed of.

"Secret Formula" Released for State Right Circulation

THE announcement is made by F. L. Ferguson, general manager of Efanell Film Corporation, that his firm has secured "The Secret Formula" for state rights distribution. Prints are ready and territorial sales are already in negotiation.

"The 'Secret Formula' is declared by Mr. Ferguson to be a story and production particularly adapted to the independent market—for houses where there is no time or inclination to build up stars or exploit any particular film-brand. Good entertainment for lovers of speedy and sensational photoplaying is the basic claim of Mr. Ferguson for the sale of his offering.

Details and exploitation matters will be explained by Efanell Film Corporation in correspondence with quick buyers. Managers who seek this information will find General Manager Ferguson ready to "do the needful" not alone in selling territory but in following up the sales in exploiting "The Secret Formula."

Radiosoul Opens an Exchange.

Radiosoul Films, Inc., have opened an exchange at 126 West Forty-sixth street for the distribution of "A Man There Was." This company is at present working on its second picture, "The Eternal Feminine," which will be released as a super-feature, and in which Victor Seastrom is again the director and star.

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

A RUBBERNECKING that stretches from the Verdugo Foothills to the Pacific Ocean; perfumed with the scent of the orange blossoms of Glendale on the north and the smell of the sad, salt sea at Long Beach on the south; and with Chic Sale, Isadore Bernstein, Al St. John, Gilbert P. Hamilton, Ward Lascalle, Louis H. Thompson, Helen Holmes, Sam, Jack and Abe Warner, a blood-thirsty tiger, and 'Slim' Pickett, as local color.

The trip to Long Beach was a pleasant picnic. Louis H. Thompson and Sales Manager Roberts, of the Special Pictures Corporation, chartered a fleet of taxicabs and invited the trade paper representatives and members of the local press to go down and look their studio over.

Sipping Soup a la Mode.

It was some party, the memory of which will linger long. We had lunch at the Hotel Virginia, a beautiful place overlooking the sea, and gave the aristocratic guests of the hotel a treat by allowing them to see a bunch of newspaper writers and movie people at their chow, and incidentally showed them that we know how to sip our soup from the side of our spoons as well as those who eat in swell dumps all the time.

After lunch we went over to the studio and watched Ward Lascalle dope out stuff for a Comedyart film, and listened to him tell about what he thought about comedy directing. Lascalle is one of these chaps with ideas. In the first place, he doesn't believe in comedy stars.

No Limit to Humor, Says Ward.

"The star comedian is a specialist," he said. "Some of the best comedy stories ever written are turned down by producers because they do not fit the peculiar abilities of their stars. There is no limit on humor, and no limit to the number of comedy situations that can be evolved if the cast is big enough and flexible enough.

"The director should not be limited to one comedian and a cast that bend all of their efforts to working up to him and helping him put his gags over. We think the story should be the most important part of a comedy, and it does not matter what kind of a story we get, we'll find the actors to play it.

Just Look at "Slim."

"Los Angeles is the best place in the world for comedy types. I don't care what kind of a type a story calls for, whether it be white, black, big, little, old or young, we can find it in an hour or so. Take the comedy we are working on now. It calls for a very large actor—not a fat man—just a big chap. Look at Mr. Pickett over there."

I looked at Mr. Pickett. It was difficult to look at anything else as long as he was anywhere in the foreground. "Slim" Pickett is a gentle, young chap from Missouri who stands six feet, ten and a half inches in his socks, and weighs 250 pounds without them. I also talked to Mr. Pickett, who has a keen sense of humor along with his heft and is not at all embarrassed by his unusual proportions.

Perfect Proportions.

"You see," he said, "if I weighed any less with my height, I'd be skinny; and if I was any shorter with my weight, I'd be fat. As it is, I'm just about right."

"Slim" is an engaging chap and an actor of ability. He was playing the part of a bridegroom in the picture Lascalle was making, and his interpretation of "the silent agony that afflicts all bridegrooms" is going to get a laugh when the film is released, if nothing else does.

I was accompanied by A. MacArthur, Jr., the worthy advertising manager of this sheet, on the trip to Glendale. Going out I expatiated somewhat on the wonders of the Astra studio, and told Mac how I had once seen Ruth Roland making a scene for a serial out there with a cave full of tigers as a setting, and that as Miss Roland was working there again we'd probably see something thrilling.

Seeking a Legitimate Tiger.

Mac said he would just love to see a tiger in a scene, but when we got to Astra every last company was out on location. Louis J. Gasnier, the big boss of the place, was in the city on business, and Kenneth O'Hara, studio manager, was about the only object of interest on the lot.

"Ken" was so put out over the fact that he didn't have any stuff going on to show us that he offered to go out on one of the stages and act a little himself. We said that might do if he had a pretty fair-sized tiger to support him. But all the tigers were busy, he said, and he promised to phone in and let us know when they are ready to stage the big airplane stuff they are going to use in a few days, and we hit the Los Feliz road back to town.

Red Splashes on the Floor.

Going back Mac said that Sam Warner had told him they were using wild animals in "The Danger Trail," a serial that Warner Brothers are making with Helen Holmes as the heroine, and that maybe we could accumulate a thrill by going down there.

So we went down to Sam's place—and to keep anybody from getting jealous—Jack's place and Abe's place.

Too late again. But we almost saw a tiger. We went over to the stages where Gilbert P. Hamilton was putting the cast through the fifteenth episode of the serial, and the first thing that caught the old eagle eye was a lot of red splashes on the floor of the stage.

Helen Registers Ennui.

"Gee, Gosh, Heck," I exclaimed, quoting from Little Benny's notebook. "How many people have you killed here today?"

"No one at all," responded Helen Holmes. "It's been a quiet day."

"Then that gore," I said, pointing to the sanguinary spots on the floor and shuddering, "is nothing but property gore?"

"No," said Miss Holmes, yawning politely, "it is real blood—tiger's blood."

"How come?" I asked, quoting from Octavus Roy Cohen, and shuddering again. "We had a tiger in the scene," responded Miss Holmes, "and it wanted to bite somebody, but it was not written down in the scenario that anybody was to be chewed up by a tiger, and the beast got so angry that it bit itself. Really, it's been a dull day."

Al Uses the Old Bean.

After this we went out on the lot and found Al St. John ornamenting a shady spot, and, using his heaviest thinking apparatus, doping out gags for his next comedy. Anyone who thinks the life of a comedian is just one long round of beer and skittles, has got some more mental exercise coming to him, according to Al.

"I write all my own stuff," Al told us, "because I can't find anybody that can produce the kind of stuff I want. Lots of people can write comedy stories, but few of them can figure up new gags; and that's what we have to have—new stuff, new situations, with laughs behind them, in front of them and all around them."

How Would a Prohibitionist Have Fared?

Al was a life-saver at Long Beach before he went into the pictures, and he told us about some of his experiences, and how he had fourteen lives to his credit; and how it was sometimes necessary for a life-saver to strike the person he is trying to save on the chin and knock him unconscious before he could be saved.

Speaking of the Pacific Ocean made me think of water (I'm very keen that way) and thinking of water made me think of prohibitionists and how they like to fool around water, and I asked Al if he had ever saved any prohibitionists.

He said he didn't remember, but at that moment a far-away look came into his eyes and a smile broke on his heretofore sad countenance. I believe the suggestion of water, prohibitionists and hitting somebody on the chin gave him the nucleus of an idea for a gag. At any rate, he looked quite happy, and we left him to his thought and went out to the Capital studio and buzzed Isadore Bernstein, who was just gathering up the managerial reins of the Capital Film Corporation.

Bernstein Prepares to Move Capital.

Mr. Bernstein is getting ready to move the Capital over to the new Berwillia studio on Santa Monica Boulevard as soon as the finishing touches have been added to the new plant. A new enclosed stage is to be built, and an apartment house included in the purchase of additional land, for the plant will be used as offices.

The Capital will have three units. The Neal Hart company is already at work. Helen Gibson and Lieut. Locklear will be working inside of a week.

After the Capital we dropped in at Christie's and watched Chic Sale lead a silver cornet band in a scene for "The Smart Aleck"; talked to Colleen Moore, the leading lady of the piece for a minute or so; said "Hello" to Al Christie, Al Cohn, Pat Dowling, Scott Sidney, and then called it a day and went home.

Charles Ray's forthcoming Thomas H. Ince production, previously announced under the title of "An Old-Fashioned Young Man," has been changed to "An Old-Fashioned Boy." It will be released as an Ince-Paramount-Artcraft picture. The story is one of the cleverest of the Ince-Ray series and abounds with original situations and numerous dramatic "punches" singular of Charles Ray's "old-fashioned" wallop.

An Artistic and Financial Triumph

THE reputation of all fine pictures, worthy of that description comes as a matter of natural consequence. Pictures of the finer sort; those of exclusive atmosphere, artistic distinction and financial certainty are immediately recognized among showmen who pass the word along. In "THE FORBIDDEN WOMAN" with Clara Kimball Young, success in overflowing measure has attended exhibitions everywhere, especially where intelligent exploitation has been done. It is one of the season's most exclusive productions, of rare class and atmosphere. Playing engagements can be arranged thru any Equity Franchise Holder or by communicating with

Denver Theatre Declares in on Line in Which Someone Presents the Story

EVIDENTLY the American theatre, Denver, has grown tired of letting the producers do all of the "presenting" in their advertisements, for this cross page elevens reads to the effect that "The American Theatre, Samuel Goldwyn and Rex Beach take pleasure in Presenting—" the first Eminent Authors' picture. We don't see why not. The theatre is just as much concerned in the presentation as the producers. They are entitled to as much credit. That "presents" line is stupid, at best, and was originated to mark the Charles Frohman productions from those of Daniel and Gustave, and there it served a definite purpose, but presently Klaw and Erlanger began to present and now everybody's doing it.

This display offers some interesting points, and it gets over cuts in a manner which few newspapers can guarantee. Where the cuts can be printed up to show, this frame style is good, but it would be taking desperate chances in some cities to endeavor to put over so many cuts in the hope of having them reproduce. What we like most about it is the large, legible type faces, but the manner in which the author and the title are given equal distinction through the use of a reverse strip is not to be overlooked. This has been handled with exceptional skill.

Meloy Ran a Seven Column Spread in a Paper with Only Six Columns to Page

HOW to get a seven column spread into a six column page is a problem suggestive of trying to put a quart into a pint bottle, but it was solved by W. C. Meloy, of the Strand, Shelbyville, Ind. Mr. Meloy wanted to use a smash for "Every-woman," and the mat was framed for a seven column paper. The local sheet used only six columns and most of the craft would have decided that it could not be done. Mr. Meloy was built of stronger stuff.

He persuaded the newspaper to lift the bar in the chase and set the display across two pages, the space between the two type pages giving him enough for the seventh column and using only three columns on each page. It made a striking appearance and worked so well that it should pay to run an all type advertisement in that style just once if only for the attention it will attract. And for the same attraction Mr. Meloy used a 72 sheet stand, using a 24-sheet with five threes on either side. That seems to be going some. He had the boards, so it was simple matter to build it up with the material at hand, and there were ten different threes to work with for this picture. A photograph cannot do justice to the splash made, but it was some splash.

Mr. Meloy is a heavy advertiser as these two samples will show. One is a four twelves and the larger a fourteen. Shelbyville is not quite as large as New York or Chicago, but Mr. Meloy and his son, Paul, manage to keep the town stirred up to a pitch of metropolitan activity. They are not afraid to spend money on the papers and they go strong on stunts of the right sort to supplement the more conventional work.

—P. T. A.—

What Would YOU Do to a Man Like This?

SUPPOSE you were a man and suppose again that the Fox bathing girls came to town "in person," and suppose still more than some crabbed old press agent took the best part of a page to tell all about them and stuck in some pictures of the girls, and then added the line, "But ladies, this is a show you should not let your husband attend. Watch Your Husband." What would you do to a man like that? Yet that is what the press man of the Garden, Baltimore, did in the Sunday Sun. It was fine for the bachelors, but playing it low down on the husbands, but it made talk and perhaps some of the husbands were not out of luck. Let's hope so.

Hangover Topline Gets Larger Space Than Advertiser Really Pays Cash For

PROBABLY this stunt will not work in many places, and certainly not in the cities, but a display with an overhang top line can be made to get a big display for a smaller space than the advertisement seems to suggest. The example is from Detroit and was used by the Washington for a contest page already described in these columns.

For the reason that the house took the entire page and laid off the space to the hook-up advertisers, it could lay it out as it pleased, but probably the majority of the papers will object to this broken space, but you can ask them, and if they reply in the affirmative you can do better for your money than with a square cornered space.

It is good enough as an idea to make it worth the trying, say in the form of a cross page space for a couple of inches and a drop down the two middle columns. If you can make it stick, please send in a copy of the advertisement for reproduction.

Pathe-Blackton 24-Sheet

ALTHOUGH this twenty-four sheet for the the new Blackton production does not come up to the Pathe art standard in the matter of effective drawing, it would not be surprising to find that people went to see what Miss Breamer was making such an awful face about. It is not as pleasing as most of the Pathe product, but it is striking, at any event. It will stand out well on the boards, which, after all, is the chief function of a stand of paper. There can be no question as to the attention it will attract.

Teaser on Jack Dempsey

THE Princess, Milwaukee, used a teaser campaign to put over the Jack Dempsey serial, "Daredevil Jack." Many of the smaller exhibitors took full pages for this serial, but the Princess cleaned up with a ten inch showing just the lower portion of the face. This worked because the fans pride themselves upon their ability to spot the players and worried themselves sick trying to place this star, only to find, when the campaign broke, that he was not one of the regulars. As a result many of the fans "got" Dempsey who might not have been interested with a straight advertising campaign of any size.

—P. T. A.—

Here's a Photograph Frame Scheme

HERE is a way in which you can vary your photographic display when you want to call particular attention to the photographs. It is being worked by the New York Telephone Company to good effect in its window display in the training school. It has had made up a set of pictures about the size of the 22 by 29 lobby display photographs supplied by most production concerns, but showing the various aspects of the telephone service. Instead of being framed flat and being like the hundreds of other frames along Broadway, they use a cutout showing curtains parted and held aside by figures of girls.

The prints are set behind these like a cyclorama drop so that the sides curve in to the back of the frame, the degree of curvature being determined by the metal backings. Because the front frame would cut off a part of the picture were it to run completely around, the backings are made larger than the width of the picture, so that the frame barely cuts off the edges. With a light behind each frame these pictures gain a prominence denied the usual style of frame. Your tinsmith can make the backs for you and a local artist can paint the designs, which are better when done in black or grey since bright colors would detract from the photograph.

Toronto Shows Two Excellent Examples of How to Put Cuts Into Ad. Layouts

USUALLY the five column space of the Strand, Toronto, shows to better advantage than the four, but for once the reverse is true and in this pair of displays the narrower measure gets the best of it, largely because the cut works so well. This work is now being done by George H. K. Mitford, and he has written copy to match the display. It starts off with an "If" followed by the premises of the story and suggests that this would make a capital offering, going on to say that this is just what the story of "A Girl Named Mary" is.

A Five Elevens and Four Fourteens from Toronto.

The small circular cut works to the situation described while the larger cut, though it tells nothing of the story, makes a good attractor none the less. In the left hand example we think that the effect would have been better had a larger cut been used and the circles dispensed with. The inner circles have a tendency to diminish the apparent size of the cut and without them the gain would have been double in that a larger cut could have been used which would have looked larger than it really was. The outer circle works well and would be sufficient. This is merely the application of the theory of lines. Lines within lines apparently reduce the size.

The panels on either side of the cut work well and are properly balanced, one telling the story and the second telling of Miss Clark in the story; selling from both angles. This is the essence of good advertising. You have two angles from which to sell, presuming that the story is all right. You can sell the star to her admirers and to those who may desire to see a person they have read about, and you can sell the story to those who do not care for stars but who may be interested in the play. And since there are two angles, the best approach is to deal with each separately, as has been done in this case.

—P. T. A.—

Dropped, But Still Good

THE Doric Theatre, Kansas City, which started out with a big issue and two and three color covers, has dropped down to a four page news print section with a coated cover. It is considerable of a drop, but the virtual four pager is so well edited that it does its work as well as the larger size. The first page gives a talk of the play, with the cast and smaller features, the second page is devoted to the story and the star, the third is given to general reading and the back page to the underline. It is a neat arrangement and the stuff is well written. It works better than an eight pager stuffed with black advertisements and a lot of dead clip stuff, though our cut and paste department now gives program editors smartly written news instead of dead press talk for his columns.

"Back to God's Country" offered plenty of material for cutouts, but Mr. Duncan adapted the cutouts to text, which gave a better effect than would the cutouts alone, and if you will look closely you will note that he arranged to illuminate the display at night with reflectors working from above, to make certain that the display would show properly.

The Border Is Appropriate

WE do not know whether Rex Pedigo, of New Castle, Ky., deliberately selected a twelve point mourning border for this display or whether it is merely a happy accident, but the funeral suggestion is most appropriate, for it frames a "flu" closing order. Through a misprint the order is dated "1820," which is appropriate, for health officers who shut houses on account of the influenza scare are a century behind the times. New York authorities refused to close the theatres, and yet in both epidemics we have had a smaller percentage of cases than towns in which the health officers scared half the populace to death.

A Closing Order Set as a Funeral Notice.

—P. T. A.—

Splits 50-50 with Newspaper

DOUBLE page hook-ups are now so common as to be beneath the notice of advertising critics, who are even getting fed up on ten page specials and want full twelve pages, with colors back and front. It takes something out of the ordinary to permit a miserable little double decker to creep into the spaces where once it was received with honor, as a great triumph, but the Casino, Yuma, Arizona, seems to be entitled to a place in the hall of fame for getting a two page hook-up in a four page paper.

Putting it into percentages, a 50 per cent. split is going some and is better than a twelve page special in a 48 page issue. Twelve advertisers came in with the house and they all played up on the title to help along. It is not the size of the place, but the size of the man which counts.

Kinema Can Handle Blacks

But Does Not Always Win

LATELY we showed an example of the small spaces of the Kinema, Los Angeles, in which the handling of black and white was poorly done. This example shows a much better treatment of mass and gives plenty of room for display, but then it is a cross page elevens. It makes a sightly frame and gets a reasonably good display, though we think that the name of the star could have been given a better display in so large a space. It is no compliment to refer to her as "Mary Pickford's only rival." She makes her own appeal, and to liken her to another player is to admit there is a rival; which is a rather cheap compliment.

We like the general layout and the handling of the program, which is set all in type save for number nine, which is the operatic feature announced in the black strip, which is thus made to do double duty as an attractor and a part of the program as well. The figures in the lower corners are the four singers in the operatic production, and their names are lettered in such tiny white letters that they scarcely show. Even at the cost of spoiling the artistic effect, we think it would have paid to use a mortise.

'People Looked for Raise

And So Made No Complaint

F. W. FREEMAN, of the Palace, Great Falls, Mont., booked "In Old Kentucky" lately, doubled his prices to a fifty cent top and not only packed them at those prices, but did not have to offer any apology. To do this he doubled his display advertising as well as his prizes. It looked like a bigger show, so the people expected to be asked to pay more and made no complaint. It all depends on the attraction and the handling.

If the show is a big one and handled in a big way, then prices can be boosted without ill effects, but the biggest story ever filmed, if advertised in the usual way, would have to sell at usual prices. Not wanting to trot out the much overworked "psychology" again, let's call it human nature and let it go at that. It is only human nature to respect what another seems to value. You can sell almost anything if you go at it properly, but it is well to remember that there will be a back kick if the article sold does not come up to expectations. It is not the selling once that counts, unless you are leaving that part of the country the next day. It is the balance between your attraction and its handling.

effect of the display, which is nearly three elevens in the original, dropping 150 lines, but it gives an idea of the nice balance of the space.

The most certain way to sell an attraction is to tell about it, but now and then someone turns up an advertisement which in itself is so tasteful as to create the impression that the story must be good because the advertisement itself is so slightly, and this display falls into that class. We think it sold more tickets simply because it was so good to look at. The reverse panel used only letters large enough to get over, and the art work is as good as they make it. We don't blame Mr. Gary for being proud.

This Man Gets What's Coming from Ad-films

Texas Manager Solves One Problem of the Showing of Advertising Reels

SOMETIMES it happens that managers suffer from overconfidence. They are not as good as they think they are. F. M. Ferguson, of the Hippodrome, Wolfe City, Texas, goes to the other extreme. He's good and he doesn't know it. He writes that he wishes this department gave more space to the consideration of the small town manager's problems, and then he shows that he is quite competent to handle his own by a casual mention of his work on the advertising film proposition which is keeping the rest of the exhibition world stirred up.

Mr. Ferguson sends in a bundle of advertisements for criticism and explains that he is in a 1,500 town, where he must place most of his reliance on newspaper advertising and circularizing because he is handicapped for material with which to work. Then he tells how he swung the ad reels and does not seem to realize that he was doing something.

Made It a Hook-up.

One of the local dealers in patent stock feeds was promised the use of a two-reel advertising film for Purina feeds for a week if he could get it run, and he came to Mr. Ferguson for a price. Mr. Ferguson purposely named a stiff price for the running of the reels and then, when the dealer wilted, he made a counter proposition.

He would run the reels at no cost if the dealer would make enough newspaper noise to make it sound like an event instead of a sting.

He did not want to add the reels to his program and have everyone wondering what his idea was, but if the dealer would take a page to tell about it, he would make no charge for running the pictures and help him whoop the thing up big.

Wolfe City is in a stock raising section and a majority of the people are interested in feeds. They would be interested in the pictures if they were presented in the proper light.

Creating an Atmosphere.

To shed the light the dealer took a full page in the weekly, which appears on Friday, announcing that the following week the reels would be run "in addition to" the Hippodrome's regular program. He told this in the top half of the page and Mr. Ferguson took the lower half to tell about the bill for the week. It was ostensibly his own space, but it was all paid for by the other man, and there was a special box announcing the showing of the advertising picture with "Every day something good. See them all" as the foundation of the announcement.

Mr. Ferguson laid out the space and helped address circulars printed up from the page after the forms were lifted down. Eleven hundred circulars were sent out.

The net results were:

Better than usual business the entire week for Mr. Ferguson.

The leader sold one carload of feed and ordered another.

Not a single person felt resentful at the showing of the reels. They knew before hand they would be part of the program and some even came especially to see them, while many others were influenced in part to come.

And then Mr. Ferguson winds up with the remark about solving the small town problems.

Mr. Ferguson's Ideas.

We do not think he needs much help. All he needs is a little more confidence in himself and the ability to realize that every item in this department every week is a solution of the small town problems, even though it may be told of the larger places. All Mr. Ferguson needs do is adapt the idea to his own scale.

He reads in the current issue, for example, how the Tivoli and Strand in San Francisco divided a feature and used a joint street float to boom "In Old Kentucky." He has head in previous issues of the eleven hundred other jazz bands hooked up with this First National attraction.

Long before the film comes to him the different jazz organizations will have been dissolved, but there is nothing whatever to prevent him from rounding up three or four local players, colored or white, planting them on a dray and sending them around town. He writes that he is not much on special stunts because he is handicapped by lack of material to work with, but this bar is purely imaginary.

Make Your Own.

Probably he thinks he cannot have a local fashion show. We think he can. Two local stores advertise clothes. If he talks to them as he talked to Stone about the feed, he can get them to show the new models. If he cannot there is an apparently larger store in Greenville, which takes space in the local paper. If the local stores will not come in, perhaps he can borrow a few dresses and a couple of models from McBride. It is just a case of talking enough.

He does not have to do things as big as a big town, and he cannot borrow camels and elephants from the winter quarters of some circus, but he can do stunts if he feels that he can. The only trouble is that the idea has him buffaloed. He is beaten before he starts, because he feels that he can do nothing. He does not start to try.

It's Easy.

It is easy once he gets the proper confidence, and some of the ideas from the small town men. They have to have ideas to keep from starving to death. Mr. Ferguson does not starve because he already has good ideas.

He knows that a direct mail campaign is the most profitable advertising he can do, if he does not overdo it. He limits this to once a month, saving it up for something big. He knows that newspaper advertising reaches most persons, so he settles himself down right in the middle of the front page. He knows his patrons likes and if he has something he knows John Jones will like and does not see Jones on the street, he calls him on the phone and tells him about it. He backs his newspaper work with circulars, which are put into all of the automobiles Saturday afternoon and night when the farmers are in town, and he gets out a snappy four page program.

We don't see that Mr. Ferguson has many problems, but if he has we'd like to know about them. We think he's "there" already.

If You Cannot Afford Three Sheets; Try One

A Real Continuous Performance is Shown by Pittsburgh Manager's Unique Device

LOOKING around for something new for the engagement of Norma Talmadge, W. F. Mason, of the Grand, Pittsburgh, hit upon the idea of a really continuous performance. By the use of hundred foot strips, made for him by a local film advertising concern, he runs his performance straight through.

These film bridges represent the stage of a theatre, across the curtains of which are written the announcement of the succeeding film, the chief attraction being designated the "Grand Feature," while similar legends announce the comedies, news reels, scenic and other small stuff. Through their use the screen is occupied continuously.

The permanent value of the idea might be open to argument, but Mr. Mason runs no vocal or musical features and he likes the effect so well that he has continued the use of these bridges since the first production of "A Daughter of Two Worlds" for which it was originated.

Made Other Improvements.

This was only one of the innovations planned for the Talmadge opening which Mr. Mason liked so well that he has continued. He augmented the orchestra and finds that a band of twenty means money to him, so he kept them on. He also instituted a nursery, announcing that all children under five must be checked at the night performances. The creche was such a hit with the patrons that it has been continued.

Another improvement was an increase in the number of ushers employed. Six additional seat-chasers were put on and they were told that patrons must not be permitted to stand in the aisles. As soon as seats are vacated others are allowed to occupy them, but the parade of late comers up and down the aisles in search of chance seats has been done away with.

Patrons are seated as soon as they arrive if there are any seats vacant. If there are none, they are asked to remain at the rear of the house until someone leaves, when the usher at once fills them.

Moreover, Mr. Mason started in to exploit Miss Talmadge in the newspapers. He felt that in her he had a star who would get him his money back and he began with a two twos and plugged up to two sixes, which is good for a large town. Most of the real advertising is done in the smaller places, but Mr. Mason has found that he can make it pay in the city as well.

Taken by and large, he has reason to remember the Talmadge engagement, for in his effort to get the picture over he made permanent improvements in his house which are bringing him money.

There are hundreds of others who feel swamped by the cities. They feel that it is of no use to try and run a real theatre, so they drift along. Mr. Mason was taking it easy until he saw chances of big business in Miss Talmadge and started in to hustle.

Consider the one sheet.

One sheets cost less than bigger sheets.

You can buy more of them for the same money.

The more sheets you stick around the streets, the more people you'll attract.

More one sheets mean more patrons. So I favor one sheets as the best means of exploitation.

They've never failed me yet. When I had Constance Talmadge in "Two Weeks," her latest picture for First National Exhibitors' Circuit, I pinned a lot of faith to the one sheets I used to bill the town. When Norma Talmadge was booked in "The Daughter of Two Worlds," also a First National production, I never got stuck on the faith I pinned in one sheets.

So—consider the one sheet.

Short-Sighted Newspapers Combine Against Theatres

HISTORY repeats itself. Years ago the New York theatres united to announce "We do not advertise in the New York Herald." Today the Saenger theatres in New Orleans have withdrawn from the States. According to their program announcement, the New Orleans papers united to double the advertising rates for theatrical announcements, although the amusement rate is almost always in excess of the commercial scale. According to the Saengerette the increase was almost double the old prices.

One paper broke from the combine, but the others stuck and apparently the States is doing a little club swinging and the Saengerette is talking back. The incident is to be regretted, but many publishers seem to think that because the theatres are making money they should be taxed all the traffic can stand. This is shortsighted. A reasonable rate will more than double the advertising patronage and the larger advertisements make it possible for the house to continue to pay its advertising bills with the increased attendance thus gained.

A newspaper is entitled to ask what it pleases for advertising space, but good business policy suggests a liberal treatment as being best for both house and newspaper. The country over the best revenues are gained through cooperation between house and newspaper. If business managers of publications would only compare their amusement advertising of ten years ago with the space today they would find the answer and listen to reason.

Used Sky Passes to Tell of Locklear Film in Brooklyn

MAXWELL M. CHETKIN, managing director of the Electra, Van Buren, Lexington and Koskioski Theatres, Brooklyn, distributed fifty passes from the roof of his Electra Theatre via the toy balloon route to advertising the coming of the Locklear film, "The Great Air Robbery." The stunt was widely advertised in the locality paper as well as in the larger dailies and on the screen and hundreds of adults gathered to watch a mob of youngsters fight for the coveted passes.

And Mr. Chetkin has built up an enviable reputation for his houses by donating the auditorium free for charitable performances. He argues that many people will come to church shows who will not otherwise attend and, having found the house to their liking, come again.

Soapbox Orator Touted for "Les Miserables" Ballyhoo

SOMETHING new in the line of exploitation was the use of a soapbox orator for "Les Miserables" at the Audubon Theatre, New York. Just before the showing of the picture a street talker started in to use the title as the theme for a talk on the brotherhood of man. Then he took up a collection and went into the theatre to see the film. Many of his more or less sympathetic audience followed him in, convinced by the collection that he was the real thing, though in reality he had been planted by the Fox exploitation department. It can be worked anywhere, but be careful to pick the right sort of an orator and stand ready with a club to chase him away if he gets too strong.

Who Was It Who Said That the Ten-Cent Store Hook-Up Is Dead?

You can't tell that to the manager of the Oakwood Theatre, Toronto, who got not one but three windows in the Woolworth shop merely by being nice and playing the song while the store played up the picture. Ten-cent store managers are regular little Sis Hopkinses. They won't do nothing for nobody who won't do nothing for them. But they are willing to swap publicity.

Painted Sodas Drew In the Thirsty Bostonians

Houses Dropped Rivalry and Instead Jointly Featured a First Run Play

SEVERAL interesting angles offer themselves in the recent joint booking of "In Old Kentucky" at the Strand and Rivoli Theatres, San Francisco, due to the fact that ordinarily these two houses are opposition of the most pronounced sort, yet, as told in a late issue, the fans who were unable to gain admission to one house went on to the other, forming a two-way parade which got real reading notices in the San Francisco papers.

San Francisco's "downtown" district is five blocks long with two houses under one management at one end of the line and a third house under the same ownership at the other. In between are the Strand and Rivoli, each making an independent fight for the business, which must first pass one or two houses owned by other interests.

Pooled Their Interests.

In such circumstances it was not easy to persuade these independents that the same attraction at both houses would pull more strongly than two distinct offerings, but the booking was accomplished and the houses were persuaded to make a joint advertising campaign. The combined newspaper space was less than that used by the two houses when in opposition and yet larger than either could afford singly. The billboards were on contract and the usual number were used, but double the usual number showed "In Old Kentucky."

On every piece of advertising the slogan "Too big for any one theatre" flared forth. It was probably this, more than any other one thing, which made the business. Instances have been known of not fewer than five first run houses using the same Chaplin comedy. It was done, for example, in Newark with "Shoulder Arms" and all drew crowds, but to use two theatres for a single feature suggested an interesting importance.

It suggested something out of the ordinary, and people felt that they must see the play, and at once. If it was too big for any one theatre it must be big, and as has been told people shuttled back and forth between the houses, the turnaway from each seeking to gain admission to the other. They stopped the promenade in a couple of days, after the newspapers ridiculed the proceeding, but they kept on coming just the same. Neither house could claim the other was getting the better of it. Both had all they could handle.

Wanted to See.

People wanted to see what it was all about. It worked on the same principle as the three ring circus. No one ever expects to see all three performances, but they feel that a circus big enough to have three rings must be three times larger than a one ring show. They felt that a two house attraction must be bigger than the average film and they crowded in.

Cooperation extended even to a street float designed by Frank Costello, of the Rivoli. It did not advertise either house, but merely the play and it carried a jazz band of five pieces, a Kentucky Colonel, a log cabin and a bunch of palms, which apparently did not come from Kentucky. A "Madge" in racing silks and mounted on a thoroughbred, served as an outrider. As Earl Hudson puts it, "they had all of Kentucky except the distilleries."

Makes It Worth While.

Probably either house could have played the cleanup business with the play for a week, but the advantage came in the talk created. The novelty of the idea appealed. People went into the downtown district to see "In Old Kentucky." The three houses of the opposition got the benefit of the turnaway, but for the week they were in second position in spite of big bills. The success of the scheme was so marked that it is probable that other big attractions will be handled in the same manner.

There is no reason why it cannot be done and the opportunities for extra advertising are attractive, to say the least. It looks as though the First National had started something that will spread all over the country. It will work with any extraordinary feature and it will work in any town between the size of New York and the smallest hamlet boasting two theatres. It would probably make more of a sensation in a two thousand town than in the cities and it would be interesting to see the experiment tried.

Every time a local newspaper carries an advertisement concerning your theatre, have a "reading notice" go with it in another column. Get the full value of your investment. Reviews printed in Moving Picture World are valuable as "readers." Copy them when you play the film they refer to.

Nine Foot Sodas Made Drys Long for the Wetter Days

BOTH the old soaks and the youngsters who ask nothing better than ice cream sodas were irresistibly drawn to the lobby display of the Olympia, Boston, when Will Rogers was shown in "Water, Water Everywhere." The attractor was an easel display of two glasses of soda with a nice pink tinge which might have been strawberry or might have been the product of a wink.

A Pair of Nine-Foot Soda Glasses.

The lettering was appropriate and the effect was better than could have been gained with the usual lobby stills. It will work even better as the weather grows warmer and perhaps you can split the cost with some drug store or confectionery and turn the sign over to them for repainting after it has served your purpose. It will cut the cost.

Let the other fellow know your exploitation methods!

You Never Saw Palms in Old Kentucky.

But all the rest of the components of this San Francisco street float advertising "In Old Kentucky" are guaranteed to be the real things. It was jointly used by the Strand and Tivoli.

Hook-up with Automobile Dealers Is Useful in Booming "Excuse My Dust"

MANAGERS who have booked "Excuse My Dust," a Paramount-Artcraft in which Wallace Reid is featured, have at command a self-acting hook-up with the Barley Motor Car Company, which they have only to ask for if they can locate the nearest dealer in the Roamer cars.

The story concerns the imaginary "Darco" cars, but a Roamer was used in the production and the Barley people were quick to perceive the advantages to be gained from a hook-up. Roamer dealers have been authorized to tie up with local showings in their advertisements and to loan cars and otherwise to work in with the local management.

Down in Cincinnati, where the active Oscar A. Doob is ever on the publicity job for Paramount productions, the hook-up has been worked to the limit and it has worked well.

Took Big Spaces.

One direct manifestation was the use of a display by the Roamer people 125 lines across four columns, headed "Romance in a Roamer," and dilating on the fact that "Wallace Reid, the speedy screen star, picked the Roamer to beat 'em all in his new Paramount-Artcraft picture, 'Excuse My Dust' at the Walnut." There was a cut of the car and a larger cut of Reid at the wheel; the latter gaining the greater prominence through size and placement.

This was followed by another large display, with a scene from the play and the argument that "The Roamer comes through in a pinch."

But this was only the commencement. A man who could look not unlike the star in his goggles was engaged to run a car through the streets with pennants telling the story, and Doob planted a photograph of the stunt in the Post. And just in passing it is worthy of note that he landed the picture with the automobile editor and not with the dramatic man, that he might leave the latter open to approach from the theatre angle.

When the novelty of the Wallace Reid driver wore off, the pretty daughter of the head of the Hanauer company, local agents for the car, took the wheel for the rest of the week. The fake Reid was all right for one time, but Mr. Doob knew that for a steady attractor a pretty girl would be better.

For another angle the Roamer owners were invited to be the guests of the Hanauer Company at the showing of the film, and this was made the basis of a big window display on automobile row. Probably no one bought a car just to get a pair of free tickets, but it all helped the publicity drive.

And Smaller Houses, Too.

All of this helped to get the picture over big for the Holy Week show at the Walnut, but the advantage will not be held to the first-run house. Even the suburban houses in the Cincinnati territory will have the advantage of co-operation and the car will be sent wherever the picture is to be played.

The same idea is being worked in other parts of the country. Where the lobby permits a car is parked as an attractor, and it is surprising what an attractor a car can be made. Most everyone either has a car or wants one, and people who would never think of going into a lobby to look at the stills will enter to look the car over, and can be sold on the show through an appeal to see how it runs in the film. Where there is a local automobile show in progress there is nothing but press work, and where there is no show at least a special demonstration at the warerooms can be put over.

Of course, it is mighty good advertising for the car, but it is good advertising for the house as well, so managers should worry!

Bandit Scare in Southwest Helped "Soldiers of Fortune"

JUST to show they overlook no chance, the Richards and Nace enterprises, operating the Strand, Phoenix, Arizona, used a flash throwaway to advertise "Soldiers of Fortune." In staring type it read "Rumored Heading Toward Phoenix," with "Mexican Bandit Border Raiders" in even larger type. There was a "$5,000 Reward" which ran into "would be a small item if the rumor could be verified or the attacks stopped." This ran into a suggestion that to see the type of men who conducted the raids it was necessary only to see the Richard Harding Davis play.

This sort of thing will work only along the border where there might be supposed to be some danger from a raid, but it shows the value of a timely hook up with the news for getting attention.

Offers Cut Attractors for Individual Tie-up Spaces

BECAUSE tie-up double deckers are becoming too common, and also because the shortage of print paper some newspapers are cutting down, Oscar A. Doob, of the Cincinnati Paramount exchange, has started using cut attractors for individual tie ups, and these have worked in several places, notably Charleston, W. Va., and Springfield, Ohio. Cuts are supplied to all who will use them on a given date, and the idea of the tie-up is used to sell the individuals a larger than usual space.

The result is scatter ads which work well; perhaps better than a double page. Certainly they work better where the hook-up page has been used two or three times.

In Springfield Mr. Doob also induced one of the papers which was deep in a Limerick contest to use "Everywoman" for the theme of the contest poems for the week. He is also working the stunt of carrying around with him some exceptionally fine window cards used for the premier showing and in use ever since. The small rental gives the use of cards which most theatres could not afford to have constructed, and the cards are "playing dates" as regularly as the film.

Bronx Lobby Panorama Advertises "The Capitol"

USING a panorama of Washington as a lobby attraction for "The Capitol" was one of the schemes which helped to fill the McKinley Square Theatre in New York. Sydney S. Cohen built up on this with handsome paintings of the star and scenes, and a lavish use of bill boards. The triple drive brought in big business and proved again that it pays to advertise.

Spent Five Cents to Sell Blocks of Seats

Combined Fashion Show and Cutout Marquis for Select's "Out Yonder"

COMBINING a fashion show with Select's Olive Thomas feature, "Out Yonder" brought in real money to George J. Schade, of Sandusky, Ohio. He had just made a clean up with "The Imp" for which, at Carrier's suggestion, he used ten cut out 24-sheets, and he liked that idea he asked for something else. Carrier suggested on Olive Thomas Fashion Show and helped to put it over. It was the first time live models had been employed in a fashion show in Sandusky so it was a novelty as well.

Local stores were interested and contributed the garments. To get their money back they had to come into the general advertising scheme, turning over their window displays and hooking in with their own newspaper announcements.

Had a Runway.

To be up to date, a runway was built down the centre of the house and on this the girls paraded to give the audience a good look. The bald headed row ran clear to the back of the house and to judge from the way the men and women fought to get early choice of seats you could not tell whether it was a bargain sale or a free distribution of cocktails.

The models were carefully selected for looks and ability to wear clothes and a little toe dancer was put in to give a little more life to the performance. She made the hit of the show when she came down the runway in a kiddie farmer suit leading an infantile pig dressed in baby clothes. Naturally the pig protested at the indignity of having to wear clothes and this gave point to signs on either side of the porker reading "Selznick pictures are always a hollering success."

The show went over so big that Mr. Schade took the trouble to wire the home office of his appreciation of the cooperation given by the exploitation man. Naturally he felt good over two broken records in three weeks.

Carrier also arranged for a hook-up page helped to plan a layout for the marquis. Mr. Schade goes strong on the decoration of the marquis and scarcely a week passes that he does not have some unusual scheme of decoration. The photographer counts on a job every week and seldom is disappointed.

The general scheme was the lighthouse with a woman's figure in relief upon the rocks which formed the foreground. Apparently the lighthouse was placed back of the sign to give the perspective. At the end of the awning was a large oval of the star.

Saves Money with Corrugation.

It will be remembered that Mr. Schade uses corrugated board in place of the more expensive beaver board, stiffening with lath and weatherproofing with cheap varnish, which prevents a washdown.

The Schade decorations are more than locally famous and people make a point of going past the theatre to see what he has done. He could get along without newspaper advertising if he had to, for practically the whole town gets the news from his cutouts, but he backs this up with liberal spaces just to make certain that he gets them all in—and usually he does.

Long ago, Mr. Schade discovered that it pays to do something out of the ordinary, and since then he has never been content merely to open the doors at the stated hours and see if anyone comes in. He goes after them.

Sold Big Blocks of Seats on a Five-Cent Investment

SELLING big blocks of seats on an investment of four cents for postage stamps and one cent's worth of letter-heads is the stunt lately pulled by Frank Holland, of the Murette Theatre, Richmond, Ind.

On the letter heads he wrote to the principal of the Richmond High School and the President of Earlham College calling attention to the fact that he had "Soldiers of Fortune" from the book by Richard Harding Davis, and asking that the students be advised.

Both letters were posted on the bulletin boards and watching the sale Mr. Holland satisfied himself that this direct approach had been the cause of large sales to the students of the two institutions. It is a useful stunt for any book-play by a standard author, and can be worked in any town.

Used Local Angle to Get Interest in Masked Woman

BECAUSE of a somewhat similar title lately used, T. L. Kearse and Tom Morrow, of the Strand, Charleston, W. Va., wanted a new idea for a stunt for "Everywoman" and it seemed to be up to Oscar A. Doob, the Paramount publicity man in Cincinnati to dope something new. He used the old "masked woman" but he gave it a new twist by offering prizes to the first ten to penetrate her identity, adding "she has lived in Charleston for the past fifteen years." She was sent around town in a car bearing banners to this effect and each afternoon and evening the car was driven into the enclosure at the Auto Show, then running, operated by the agents for that make of car. There she sat for a considerable time, touting the show and at the same time making the Hudson booth popular on the floor. And the guessing was difficult though the girl was an assistant cashier whose face was familiar to most patrons.

Another new angle, which comes too late to be of use, was the stress laid upon the fact that this was a morality play, an offset to the lenten feeling. Store tie-ups were used with special cards, and the tie-up advertising was scattered instead of being centered upon a double page layout.

Will Use Boy's Band to Push Selznick Films Around Ohio

JAMES CARRIER, the Selznick exploitation manager in Cincinnati, has engaged a boy's band of 42 pieces to boom Selznick films in his territory this summer. They will follow the "In Old Kentucky" idea of parades and ballyhoo concerts as well as stage performances in the interests of the Selznick pictures and will be booked over a route which is already rapidly filling up. If this keeps up bands will put electric signs out of business as business getters.

This Veiled Woman a Man, But the Stunt Will Work as Well

BUILDING up on the plan book suggestions, the Select publicity office has sent out a good suggestion for "A Fool and His Money," working a change on the familiar veiled woman of mystery.

The stunt is to have a man land at the railroad station, well dressed and prosperous, but apparently in a daze. He hands out money to women, planted for that purpose, and goes to the hotel where he continues his peculiar actions. Someone tips off the papers from the station and the man is located at the hotel, where he tells the reporters his wife has left him taking with her their only child, and that he has learned that she is in town. Questioned as to why he gave money away, he cannot explain.

The stunt is run as long as the interest holds; (it may be good for two or three days,) and is blown off either by having the supposed wife telephone the newspapers that it is another case of "A Fool and His Money" similar to the story at the blank theatre, or else a mysterious disappearance can be staged, the room broken into with the police and reporters and a placard discovered announcing that "A Fool and His Money" have moved to the theatre. The latter seems to be the better scheme if the hotel people can be trusted to play their parts and convey the suggestion that they fear a suicide.

Gave Orphan's Matinee with Candy Trimmings in Denver

FIVE hundred children from the orphan asylums of Denver were the guests of the American Theatre one recent afternoon to see Jack Pickford in "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come." to put over a recent special feature attraction.

This design covered the panel over the entrance to the lobby and represented the "glad" and "sad" poses of Norma Talmadge as she is seen in "A Daughter of Two Worlds," her initial release under his distribution contract with First National Exhibitors' Circuit. By means of varicolored electric lights, the two large portraits of Miss Talmadge were given lighting effects that well emphasized the idea they were intended to convey.

The first portrait of Miss Talmadge was taken from a 24-sheet and represented one of her happiest and most striking poses. Around this portrait was circled a string of red electric lights. The other picture of the star was an emotion pose carrying with it a sad expression. Green electric lights bordered this picture. The lights flashed alternately, plainly bringing out the idea of the daughter of two worlds.

Another artistic touch which brought out the contrasting idea of the title was brought about by the use of a tenement scene and a picture of a luxurious home in various lobby frames. This is also utilized in the paintings flanking the two faces, as shown.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Think of the Future

CHESTER KITZMAN, projectionist, Duluth, Minnesota, is with us again. He says:

It has been many moons since you have heard from me, I and Company, but now I want a bit of information. At the last regular meeting Duluth Local Union 509, the members ordered the appointment of an Educational Board. The reason is that Duluth men are thinking of the future. The members appointed were brothers Ray Ferguson on electrics, Roy Brainerd on machine repairs and my 'umble self on optics.

Now what I want is all the data I can possibly get on projection optics, and I know of no one better able to give it than yourself. You know there is a very great deal to optics, once one starts at the bottom.

I have the Handbook, Hallberg's Electricity, the lens charts and the question booklets, all of which are a great aid to the projectionist. I attach check for price of lens charts, to be sent to Frank Poulin, Liberty Theatre, and subscription to the Moving Picture World (the projectionists' friend) for myself.

Kindly let me hear from you as soon as possible and if there is any charge a check will be forthcoming at once.

There will be no charge, Brother Kitzman, because if I undertook the matter of supplying data "in full" it would mean a check for very decidedly more than a thousand dollars, which is out of the question to you—also to me, for I could not possibly spare the time.

But I will start you off by propounding a series of questions, indicating where the answer may be found in the Handbook:

1. Why is a core necessary in upper carbon? (Page 285).
2. What objection is there to cored lower carbon with D C? (P. 286).
3. What is the economical capacity limit of a carbon? (About five amperes below the point where needling or penciling begins.)
4. Does the projection light emanate from the arc? (P. 290).
5. What is the "arc stream" and what purpose does it serve? (P. 291).
6. What becomes of the carbon? (P. 291).
7. What is the economical limit of amperage? (P. 292).
8. What is the most economical angle of crater to lens? (P. 295, with addition of later data that the most economical limit is 55 degrees from perpendicular. A fifty-five degree angle gives 10 per cent. more light than does a 45-degree angle, and anything straighter than 55 is apt to bring about lower tip interference. The correct angle may be maintained by projecting image of crater (side view) to floor or ceiling or wall, and at proper place marking thereon the correct angle, to which the crater may then easily be held.)
9. What is the intrinsic brilliancy, per unit of area, of the crater of an electric arc? (P. 293).
10. What would be the approximate c. p. of a round crater .5 of an inch in diameter? (P. 293).

Next week and for several succeeding weeks ten more questions will be asked. We would suggest that unions take up the study of these questions somewhat after the plan to be pursued by Duluth.

As to Mazda Lamps

Ort L. Van, Manager and Owner Van's Movie Chautauqua, Butte, Montana, asks:

Here is a question which will, I think, interest others as well as myself. I have been informed by supply houses that in order to PRESSURE on our columns is such that published replies to questions cannot be guaranteed under two or three weeks. If quick action is desired, remit four cents, stamps, and we will send carbon copy of department reply as soon as written.

For special replies, by mail, on matters which, for any reason, cannot be replied to through the department, remit one dollar.

QUESTION BOOKLETS.

We have two paper covered booklets containing 150 questions designed as a guide to study. They indicate what the projectionist should know.

Either booklet, postpaid, twenty-five cents; both, forty cents. United States stamps accepted; cannot use Canadian stamps.

THE LENS CHARTS.

Are You Working by "Guess," or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens charts (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) are in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

Don't "guess." Do your work RIGHT. Price, fifty cents, stamps.

use a Mazda for projection it would be necessary to reduce my voltage to thirty.

I have a 3 KW. 110 volt generator; also I expect to be in towns where they have 110 volt A C. Thought that in case of emergency I could use the 110-volt current. Several manufacturers of portable projectors using Mazda advertise that it can be connected to 110-volt lines.

Why cannot I use a 900-watt lamp on either A C or D C lines? Can get universal motors for projector, and want to use regular line voltage (110) if possible, to save expense of carting transformers and rheostats around.

Can you advise me as to where I can get thorough information as to Mazda equipment? Also what type of condenser is best for use with Mazda? Also what objective is best adapted for use with Mazda? Have heard that a wide diameter (F3) lens is best. Have been told that there is a "universal" objective on the market.

I show in halls and distance of projection changes with pretty nearly every place I stop. Would a universal lens answer my purpose? Or is it best to carry an assortment of lenses?

As to Voltage Problem.

We have, up to now, purposely steered pretty well clear of the Mazda proposition. This because we did not care to go deeply into it until such time as it had passed the experimental stage and become somewhat stabilized.

We expect to go to Lynn, Massachusetts, very soon, to look the whole Mazda proposition over, size it up and get into closer touch with it.

As to your voltage problem, the projection Mazda lamps are made for both high and low voltage. The equipment advertised sets forth the truth, but the said equipment may itself contain voltage lowering apparatus so that a low voltage lamp can be used. However, while you can get 110-volt Mazda projection lamps, they are not so efficient as the twenty and thirty-volt lamps. We have not at this time any figures as to relative length of life of the twenty-three and 110-volt lamps. To sum up, you can get a 1,000-watt Mazda projection lamp, which you can use on either A C or D C supply lines, but the lamp will not give as much illumination as will a 1,000-watt twenty or thirty-volt lamp. It would take up too much space to explain why; also we are not ourselves so very well posted on that end of the proposition—yet. It is a matter of larger filament and higher amperage in the low voltage lamp. You can get the low voltage lamps, with a special transformer and a very compact rheostat, but perhaps for your work the 110-volter will answer best. That is for you to determine.

Consult the Mazda Men.

The only present place you can get anything like full instructions on Mazda is so far as we know, from the Argus Lamp and Appliance Company, Cleveland, Ohio. We will write requesting them to send such instructive literature as they have. Our recollection is that they put out an excellent instruction book on Mazdas.

Don't ask me what condenser is best, when different Mazda manufacturers are unable themselves to agree on that point. I refuse, as yet, to be interviewed on that point. Both the corrugated and plano-convex have their advocates and their good points. Yes, it seems to be pretty well settled that a wide aperture objective is best with the Mazda. Am not sure whether F3 is right or not. Consult the Mazda men.

At one time there was a "universal" objective, called the "Allen," made and exploited. Don't think there is any such lens made now, and anyhow we cannot recommend them. Better carry such assortment of objectives as you will need.

The Rolling Stone

We are in receipt of a letter from a member of Local Union 306, New York City, in which the following questions are asked:

(A) What is the pay of projectionists in Los Angeles, California? (B) Would it be easy to find occupation there? (C) Would I be required to take out license, and if so, what examination would I be required to pass? (D) Can my union card be transferred to that state so that I would not have to pass another examination? (E) I also am an amateur photographer. Could I get a position as assistant cameraman in some studio there? (F) Last of all, I would appreciate your opinion as to whether or not I should go.

I am a projectionist of fifteen years' experience, five of them in Europe and ten in New York. All my family is in Los Angeles. I am receiving fifty dollars per week in my present position.

Letter Is Characteristic.

This letter is characteristic of what we may term the average projectionist. This good brother has, according to his own admission, been a projectionist for fifteen years, yet in all that time he seems not to have taken even the most remote interest in learning the most ordinary facts concerning the practice of his profession outside of his own immediate vicinity. He is a member of the projectionist organization, yet he knows practically nothing whatever of its workings.

It is quite evident that he has not interested himself in the projection department, or has read it to little purpose, because some of his questions have been answered repeatedly, though others he has pronounced could not be intelligently answered by any living man.

We have answered him, as best we could by mail, but we also wish to use his letter to point the fact that the leaving of a good position to seek other fields, in which the pasture may or may NOT be green, is seldom if ever wise.

There is an old adage, "The rolling stone gathers no moss." That saying is no longer true as applies to mere money, but it is true in that the wanderer seldom builds up those associations of friendship which are, after all, the very cream of life. And when one leaves those associations, which, like many other things are little valued until they are gone, and a position which pays at least as well, and probably better than any procurable in the new field, it would seem that the move were unwise, indeed.

We believe that, other things being equal, the man who remains in one place, building up a local reputation and a circle of personal friends, is very much more wise and better off than he who elects to chase the will-o'-the-wisp of fortune from coast to coast, and (usually) back again.

Dowser Change-Over

From W. H. Boggs, Wallace, Idaho, comes a letter and sketch covering a change-over device invented by himself and his companion projectionist in the Grand Theatre, Wallace, whose name appeared in an earlier communication, but seems to have been misplaced. Brother Boggs says:

We have two old style Simplex projectors, set about four feet apart. Objectives are ten inches from port opening, which, with angle of the machine, gives a distance from front wall to dowser handle of 24 inches.

The dowser operator is constructed from half-inch pipe as follows: To the wall, at a suitable height above machines, fasten two ordinary floor flanges, A-A, plate one.

Into these flanges screw two half-inch nipples about four inches long, and on the end of each place an elbow, screwed down tight.

Next, construct part C, plate one, as shown, of length to join the two elbows. "C" is of half-inch pipe. "Y" is a union, "4" and "4" a T.

Put this into place but do not screw it into the end elbows tightly. Leave it loose enough so that it can easily be revolved at least a quarter of a turn.

"D" is a piece of pipe of suitable length, joined to "Z" by an elbow, so as to form an operating lever or handle.

How It Is Done.

Next, cut from flat iron about five-sixteenths by three-fourths of an inch two pieces, "H" "H," which must be clamped to pipe "C" rigidly, so that when dowser is closed they stand as per "H" plate three.

The clamping may be accomplished by bending the ends of "H" over and squeezing it down with a suitable bolt, or by means of a connection as shown at "H."

Next, connect "H" "H" with the respective projector dowsers by means of flat iron bars of same dimensions as "H" as shown in plate one.

Do NOT make a rigid connection at "V," plate two.

Parts "I"-"I" which connect parts "K"-"K" to dowsers have groove IV, into which the stem of the dowser handles fit and are clamped by a bolt, so that when handle "Z" is moved outward, rotating part "C" and raising the end of parts "H"-"H," to which parts "K"-"K" are attached, the dowser is rotated, as indicated in plate one, in which the dowser is shown in both its open and shut positions.

It is, of course, understood that grooves IV are made opposite, so that raising parts "K"-"K" have opposite effect.

For instance, raising part "K" of left hand projector opens dowser, whereas raising part "K" on right hand projector closes dowser, and vice versa.

The construction of parts "H"-"H" and "K"-"K" is shown at right hand side of drawing.

In addition to performing this duty the device operates a motor starter for each projector, so that a single movement of handle "Z" starts the motor of the idle machine, stops the running motor and dissolves the picture.

Mr. Boggs has promised us a working model in the near future, when we will be able to give a detailed description of the motor starter and stopper end of it.

Long Distance Lens Chart

A New York City projectionist makes inquiry concerning the new long distance lens chart as follows:

In the long distance lens chart, March 6 issue, in the third paragraph, "Measure condenser opening. According to diagram at top of page if the condenser center were 24 inches from the aperture and the crater diameter five-eighths of an inch, what size spot would you get, in horizontal diameter, at the cooling plate."

As far as I am able to dope it out what you were trying to explain was this: If you have a five-eighths crater and wish to have a distance of eighteen inches from center of condenser combination to aperture, you must have a 6.5 and 17.5 condenser combination, and they must be meniscus bi-convex at that.

Am I right, or have I got it all wrong? Have bought all the books you have published, as soon as they came out, and now these lens charts have me guessing.

Thought I was pretty well posted on projection, but am beginning to suspect I still have considerable to learn.

In Position to Advance.

When a man begins to suspect that he is in good position to advance. It is the I-know-it-all chap who remains at a standstill.

The lens charts are very simple, once you understand the underlying principles involved.

First, you must grasp the facts set forth in the paper read by the editor of this department before the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, and afterward published in this department, concerning the tremendous loss of light between the aperture and objective under certain conditions, viz: When the distance is short between condenser and aperture and the working distance (distance aperture to first factor of objective) of the objective long, as is almost invariably the case where high amperage is used.

To Be Used With Understanding.

The high amperage chart is something to be used with understanding. Let us suppose a case. We have an amperage which demands a sixteen-inch distance from center of condenser to aperture when working with ordinary condenser combinations.

We have a six-inch working distance. By laying that proposition out on paper, in accordance with the charts submitted with the article in question, you will discover the loss of light between aperture and objective to be very large.

You will also discover the fact that the improvement in the condition will come from getting the condenser further away from the aperture, without materially affecting the distance of the crater itself from the condenser.

Let Us Assume—

Let us assume that the crater measures, across its face horizontally, five-eighths of an inch. We know that a spot one and three-quarters of an inch in diameter is about as low as we can go and get a constant pure, white light. We look at the table and find that by using a 6.5 meniscus and a 17.5 bi-convex we shall get the condenser back two inches and have a one and three-eleventh-inch start. Now two inches may seem too little to bother with, but if you again lay out the ray, using an 18-inch distance instead of a 16, and consult the diagrams named we shall find a considerably greater percentage of the light will be picked up by the objective.

To sum the whole matter down, the high amperage chart is designed to get a greater distance between condenser and film, in order that the light ray may have less divergence beyond the aperture, hence a greater percentage of it be picked up by the lens and sent forward to the screen.

The only difficulty in its application lies in the fact that until there is sufficient demand for lenses of these focal lengths, lens makers, who are already pretty busy, probably won't make them.

Becomes Progressive

George H. Signor, Buffalo, New York, says:

I think you will be surprised to receive this epistle. Have been intending writing for a long time, but lacked nerve. I occupy the position of second man in the projection room of Shea's Hippodrome. When you last visited Buffalo, and our theatre, you were not sure of giving a lecture, and I had the misfortune to miss it.

I had the Projection Departments on file for four years up to 1915, but since that time have neither bought or borrowed one. Read the account of the light ray experiments, but could not see the benefit to be derived from their study.

Wakes Up.

Now, I realize the great amount of work involved in the making of the tests and experiments from which the various charts and tables sprung, and give full credit to those who, through their collaboration, established the tables. It was and is the very greatest step ever taken in the right direction toward the perfection of projection practices.

Fortunately it is never too late to learn, and I wish I right now had all those copies of the World I missed, that I might follow through its work during the missing years, and know what comments and what experiments have been made by other projectionists.

Paper Covered Handbook.

I have all the handbooks, even to the little paper covered one written by you and put out by the Nicholas Power Company in 1907. Had them more for reference than for study, though I surely did need to study.

The third edition of the handbook arrived and went on the shelf of my library with the others. There it calmly reposed until three months ago, since which time I have been doing some honest-to-gosh digging in the field of knowledge, and fully intend to continue.

Don't just know what got me started, but the beginning was with the optical system, that being, I think, the most important and least understood branch of technical projection—also the branch least understood by the average projectionist.

I suppose you eagerly look for the day when the moving picture projectionist will be recognized as one of the really important cogs of the machine. Well, maybe that day is not so far away. It is too bad we have not more men like yourself to aid in the going about of better conditions, which must, however be preceded by a waking up the men themselves to a greater respect for their profession, and along those lines also have worked wonders. There, I've confessed and feel better already!

They Blunder Along.

The case of brother Signor is typical of a experience of many others. They blunder along for years, indifferent to everything, failing to realize the possibilities for improvement in knowledge, or the need for study of the technique of their profession.

The something, perhaps so slight that it is in itself unnoticed, happens, which starts them studying. Maybe they consult the handbook and something catches their attention sufficiently to cause them to study that one point.

They become interested. That thing leads to another, and presently they hunt up the projection department, which is then read with new understanding and from an entirely new and different standpoint.

To save time, order from nearest office.

And it is then but a short while, usually, until we get a letter from the new convert expressing regret for all the wasted years.

Never Too Late.

No, friend Signor, it is never too late to get busy, and the moving picture industry and the projection rooms of the country need men who will get busy and thoroughly learn the technical end of their profession.

That there is increasing interest in study and advanced methods was made evident when we recently lectured before the American Projection Society at their club rooms, Columbus Circle, New York City, on the optics of the projector. The American Projection Society has its membership among the best men in New York City, and usually that class of projectionist is inclined to think he is already pretty thoroughly supplied with knowledge.

We, however, found our audience to be intensely interested, willing and eager to learn, and not in the least inclined to the view that further study is unnecessary.

Some Will Ridicule.

There are still those who will indulge in ridicule, or who will sneer at you, brother Signor, but you can well afford to ignore them because they represent an element whose opinion has very little value.

The reason the Buffalo lecture was pulled off at the last moment, fathered by the Exhibitors' League instead of by the union, was that the union either did not reply to letters we sent them offering to give them the lecture, or refused to make the necessary arrangements—we have forgotten which. We think those who heard what we had to say that evening concluded that the union committed the error of allowing a worth-while thing, which should have had their energetic support and enthusiastic indorsement, depend for its life on the Exhibitors' League.

We doubtless will be in Buffalo again, in due course of time, and it may be that Local 233 will then see the thing in a different light. We hope so. Meanwhile, our compliments to you, and to the other progressive Buffalo projectionists—for we are sure there are others, though up to this time there has not been very much visible display of that fact to this department.

A Suggestion

It has occurred to us that, due to the fact that many portable projectors have both reels side by side in what is the carrying case when the machine is traveling, and that at least one semi-professional uses the same plan, it would be well to abolish the old title or name, "Upper Reel," substituting therefor the name "Feed Reel."

It seems to us that the latter is really what it is anyhow, since it feeds film to the mechanism. What do you fellows think about it?

How Do You Read?

When you take up this department to read, in what spirit do you come? There are three distinct classes of readers. There is the one who reads purely for amusement. He wants to see what other projectionists have to say, and what reply Richardson makes. He likes to get an occasional laugh, and to be entertained, but beyond that he has no interest.

When he has done reading he has finished, thoroughly and completely with that particular issue of the department. Not one shred of its real purpose in life has reached his intellect. If there has happened to be a good joke he remembers it, but of knowledge he has acquired none at all.

The second man is he who reads to pick flaws, to ridicule or to sneer. He gets even less than the first, because he is not even amused. He learns nothing from what he reads, hence reading is to him a mere waste of time.

The Real Readers.

The third class are the real readers. Realizing the fact that there is always much to learn, and that no man lives long enough to acquire complete knowledge of any one business through the slow process of practical experience, he reads to learn.

He approaches the reading of the Projection department intent upon making his own anything he may find therein which is of value.

Errors he will condone, well knowing all humanity is prone to make them. He cares nothing for crudity in expression if there is an idea of value hidden therein.

He Is the Helpful One.

It is this class of reader who is the helpful one. It is for his benefit that we work, strive and toil. It is to him we look for commendation or for competent, friendly correction or criticism when we err, as often we do, being but human.

The careless reader amounts to little because if he is careless in such an important matter he most likely is careless in his work, hence he is a real detriment to the industry.

The reader who is of the scoffing kind is entitled to little consideration from us or from any one else. But the one who reads to learn; who knows that by reading he can learn, and who studies to improve, is the yeast in the hope of the profession, because it is he who will eventually make it a well-paid profession instead of a mere trade.

As to Transformers

J. J. R. McLoughlin, Poland, New York, asks:

"In your opinion which is best, Power's inductor or Bell & Howell's inductor-compensarc?"

Both are good room transformers, but especially in view of the fact that you are only a comparatively short distance from the factory, should it ever be necessary to have repairs made I think it would be well to purchase a Power's inductor.

In our view it is at least fully as good as the other device, and there is the advantage named.

Specially Written for Moving Picture World.

HARVEY GATES is adapting to the use of May Allison on the screen "Held in Trust," a story to be produced by Metro. Miss Allison is one of the most popular of Metro stars, and the new feature is expected to give her unusual opportunities.

Harry Carey has begun work on "Crossed Claims" under direction of Reeves Eason, with Mary Charleson his leading lady. Miss Charleson, the fans will recall, is the wife of Henry B. Walthal.

In Pauline Frederick's presentation of "Madam X" for Goldwyn, William Courtleigh will play Louis Floriot and Casson Ferguson will play the young barrister.

Hedda Nova and her director husband, Paul Hurst, will give the name of "Hurst-Nova Pictures" to the series of photoplays on which they soon begin the work of production. They will make the screen plays on the West Coast.

J. Warren Kerrigan has completed "The House of Whispers" at Brunton studios, and has started on "The Coast of Opportunity," an original story by Page Phillips.

Donald Crisp will direct Wanda Hawley in her first Realart picture, "Miss Hobbs."

Henry Kolker has completed "The Heart of Twenty" for Brentwood, and is making preparations for filming "The Little Widow," with ZaSu Pitts in the featured role.

Polly Moran will again be seen in the role of "Sheriff Nell," made famous in the old Keystone days. Harry Wulze will write the plays for Miss Moran, and they will be produced by Marion H. Kohn at the National studios.

Ethel Clayton has renewed her contract to make Paramount-Artcraft pictures for a long time. A feature of the new contract is that it calls upon Miss Clayton to make two photoplays at the London, England, studio of Famous Players-Lasky.

A Salvation Army uniform still thick with the mud of Flanders was loaned Martha Mansfield for the forthcoming production, "Civilian Clothes," by Irene McIntyre, because of her intense interest in the story when it was presented on the stage. Miss McIntyre and her sister, Gladys, were the most popular Salvation lassies in France with the A. E. F.

Marguerite De La Motte has been engaged to appear in the first of the Tom Terriss productions to be made at Western Vitagraph.

Ann May, Harry Meyers, Lydia Knott and Walter Perkins support Charles Ray in "45 Minutes from Broadway."

Mary Beaton, who has been working in Metro productions for the past three months, has been summoned to New York by Maxwell Karger to play an important role in "Clothes."

William D. Taylor, Lasky director, has begun production on "The Boy," from an original story by Julia Crawford Ivers, with Lewis Sargent and Lila Lee in the featured roles.

Will Rogers is about to start filming "Alec Lloyd, Cowpuncher," from the story by Eleanor Gates. Helen Chadwick will play opposite.

The latest Benjamin B. Hampton feature, "The Dwelling Place of Light," has been completed, and work will begin shortly on "The Money Changers," by Upton Sinclair.

In his new picture, "Smilin' All the Way," David Butler is supported by Leatrice Joy, Lydia Yeamans Titus and Rhea Haines.

Ethel Clayton, now at work on "All in a Night" for Paramount, states that she will go to England to make two films in October.

Florence Deshon plays the leading feminine role in Maurice Tourneur's new picture, "Caleb West, Master Diver."

Elsie DeWolfe, who appeared as the Madonna in D. W. Griffith's screen spectacle, "Intolerance," plays the role of the woman in "Democracy—The Vision Restored" under the direction of William Nigh.

Talent seems to be wasted in the realm, as they say, of the silent drama, for Robert Dunbar, who is Metro's "Alias Jimmy Valentine," was for twenty-five years (and before entering pictures) one of the best known tenors on the American concert stage.

Frank Currier has a prominent role in Douglas MacLean's and Doris May's "Lucid Intervals," soon to be completed in the Thomas H. Ince studios on the West Coast.

Willie Collier, Jr., otherwise known as "Buster" Collier, the son of the stage comedian, has been engaged for the Famous Players-Lasky stock company, and will shortly begin work on the West Coast.

Elaine Stearn's story, "The Road to Ambition," will be presented on the screen by Myron Selznick, with Eugene O'Brien starring therein.

Psycho-analysts will have their theories presented on the screen when "The Dark Mirror," starring Dorothy Dalton, is released. The story of the plot deals with complications resulting from the subconscious knowledge of one character of the life of another. It was founded on the book by Louis Joseph Vance.

Olive Thomas, with Larry Trimble, her director, has gone to the Selznick West Coast studios in California to make two pictures.

Edith Day, the star of "Children Not Wanted," has gone to London to play the leading role in an English production of "Irene" and to make a picture version of George Bernard Shaw's "Pygmalion and Galatea" under the personal direction of the author.

George Melford has completed shooting Sierra Nevada mountain scenes for the Artcraft picture, "The Translation of a Savage," based on Sir Gilbert Parker's story. Melford will shortly take his company on an Australian liner for ocean scenes.

Conway Tearle will play opposite Zena Keefe in "Marooned Hearts," of which Lewis Allen Brown is the author. George Archainbaud will direct.

Kathlyn Williams and Margaret Loomis will have prominent roles in the support of "Conrad in Quest of His Youth," the picture in which Thomas Meighan will star as soon as he has finished "Civilian Clothes."

"The Shadow of Rosalie Byrnes," which is soon to be released, and in which Elaine Hammerstein is starred, includes the following supporting company: Edward Langford, Anita Booth, Alfred Hickman, Fanny Cogan, George Cowle, Lillian Wiggins, and Juliette Benson.

"The House of Toys," to be created for the screen by "Flying A" forces, will give a certain Western exhibitor a chance to again distinguish himself. When "A Doll's House" was screened at his theatre this imaginative showman advertised, "Bring the Kiddies."

"The Girl from Rector's" is coming to the screen, with GERALD BACON starring Lucy Cotton in the title role.

"Wedding Bells," a converted stage play, will soon be screened, with Constance Talmadge doing the star role.

Grace Darling and not June Caprice, as originally intended, will be the star in Burton King's screen presentation of "The Hidden Path."

LOS ANGELES

NEWS LETTER

BY A. H. GIEBLER

Ramona Film Is the Latest Picture Producing Firm Formed in Los Angeles

THE latest picture producing concern to have been formed in Los Angeles is called the Ramona Film Corporation, with a capitalization of $100,000. Ray Rockett, formerly business manager of the Balboa Company at Long Beach, and recently manager of the purchasing department of Universal, is president and general manager; his brother, Al Rockett, is assistant general manager and secretary; E. H. Christensen is vice president, and S. G. Buchan is treasurer.

The capitalization of the new company is to be increased in a short time, when the name of the company will probably be changed to the Rockett Film Corporation.

The first production to be made by the new organization will be filmed in one of the Hollywood community studios, but the company will build its own plant, either in Hollywood or Santa Monica, for future activities. The plant will be built large enough to rent space to other producers besides the Ramona units, of which there will be six, if the present plans are carried out.

The Rockett Brothers has left for Chicago and New York to establish their eastern connections and to look over a supply of stories on which they have obtained an option. On their return, in about six weeks, they will begin production immediately on their first picture.

Oakman-Dean Marriage Announced.

Wheeler Oakman and Priscilla Dean, who were married in San Francisco early in January, have at last admitted the fact to the public, and have established a home in Hollywood. Miss Dean and Mr. Oakman met and became engaged soon after the picture, "The Virgin of Stamboul" was begun, in which Miss Dean was the star and Mr. Oakman the leading man, and it was while they were on location for the picture in San Francisco that they decided to marry, and to keep it secret as long as they could.

Special Pictures to Make Dramas.

The Special Pictures Corporation, producers of the 1400 foot Comedyart release, has just announced its decision to film a series of two-reel dramas, the first of which will be ready for the screen about the middle of May, and the others to be released at regular intervals thereafter. The success in their ability to boil a two-reel comedy down to a thousand feet decided the Special Pictures officials in their resolution to make the dramas, and it is their intention to boil down four and five reel material into two reels, thereby giving it greater punch, faster action and uninterrupted tensity.

Bullfighter Completes First Film.

Enrique Molina, noted comedian and bullfighter of Spain, who came to Los Angeles a few months ago, has completed his first film in this country at the head of his own company. Senor Molina went to the Mexican border to film comedy bull-fight scenes, but made interiors and other location stuff in a Los Angeles studio. The comedy, which is called "The Suicide of Charlot," and is 1000 feet in length, was made from an original scenario written by the star and under his direction. It is now undergoing the process of titling and editing, also under the supervision of Senor Molina.

John Burton Dead.

John W. Burton, veteran stage and film actor, died on March 27 as the result of a stroke of paralysis that came over him as he was leaving for a Los Angeles studio on the Tuesday morning previous to his death. Mr. Burton had improved so much on the day following the stroke that he was able to sit up and eat a good breakfast, and he planned to return to the studio within a day or two. But a second stroke came and he never recovered from it.

Mr. Burton was born in Wisconsin in 1857. He made his first stage success when he played with Clara Morris in "Article 47." He was best known in the west for his interpretation of "David Harum" several years ago at the old Burbank Theatre. He leaves a widow here, and one brother in the east.

Under New Contract.

Buster Keaton, for three years with Roscoe Arbuckle in Paramount comedies, has just let it be known here that arrangements have been made between Joseph M. Schenck and Metro whereby he, Buster, is to make a series of two-reel comedies for Metro as soon as he completes his work in "The New Henrietta," the Winchell Smith play now in course of production at Metro. Keaton's contract covers a period of several years, and calls for eight comedies a year, which will be produced under the management of Lou Anger at Metro's western studio.

Washburn Gives Blood to Son.

Bryant Washburn, Paramount star, underwent the operation known as blood transfusion one day last week when his blood was injected into the veins and arteries of his infant son, Dwight Moody Washburn. The little one has been ill for a long time, and it was decided by the physicians that the transfusion was necessary. Mr. Washburn did not suffer any ill consequence from the operation.

Sennett Beauty Marries.

Myrtle Lind, a Mack Sennett bathing beauty, was married on February 25 to F. A. Gesell, of Los Angeles. Miss Lind declares that she will retire from the screen.

Scenarist Leaves for Portland.

Eve Sturtevant, writer of screen plays, has left Los Angeles to accept the position of scenario editor of the American Lifograph Company, of Portland, Ore., where she will have full charge of editing all stories and plays to be produced by the American Lifograph Company. W. E. Keefe, formerly with D. W. Griffith and Adolph Zukor, is production manager for Lifograph, and with Miss Sturtevant, will write and produce two-reel comedies to be known as Lifograph-Keefe Comedies.

The first of these comedies is to be a satire on society life. Eugenia Guilbert, a classical dancer and talented actress as well, plays one of the leading roles; Clara Morris and J. Parke Jones play the other two most important roles. Bob Grey, formerly with the Lasky Company, is directing.

J. D. Williams Returns East.

J. D. Williams, president of the First National Exhibitors, leaves for his home in the east this week. Mr. Williams has been in Los Angeles for a few weeks, and during that time has closed a number of very satisfactory deals for the First National, among them the $250,000 contract for first run privileges with the Kinema Theatre. Mrs. Williams, who accompanied her husband on his trip, returns with him.

Reginald Warde Leaves.

Reginald Warde, film exporter, returned to New York on April 6, after having spent several weeks in the film colony on the west coast.

Moreno Begins New Serial.

Antonio Moreno, Vitagraph serial star, has begun work on a new serial drama from the pens of Cleveland Moffett and Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph. The serial has not definitely been named as yet, but it may be called "The Adventures of Moreno." Moreno's present serial, "The Invisible Hand," is being run in Mexico and Spanish speaking countries under the title of "The Adventures of Moreno." When this serial is finished Moreno hopes to go to Spain to film a picture.

New Theatre for Escondido.

A modern theatre building, to cost $30,000 is soon to be erected in the business center of Escondido, Cal. The house is being constructed for A. H. Nelsen, and will have a seating capacity of 1000. The equipment will include one of the latest types of organs.

To Release "Buddy Post" Comedies.

The new "Buddy Post" comedies in two reels that are being made at National are to be released through the Goldwyn exchanges, according to an announcement from the National Film Corporation in Hollywood. Although not a fat man, Buddy Post, the star of these comedies, is a young giant in height, measuring six feet six inches. The first of the series is called "Love and Loot," and was directed by Mark Goldaine. Helen Howard plays the feminine lead.

Famous Organist Calls.

Dantes Belleau, organist of the T. & D. Theatre of Sacramento, paid a visit to the World office during his recent vacation in Los Angeles.

Metro Official in L. A.

J. Robert Rubin, secretary and general counsel of Metro Pictures Corporation, is in Los Angeles on his first visit to California. During his stay Mr. Rubin is spend considerable time at the Metro studio, and has seen Nazimova, Bert Lytell and Mitchell Lewis at work on their productions.

Goes Over to Special Pictures.

V. E. Hampton, for three years and a half chief accountant with the Famous Players-Lasky exchange, has severed his connections with that organization and has joined the sales force of the Special Pictures Corporation.

Irving Lesser Arrives.

Irving Lesser, brother of Sol, and eastern representative of the Sol Lesser interests, has arrived from the East.

Studio Shots

FRANK KEENAN has left for New York to dispose of his eastern holdings, and then will return to the west coast, where he will establish his permanent home.

Pauline Frederick, Goldwyn star, has been chosen queen of the California Raisin carnival to be held at Fresno on April 30.

Clara Kimball Young has left for New York, to be gone for several weeks.

Jack Dempsey is filming the final scenes for his fifteen-episode serial at Brunton this week.

Stuart Holmes, one of the noted heavies of the screen, is "villaining" in the Benny Leonard serial, "The Evil Eye," at U City.

Fay Tincher, who has been having a vacation of about three months, is back at work in a Christie Special entitled "Belinda's Bluff."

Jack Gilbert, who is playing an important role in the Maurice Tourneur production, "Caleb West, Master Diver," wrote the continuity of the story for the screen.

Peggy Hyland, of the Samuelson films, has left for New York, where she will sail for other European ports to be gone from the United States about a year.

Director Colin Campbell has taken the Dustin Farnum company to Mt. Baldy to film snow stuff for "Big Happiness."

Charlie Murray's first picture under his new contract with Mack Sennett will be called "By Golly!" and will be directed by Murray.

House Peters' new feature, "The Great Redeemer," from the H. H. Van Loan story, is nearing completion under Director Clarence Brown.

The Eddie Polo serial, "The Vanishing Dagger," now in its seventeenth episode, will be released the middle of April instead of June because the Art Acord seal, which was scheduled for April, could not be finished in time.

Rupert Hughes has come from the east to see his latest play, "Scratch My Back," run off at Goldwyn before it is given out to the public.

Annette Kellerman has returned to Brunton from an extended location trip to San Francisco.

H. H. Van Loan has left for New York, where he will write plays for Norma Talmadge, Eugene O'Brien and Owen Moore.

Production on "The Son of Tarzan" at National, with Jack Hoxie as star, is being held up until Joe Brandt, new production manager of National, arrives from the East to assume his duties.

James Kirkwood is playing opposite lead in the current Louise Glaum picture for J. Parker Read Productions.

The Bert Lytell company from Metro are spending the week on location at Chatsworth, Cal.

Paul Hurst, director, has settled his breach of contract suit with National Film Company.

Minna Grey, star of G. B. Samuelson Productions in England, has come to Los Angeles to take part in American made pictures.

"Why Change Your Wife" Breaking Records of Preceding Artcraft Specials

FROM the offices of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation comes the announcement that Cecil B. De Mille's latest Paramount Artcraft superspecial, "Why Change Your Wife?" has started on a career of record breaking in first-run cities that promises to eclipse the box-office performances of any of the superspecials yet released, not even excepting Mr. De Mille's previous production, "Male and Female."

Starting with an engagement of record-breaking length and receipts at Grauman's Rialto in Los Angeles, according to Famous Players-Lasky, "Why Change Your Wife?" so far has not failed to set new attendance figures in any house in which it has played, and last minute reports indicate that this unique record is not due to be interrupted the present week at least.

From John P. Goring, Kansas City, the following wire was received: "Starting today on the third consecutive week of an indefinite run, 'Why Change Your Wife?' at the Royal Theatre bid fair to eclipse any production heretofore presented in Kansas City. It has already shown to 58,000 paid admissions, which is 20 per cent. of the total city population. This De Mille masterpiece will easily exceed the record of 'The Miracle Man' at the Royal Theatre by several thousand dollars."

In Denver the production opened simultaneously at the Rialto and Princess theatres, and the opening was the occasion for the following telegram: "Receipts at both Rialto and Princess broken by wide margin on opening day of 'Why Change Your Wife?' Much bigger business than on any other super-special ever released. Crowds highly praise picture."

Rain was encountered at the opening at the Euclid Theatre, Cleveland, on Sunday, nevertheless, F. E. Walters felt justified in sending the following wire Sunday night: "Despite heavy rain here today indications are that 'Why Change Your Wife?' will surpass record made by 'On With the Dance' for opening Sunday at the Euclid Theatre. J. Kuhn, managing director, Loew Enterprises, sincerely believes that 'Why Change Your Wife?' will break all previous records for the house, including that of the longest consecutive run, four weeks, held by 'On With the Dance.' Public enthusiastic in approval and praise of the production."

At the Superba Theatre, Raleigh, N. C., the picture broke the single day record for receipts by several hundred dollars, and the telegram further stated: "Every record for attendance and receipts in Raleigh broken. House packed. Lobby crowded since eleven this morning. Line-up half block long. Compelled to stop selling tickets at seven-thirty. Crowds enthusiastic and every indication great business will continue to end of run."

Authors League Does Not Favor a Legalized Censorship of Pictures

AT a recent meeting of the Authors' League leading authors of the country took a unanimous position against state censorship of motion pictures. Now that some of the best modern novels and more important magazine contributions are being adapted to motion picture form, the authors realize that they cannot afford to have their literary works when translated to the screen mutilated by the stupid action of politically appointed censors. The following is a statement of the position which the Authors' League adopted:

"Legalized censorship of the film is a dangerous departure in a free country. It is no less dangerous than a censorship of the press or the stage, for it places a ban upon ideas. The indecent, improper and immoral film can be eradicated by the same methods as are used against indecent, improper and immoral books or plays. It may make the passing of films a matter of political influence and result in consequent abuse of power. It does not reflect public opinion, but merely the professional views of the censors themselves. The experiment which has been tried in other states does not warrant making such a radical departure from the principles upon which our Government is founded. Nor does there appear to be the necessity for that departure. Great as has been the improvement of the film in recent years, it would be greater and more rapid were the menace of censorship eliminated and the art allowed to develop along its natural lines, governed by common sense and the good taste of the American people."

The Authors' League also approved plans, in co-operation with the National Board of Review.

Among those present at the meeting were Henry Syndor Harrison, George Creel, George Middleton, Rex Beach, James Hopper, Juliet T. Bottle, Gelett Burgess, Arthur Somers Roche, Channing Pollock, Leroy Scott, Orson Lowell, Percy Mackaye, Cleves Kinkhead, Rupert Hughes.

New Screen Magazine Has Good Subjects.

In the Universal New Screen Magazine No. 62 may be seen Elmer A. Sperry's latest invention—the most powerful searchlight in the world. It throws a shaft of light of one billion two hundred and eighty million candle power. By concentrating the rays of one hundred and fifty or two hundred powerful searchlights, scientists believe a shaft of light can be produced that will be seen in Mars, our nearest planet neighbor. The New York sky line at night is shown under the powerful gaze of a Sperry searchlight.

Another feature shown in this reel is the bean that helped win the war. It did not rest on the shoulders of one of the dollar a year men. From this bean, oil was produced for Liberty motors, also castor oil.

Burton Holmes' Views Show France and Siam

THE Paramount-Holmes travel release for April 18 presents a journey of ease and comfort in Siam, and is called "Up-Country in Siam."

The noted photographer and lecturer makes the trip in a special car attached to the royal train of the brother of the King of Siam. The itinerary diverges from ordinary paths of travel and traverses country seldom seen even by the veteran tourist of the kingdom. In addition, the cameraman has the distinction of being a member of the royal party. Under the King's prestige opportunities were afforded to take pictures of people, localities and incidents seldom if ever previously photographed. Special celebrations were arranged for the benefit of the camera, and the film record of the journey includes a smiling motion picture of the entire royal party.

"Lovely Lorraine," the subject for April 25, has managed to retain its sunshiny, smiling demeanor despite the ravages of war. The travel weekly shows the rural district of one of France's two disputed provinces. Quaint village scenes, local customs and peasant dress feature the pictorial visit among the inhabitants. One of the features of this release is the scene showing pretty village girls doing exquisite "paillette" work—attaching tiny spangles by the thousands to gauzy fabrics, making shimmering creations for the wealthy women of fashion in large cities. The picture gives an accurate and interesting account of the daily lives of the population in this district.

Effect of Noxious Gas on Human Beings Shown by Fox

THE building of a tube under the Hudson River for vehicular traffic between New York City and New Jersey, a project now being planned, presents many engineering difficulties, not the least of which is the question of how to dispose of the carbon monoxide gas given off by automobiles. As this gas is a deadly poison, one can readily see the necessity of eliminating it from the tube without delay.

In Fox News No. 51 are shown tests conducted at Yale University by the Federal Bureau of Mines to ascertain precisely the effect of motor exhaust gas on the human system. An automobile equipped with an aeroplane propeller that drives the exhaust gas into a specially prepared chamber is shown, and then one of the scientists courageously goes into the sealed chamber to see what happens to his system. In order to prevent outside air penetrating the chamber, the door-jam is covered with broad strips of adhesive tape. From time to time the subject thrusts his hand through a small vent in the door to allow specimens of his blood to be taken for microscopic and other tests.

When the subject emerges he is so overcome that he falls into the arms of a fellow scientist. In order to resuscitate him oxygen is administered, which rids his blood of the noxious fumes.

Pathe Shows Land Plane Launched by New Method

AN unusually big feature of Pathe News No. 26, which should interest all classes of people in this country because of the enormous appeal and increasing popularity of the air sport, is the startling method recently perfected and employed by the U. S. Naval Air Force for launching land warplanes from the water. Since the beginning of the war the navy has been experimenting and rapidly improving this branch of the service. The cameraman who secured the shots did a remarkable bit of photography, as it was necessary for him to operate from a speed boat of the fastest type to keep up with navy experimenters and record the feat from all the difficult angles.

This innovation, shown in the current issue of the News, is the latest method of launching a land plane from a sea-sled. To accomplish this remarkable feat, the highest rate of speed must be reached. The plane is first placed on the sea-sled, which is a peculiarly-built, high-powered motor boat. When the boat attains a speed of 55 miles an hour the terrific momentum forces the plane to rise and seems to actually lift it into the air. In this manner the warplane rises without the usual "start" or "getaway." The value of this novel method of launching is the saving of fuel, which formerly was swiftly consumed in starting the plane on its journey.

Variety Is Keynote of Goldwyn April Releases

THE Goldwyn educational releases for April 3 and 10 present a number of interesting subjects, which are as follows: Pictograph No. 7034, in addition to a Bray technical drawing, which shows the formation of the ear and how it operates in communicating sound waves to the brain, introduces an interesting industrial subject called "The Leviathans of the Lakes," showing the loading and unloading of coal and ore by machinery.

"The Silent Witness" shows how Judge F. B. House, of New York's traffic court, tries to interpret the wild gesticulations of an Italian attempting to explain an automobile accident. A cartoon comedy of the "Jerry on the Job" series completes the reel.

The Goldwyn-Ford Educational Weekly for April 3 covers the activities of a lumber camp, and is called "Cut and Dried." The picture shows the lumbermen working knee-deep in the snow, and presents scenes of great interest in the lumber woods.

Process of Rug Weaving Revealed in Ford Weekly

THE entire process of rug weaving, from the time the pattern is designed by the artist until the product is completed, is shown in the Ford Educational Weekly No. 196, "From East to West," distributed through the Goldwyn exchanges.

The film first follows the work of the artist who outlines the pattern and paints in the colors. Then the pattern is traced on cards that are perforated and joined together until they look like the record for a piano player. The needles of the machine go through these perforations, drawing the various colored threads which weave the rug and form the patterns. Following the needles is a knife which cuts the threads and leaves a soft nap. Each step in the growth of the rug is shown in a picture that provides a clear explanation of a complicated process.

Some Things Worth Knowing

That a number of high school principals are contemplating the exhibition of the feature film, "A Man There Was," before the pupils. This picture is an adaptation of Ibsen's "Terje Viken," which is taught in the schools of Scandinavia.

That according to a report from the motion picture committee in Syracuse, Harry Gilbert, manager of the Regent Theatre, is showing the following pictures to the children, extending over the period from March 6 to May 1: "The Rescuing Angel," "Wagon Tracks," "Arizona," "Girls," "Evangeline," "An Innocent Adventuress," "The Virtuous Thief," "Louisiana," and "The Heart of Youth."

That "An Equal Chance," produced by the National Organization for Public Health Nursing, with the cooperation of the New York State Department of Health, gives a vivid description of the work of the district nurse in the country, and details of nursing technique. CHICAGO NEWS LETTER

JAMES S. McQUADE

Louis Thompson, of Special Pictures, Plans Two Comedyart Film Expeditions

LOUIS W. THOMPSON, president of Special Pictures Corporation, Los Angeles, arrived from the coast Wednesday, March 31, and remained until the following Friday night, when he left for New York. He stated that the object of his visit to eastern points has chiefly to do with the starting of a camera expedition to Europe and Africa, for the purpose of securing scenic pictures, which will be run with his Comedyart productions.

The first camera expedition will have three expert cameramen, and will leave for London early in May. From that city each cameraman will depart for his appointed territory. One will go to Norway and Sweden, another has been assigned to France, Holland, Spain, Portugal and Italy, while the third will devote his activities to Africa.

The second camera force will embark at San Francisco, in about six weeks. Two of the cameramen of this party will visit Japan, China and Siberia, and the third will devote his entire time to the South Sea Islands.

The negatives of the scenics taken by both expeditions will be developed by the Artcolor process which, Mr. Thompson guarantees, gives faithfully the perfect natural tints and tones of the scenes taken. The Special Pictures Corporation controls this process which, Mr. Thompson says, is entirely different from any other process of the kind in existence.

Artcolor in Comedyart Pictures.

These Artcolor scenics will be used in the organization's Comedyart productions, each comprising 1,400 feet of comedy, 400 feet of Artcolor and 200 feet of novelties. These novelties contrast scenes of former days with similar scenes of modern days. Take, for example, the ever-interesting topic, courtship. This will be treated as it was carried on years ago and also as it is conducted now, affording amusing contrasts which entertain both young and old.

Each of these Comedyart productions includes a comedy, a scenic and a novelty, thus affording the exhibitor all he needs as a complete filler for the feature selected for his program.

Mr. Thompson explained that the word "Comedyart," as used by his company, means the combination of a comedy and an Artcolor scenic. These Comedyart pictures are now released at the rate of one a week.

Mr. Thompson announces that his company is arranging for three more comedies a week, each of which will include two single-reel comedies and a 500-foot comedy. The title of these comedies has not yet been announced. The object in making these untitled comedies is to meet the wishes of numerous exhibitors, who desire to fill out their programs in this way, it was explained.

Has Secured 3,000 Contracts.

During the interview, Mr. Thompson made known that over 3,000 contracts had been signed for Comedyart productions during the week beginning March 22, and that they were signed by representative exhibitors throughout the United States and Canada. In making these contracts Mr. Thompson was guided by the following policy, which his organization has determinedly adopted:

"One hundred per cent. representation at reasonable service prices and, positively, no favors shown."

"The 3,000 contracts, referred to as being secured in one week, are the result of this liberal and fair policy," Mr. Thompson added.

In Sixty Theatres the First Week.

"Comedyart has now been in existence for two months and released the first picture, March 28, in sixty of the leading, first-run houses in the United States. All the leading circuits in the United States, with a few exceptions, have been signed," said Mr. Thompson.

He stopped over in Chicago to familiarize himself with the Chicago office, located in the quarters of Greater Stars Productions, on the eighteenth floor of Consumers Building, and expressed himself as being well pleased with the work of C. E. Davies, who is manager for Chicago and tributary territory. This territory includes, in addition to the city, Illinois, southern Wisconsin, western Michigan and the river towns of Iowa.

New Entrance to Randolph Lures State St. Promenaders

THEY also find comfort who "only stand, and wait" at the Randolph since the new $60,000 entrance and lobby on State street was built. Previous to its completion, two months ago, there was no satisfactory nor adequate means of sheltering the standing line at this theatre, which is owned by Jones, Linick & Schaefer. The old entrance on Randolph is necessarily small and, not being enclosed, it holds no attractions for theatregoers in zero weather.

But the new lobby!

It is a boon to the Randolph as well as to the tired man or woman who has to wait in line for a seat. It is superbly distinctive in line and color scheme. Panels of old rose tapestry above a wainscoting of Italian marble; artistic, hand-carved marble urns, settees and benches; solid mahogany easels for the portraits of stars and handsome announcements of coming attractions, and an exquisite electric fountain as a centerpiece, bespeak artistic discrimination and nice good taste.

A Spacious Lobby.

Quite as much can be said in favor of the practicality of the extra entrance, as of its aesthetic value. As many as 400 can comfortably find room, as the lobby measures 125 feet in length by 25 feet in width. About three-fourths of this space is enclosed and is particularly appreciated in rainy or in cold weather, when it is comfortably heated.

The plan for a new entrance was conceived originally as a competitive measure. State street, in this vicinity, is already a popular thoroughfare for movie fans, and promises to be still more of a Mecca in view of the projects already under way for erecting two fine picture houses nearby. In fact, the Randolph is already realizing the commercial advantage of being on State street. Business has increased noticeably.

Manager Louis J. Jones reports that the record day, thus far, occurred Sunday, March 28, when "Huckleberry Finn" brought receipts close to $2,000. Other recent big successes have been "On With the Dance," with Mae Murray, and "The Copperhead," with Lionel Barrymore. First run privilege on all Paramount specials has been secured. The Randolph has a seating capacity of 800, and exhibits from 8 o'clock a. m. until 11 o'clock p. m. Admissions are 50 cents for any seat, between the hours mentioned.

For the week of March 29, the first releases of Constance Talmadge in "In Search of a Sinner" and Norma Talmadge in "The Woman Gives" were shown at this house to fine business.

Steadily and surely the Randolph is becoming recognized as the theatre where the cream of moving picture productions can always be seen.

Annual Meeting of Equity Held at Blackstone Hotel

THE yearly meeting of the officials of Equity Pictures Corporation was held at the Blackstone Hotel, Wednesday and Thursday, March 31 and April 1. There were present Harry Garson, producer and director; Herbert K. Somborn, president, and Joseph Schnitzer, general manager. Clara Kimball Young also participated in the proceedings, when she could spare the time from filling engagements at prominent theatres, which had been arranged by Harry Reichenbach, her exploitation and publicity manager.

As the result of the sessions on Wednesday and Thursday, it was decided that Equity will make four pictures this year, with Clara Kimball Young as the star. Her next production will be "Mid-Channel," adapted from Sir Arthur Wing Pinero's play of that name, in which Ethel Barrymore starred for over a year, at the Empire Theatre, New York City.

The average approximate cost of each of the four stories for the Clara Kimball Young superfeatures, for the present year, will be about $175,000. The management of Equity is making a great effort to secure big plays and special stories.

The policies outlined at this annual meeting regarding Equity and the Garson studios will be given out later.

Miss Young made a personal appearance at the Playhouse, Pantheon and Chateau Theatres during her stay, and was enthusiastically received in each instance.

Lubliner & Trinz, Balaban & Katz and Ascher Bros. have booked all the forthcoming Equity pictures for this year on their circuits. Mr. Reichenbach informed the writer. He also stated that "The Forbidden Woman," during its run at the Playhouse, on Michigan avenue, is topping the receipts for "Eyes of Youth."

Small Town Movie Lovers Willingly Pay Good Prices

W. A. THOMAS, owner of the Court Theatre, Auburn, Ind., and of the Valentine Theatre, Defiance, O., visited the city last week. He manages both these houses and reports very fair business. The Valentine is a new house, seating 900 persons, and was opened March 10. It cost $125,000 and will be devoted to road shows, vaudeville and pictures. Admissions for picture programs run from 25 cents to 55 cents, the latter price ruling when superfeatures are shown. Admissions for road attractions are from 50 cents to $2.00. The Rex and the Elite, each seating about 250 persons, and charging 15 cents for children and 25 cents for adults, are storeroom theatres in Defiance.

The Court Theatre, in Auburn, Ind., charges 10 and 20 cents for ordinary programs and 35 and 50 cents for special features, which shows that picture lovers in country towns appreciate good pictures at their real value.

Chicago's New Exchange Buildings Is Now Assured

FROM all that can be ascertained at the present writing, it appears pretty certain that the film building, which has been long talked about, on the site at the northeast corner of Clark and Kinzie streets, a block north of the Chicago River, will be built in the near future.

A bond of $50,000 has been furnished the N. A. M. P. I. by E. G. Welch, who holds the lease of the property, that the building will be constructed, and it is understood that another bond of $100,000 has been furnished the owners of the property by the N. A. M. P. I. and Thomas Butler, of the Eastman Kodak Company, as assurance that the building will become an accomplished fact.

The only hitch at present is connected with the number of square feet which have been signed up by the various distributing concerns. Before construction begins, the owners, Daley & Stanhope, insist that 100,000 square feet is the minimum space that must be contracted for; whereas the space signed for at the present time amounts to only 87,000 square feet. It is expected, however, that the demand of the owners will be met.

The rental of a square foot is $1.50, so that the demand of the owners means that the minimum annual rental must be $150,000.

Exchanges Facing Difficulties.

Great difficulties are being faced at the present time by the exchanges of Fox and United in the Mallers Building, at the southeast corner of Madison street and Wabash avenue. These exchanges must vacate their present quarters by May 1, and manager E. C. Eckardt, of Fox, and Jack O'Toole, manager of United Picture Theatres, Inc., are at their wits' end to find suitable locations.

The enforcement of the present city ordinance is so strict, in the matter of housing films in the Loop district, that it is practically impossible to secure suitable locations.

The owner of the Mallers Building has displayed unwonted harshness in listening to anything like reasonable terms and wants sky-high rentals for the privilege of an extension of time that will tide over the difficulties until the building on North Clark street is ready for occupancy. Metro, whose offices are in the same building, luckily, has a lease until December 1, 1920.

When I saw Manager O'Toole, Wednesday,

day, last week, he had almost made up his mind to rent a barge, out in the lake, to store his films. It is easy to find convenient offices for the members of the exchange force; but it is impossible to find a convenient place for the films.

Manager Eckhardt, of the Fox Film Corporation, told me that he had offered the owner of the Mallers Building, for the present quarters, a yearly rental that was almost three times the yearly rental paid up till May 1; but it was refused.

The collapse of the project for a film building at Ninth street and Wabash avenue consumed much valuable time; but, I believe, in the long run that the building on North Clark street will prove the best possible film headquarters, under the existing fire ordinance.

"The Woman He Chose" Opens Indefinite Run at Ziegfeld

F. O. NIELSEN, of F. O. Nielsen Feature Films, has amalgamated with the Mickey Film Corporation and is general manager of both organizations, with headquarters in offices of the last-named organization, on the fourth floor of Consumers Building, 220 South State street. Ludwig Schindler and Arthur Lowy remain sole owners of the Mickey Film Corporation, while Mr. Nielsen has charge of the bookings of both organizations, thus saving overhead expenses.

The leading features now being handled are "Mickey," "Someone Must Pay," "Persuasive Peggy," the reissue of Chaplin's burlesque on "Carmen," with Peggy Hyland; "Open Your Eyes" and "The Woman He Chose," the latter a six-reel superfeature for which Mr. Nielsen owns the sole rights to the United States and Canada.

"The Woman He Chose" will be given its premiere Chicago showing Saturday, April 10, at the Ziegfeld, where it is booked for an indefinite run.

H. O. Martin, widely known as a successful salesman of territorial rights for superfeatures, will have exclusive charge of the sales and allotment of territory for "The Woman He Chose" in the United States and Canada.

Mr. Nielsen states that business is brisk and that four prints of the re-issue of Chaplin's burlesque on "Carmen" are being booked solid, all the time.

Goldwyn's Business Tip-Top Throughout Middle West

E. C. JOHNSON, division manager for Goldwyn Pictures Corporation in the middle west, has returned from a stay of two weeks in New York City, where the officials of the organization discussed the new selling policies for the coming year.

Before visiting the Metropolis, Mr. Johnson had just finished a trip, which occupied three weeks, visiting the branch offices in his territory. He reports most favorable conditions for the organization in every city visited.

Mr. Johnson's headquarters are in Goldwyn's Chicago office, at 207 South Wabash avenue.

F. O. Nielsen and H. A. Hill Purchase the Logan Square

O. NIELSEN, of F. O. Nielsen Feature Films, and Harold A. Hill, owner of the Star and Arrow Theatres, this city, have purchased the Logan Square Theatre from Harry W. Thompson.

The Logan Square is located in a high-class neighborhood, on the northwest side, and seats 1,350 persons. It is a thoroughly modern house, with an orchestra of twelve musicians. Nielsen and Hill will install a large modern organ.

The presentations at the Logan Square, under the new ownership, will be directed by G. H. Drummond, who was formerly manager of the Kinema and Auditorium Theatres, Los Angeles, for William Clune. Mr. Dumond resigned his position, about three months ago, to come east.

Messrs. Nielsen and Hill announce that the Logan Square programs will be selected from the latest and best productions, irrespective of make. Short subjects of the most approved merit will be shown also.

On Sundays, vaudeville only will be used at the Logan Square. The acts will be booked by the Western Vaudeville Managers' Association.

Big "U" Mid-West Managers Hold Meeting in Chicago

A MEETING of Universal exchange managers in middle western territory was held in the Chicago office of the company Saturday, Sunday and Monday, March 27, 28 and 29. Its object was to discuss future policy and to formulate plans for carrying it out.

The following were present: Harry M. Berman, general manager, New York; Bill Armstrong, district manager of Pacific coast territory, with headquarters at Minneapolis; Curley Culvert, manager, Kansas City; H. F. Lefholtz, manager, Omaha; Joe Roderick, manager, Minneapolis; Edgar B. Haynes, manager, Des Moines; George Levine, manager, Milwaukee; I. L. Lesserman, manager, Chicago; Sam Benjamin, manager, Oklahoma; I. Gettelson, in charge of the feature department, Chicago, and Morris Hellman, in charge of the short reel department, Chicago.

Manager Lesserman announces that Lubliner & Trinz, of Chicago, have booked "The Virgin of Stamboul" for more days over their entire circuit than have ever before been given to any super feature. This picture has been booked for an indefinite run at the Playhouse, opening Sunday, April 18, on Michigan avenue. This will be its initial showing in Chicago.

Harry A. Rice, Chicago publicity manager for Universal, went to Bloomington, Ill., Tuesday, March 30, to exploit "The Great Air Robbery" at the Chatterton Theatre, where it was booked for a run of five days.

New Milwaukee Manager for United.

B. E. Bristol has been appointed manager of the Milwaukee branch of United Picture Theatres, Inc., by Manager Jack O'Toole, of the Chicago office. He succeeds L. F. Thurwachter, who resigned in order to resume his law practice.

Conditions in Milwaukee are very good for everyone in the business, Mr. O'Toole states. All theatres, both in the downtown section and in the outskirts, are doing excellent business.

Manager Grauman Joins Benedicts.

J. S. Grauman, branch manager of the Chicago office of Metro Pictures Corporation, and Miss Irene Sinsheimer, daughter of Mrs. Ida Sinsheimer, 4735 Drexel Boulevard, Chicago, were married Wednesday, March 31, at the Hotel Sisson, this city. In the evening the bride and groom left for Colorado Springs to spend their honeymoon. They will be at home, at the Hotel Sisson, after April 15.

Mr. and Mrs. Grauman were presented with a beautiful silver flower vase, handsomely inscribed, by the Chicago office force.

Mr. Grauman has held his present position with Metro for the past two years. Before coming to Chicago he was branch manager of Metro's Milwaukee office.

Clermont Has Clean Policy; Bookings Please the Mothers

WHAT is suitable for children to see on the screen? is a question that is a determining factor in booking features for the Clermont on North Clark street. By adopting this conscientious attitude Manager John Frundt has won a reputation for having one of the cleanest screens in Chicago, and has passed up much that is objectionable in the way of film literature. Mr. Frundt's sensible argument is in part:

"Children are natural students. Details which receive only a passing glance from an adult will often furnish food for extensive thought in a child's mind. If the youngsters see something new, something that has never happened or been allowed to happen in their home, they are going to be impressed, and oftentimes they will go away and imitate."

"Are you sure that this policy of elimination, in choosing features, will please adults?" Mr. Frundt was asked.

Women's Help Valuable.

"It is pleasing the mothers, at least," he answered, "and they make up a large percentage of our patrons. In watching pictures, mothers involuntarily decide whether the subject and its treatment is healthy entertainment for a child. I have talked over photoplays with women and have learned to judge more from their standpoint."

"A slight thing will often bring their voluble condemnation. I recently decided not to book a popular picture now on the market, because of the heroine's insatiable desire for cigarettes. A little of this sort of thing is not so objectionable, but often it is overdone, and too often it is upheld by the scenario writer, which gives the picture a low moral tone."

Manager Frundt exhibits an even standard of pictures, which he finds more profitable in his community than the less uniform policy of showing a superspecial one night and something less than mediocre the following night. The Clermont seats about 600 and about one-sixth of its patronage consists of young folks. The size of the theatre does not warrant having an orchestra. A player organ was installed four years ago, shortly after Mr. Frundt became manager, and this is proving a satisfactory substitute for an orchestra.

Music at the Jackson Park Attracts City-Wide Patronage

NOT every day does an orchestra leader and all pick up its impedimenta and leave a theatre just so as to follow the manager who has left for a bigger field. Yet this is exactly what happened at the Jackson Park Theatre, two years ago, when Leo B. Salkin was appointed managing director of the house. Mr. Salkin has attained a rare degree of success in the art of managing and his record shows that there has always been an underlying bond of loyalty between his house staff and himself. Not only his musicians but other employees also are the same who have been associated with him in his former positions. In a recent interview he asserted that organization is the most potent force in building a theatre's reputation.

"We came because we like your music"; that's an oft-heard comment from visitors at the Jackson Park which attracts a citywide patronage, although it is located on the far south side on Stony Island avenue and Sixty-seventh street. The musical part of the show is directed by Sam Haase, who, with fifteen musicians, gives programs that are sufficiently varied to appeal to all tastes.

The advisability of enlarging the Jackson Park or of building a new theatre across the street is now being considered by Edward Bloom, the owner. By the purchase of a site directly back of the lot on which the theatre stands, additional space for 800 seats would be available, thus making the entire seating capacity 2,320. If this plan is carried out, the Jackson Park will be the largest one-floor house in Chicago. The other proposition provides for a still larger theatre, with a balcony, which would seat not less than 3,000. The fast-growing district of Jackson Park will soon warrant such a project.

Empty Seats a Rare Sight Under the Roof of the Linden

BUSINESS at the Linden is booming, thank you," Manager Thomas Johnsen answered cheerfully (as a manager would with such a message) and reached for his ledger. "There!" he said with modest triumph as he opened page after page that told the story of prosperity. "Do you wonder why we put on daily matinees and then can't take care of them all?"

No need to wonder, even without the rare privilege of a glance at Manager Johnsen's bookkeeping, because, after attending an afternoon show at this popular picture house, you're quite convinced that the box office isn't worrying.

The Linden, if it were on State and Madison streets, would hardly have a more enviable location. For Halsted and Sixty-third is a hustling, bustling corner, with a continual ebb and flow of humanity that keeps traffic cops and the Linden busy.

"Eleven years ago, when it was first built, this theatre was to the south side what the Orpheum was to the 'loop,' a lively center of attraction," Mr. Johnsen said. "At that time it was running vaudeville. Three years later it was re-established on a moving picture basis exclusively."

Manager Johnsen has had a chance to watch developments. His first position at the Linden was that of drummer in the orchestra. From there he worked forward toward the front of the theatre, until, three years ago, E. Thomas Beatty, proprietor of the Linden, and also of the Englewood Burseseque Theatre across the street, made him manager.

If every evening does not witness a process of holding out the crowds, Manager Johnsen says there's something wrong. At present there is no apparent means of remedying the tight situation. Not an inch of ground in the neighborhood is available; nor is it possible for the theatre to be enlarged. By a compact seating arrangement it holds 788, balcony and all.

Interested comments from passers-by have rendered it advisable to present matinees at noon, instead of one o'clock p. m., so as to accommodate a special noon patronage. This change will take place soon. Saturday morning matinees for children is another pending innovation. Records show that from 300 to 400 children have been attending the Saturday and Sunday matinees. So special weekly programs with an appeal to juvenile fans will soon be presented.

Among Busy Exchangemen

Universalites of Pittsburgh Give Showing of "Stamboul"

THE Pittsburgh Universal exchange held an elaborate trade showing of the new Priscilla Dean production, "The Virgin of Stamboul," at the Olympic Theatre, Sunday afternoon, March 28. The large house was packed to the doors, and the picture made a big hit. A ten-piece orchestra played the musical score of the picture and added much to the presentation.

Universal can always be depended upon to put over something new at their trade showings, and they are always looked forward to. This time they had several chorus girls, who were playing at a local theatre, as usherettes, garbed in oriental costume, very much in keeping with the nature of the production, and as one of the boys said, "Mighty pleasing to the eye."

Johnston's Cause for Joy.

W. R. Johnston, assistant manager of the Pathe exchange, was back on the job again the first of April, after six weeks spent in the hospital, the victim of a general breakdown. While Mr. Johnston was in the hospital there was an addition to his family at home, in the shape of a baby boy. So there is double cause for felicitations.

From Universal to Circle.

William A. Welsh, who was with the Universal as bookkeeper for several years, is now connected with the Circle Film Attractions, of which John McAleer is manager, in the capacity of roadman.

Construction Cost "Kills" Film Building.

The First National Exhibitors Exchange will move from 414 Ferry street, Pittsburgh, to the building formerly occupied by the General Film Company in Ninth street, on or about July 1. The United Artists will also move to the same building at the same time, and it is likely that some of the other exchanges will secure space in the building also.

The above announcement will come as a surprise to many, as it was expected that another film building was to go up in Forbes street, adjoining the building at 1018. It now develops that the cost of erecting a new building such as the city demands would be prohibitive at the present time and that project is now abandoned.

Honeymooning In New York.

Jack Frazier, salesman for United, and for several years shipper for the First National, married Florence Glass, of the First National force, last week. The happy couple took a short honeymoon trip to New York. Congratulations!

Armenian Girl's Personal Appearance.

"The Auction of Souls" is playing a circuit of towns in West Virginia at present, Aurora Mardiganian, the heroine of the play, appearing in person at all engagements. The attraction is cleaning up everywhere.

Pittsburgh Personals.

Ralph Abbett, manager of the Indianapolis office for Universal, paid the Pittsburgh office a visit one day recently on his way back from New York. He is assistant manager Herbel's old boss, and maybe each wasn't glad to see the other.

Sig. Schlager, special sales representative for J. Parker Read, Jr., was in Pittsburgh, week of March 29 conferring with Joe Bloom, the W. W. Hodkinson exchange chief, regarding the distribution and exploitation of "Sex," the newest Louise Glaum vehicle, in this territory.

Bronstetter More Active.

T. C. Bronstetter, formerly manager of the Triangle Film Corp., but at present president of the Tri-State Theatre Corp., has taken over the active management of all their theatres, relieving Mr. Dunmeyer, of Butler, treasurer of the company, of some of his many duties.

Field Representative Ira Aronson, of the National Pictures Theatres Corporation, acted as personal representative for Louis J. Selznick, at the grand and formal opening of the Venango Theatre at Oil City, Pa., March 22.

Altoona's One Big Day.

It so happens many times that two or three film roadmen will hit the same town on the same day, but we think that last Friday, March 26, was the Mecca for the Knights of the Celluloid in Altoona, and you can imagine what Jake Silverman and A. Notopolis were up against. First came Mann of Pathe, then Graham of Republic, and Meltzer of Select, Ainsworth of All Star, Carroll of Fox, Griffith of United Picture, Kruse of Paramount, Harry Rife of First National, and then Burgun of Universal popped in. Some array, we'll say!

Detroit Exchange Notes.

Ralph Peckham, for the past year special representative in Ohio for Lewis J. Selznick, has been appointed Detroit manager for the Republic Distributing Corp. He was formerly in Detroit with the Universal; later he organized the Criterion Film Exchange, and managed the Detroit office of Unicorn.

Republic and Select Co-ordinate.

The Republic office has moved down with Select on the fifth floor of the film building. Select will merely do the physical handling of the film. Ralph Peckham, as manager of Republic, will maintain his own selling organization.

Detroit Personals and News Briefs.

Sam Pelzman, formerly with Select in Washington, has joined the sales staff of the Detroit Select office.

H. A. Ross, assistant sales manager of Famous Players-Lasky Corp., spent April 4 to 8th at the Detroit office conferring with Manager C. W. Perry.

E. F. Tarbell, division manager for Vitagraph, has been spending the past ten days at the Detroit office conferring with Manager J. M. Duncan.

W. D. Ward, Universal manager, is after first prize in the $7,000 contest which ends July 3rd. In the recent contest, Mr. Ward took second prize.

Henry Zapp, well-known film salesman, has joined the Pathe staff in Detroit, and will travel in the state.

Hyman Attractions Center in Detroit.

Arthur S. Hyman Attractions have closed their Chicago office and brought Warren G. McCoy, former manager, and Leo Carrow, former shipper, to the Detroit office, where they will continue their associations.

Among Atlanta Exchangemen.

O. P. Hall, home office representative of National Picture Theatres, Inc., spent several days in Atlanta recently getting the new local office in working order. The Atlanta office, it is stated, has already passed double its quota on franchise sales for the new organization, and Mr. Hall is enthusiastic over the reception which has attended their entry into this territory.

Arthur C. Bromberg Attractions have made arrangements to handle the North Carolina territory for the distribution of their Hank Mann Comedies through the Hygrade Pictures Corporation, of Charlotte, N. C., on account of the better shipping facilities for handling this territory from Charlotte. Bromberg Attractions have just closed a deal for the Essanay-Chaplin specials for this territory.

Booming Atlanta's Own Feature.

Wassman & Stephens have opened the W. & S. Feature Service, and at present are launching first-runs on "Husbands and Wives," a production filmed in Atlanta, in which the biggest of Atlanta's social favorites appear. The story is from the novel "Making Her His Wife," by Georgia's gifted writer, Mrs. Cora Harris, and Vivian Martin is the star. For its premiere in Atlanta, Mrs. Harris will make a personal appearance, it is announced.

Woman Exchange Manager.

Al Livezy and E. W. McWhorter, formerly short subject salesmen out of the local Pathe office, have gone over to the Republic, under that well-known woman exchange manager, Mrs. Anna Sessions.

Florida Exchangeman Busy.

Down in Jacksonville, Fla., D. H. McGee, general manager of the Exhibitors' Booking Association, is running a busy exchange. His service pretty well covers Florida, with a line of independent features kept up to date. McGee's exchange is located in the Realty Building.

J. M. Duncan.

Manager of the Vitagraph exchange in Detroit.

in Big Distributing Centers

Baltimore Exchange Notes.

Louis H. Bell has booked "The Great Air Robbery" to the American Flying Club of Baltimore, and it will be shown under the auspices of this club at Albaugh's Lyceum Theatre during the week of May 5. Mr. Bell will handle the publicity and advertising campaign for the picture when it is shown by the Club.

Airplane stunts will be conducted by the Club during the week that the picture is being shown. Mr. Bell has been transferred to the Washington, D. C. office of Universal. He began his duties at that office on April 5.

Palan Now Screenart Manager.

The Baltimore branch of Screenart Pictures will now be under the management of S. Palan, as Michael Siegel has resigned to become again associated with the sales force of Universal to work out of the office of the Baltimore Film Exchange, 412 East Baltimore street. Mr. Palan has been covering the Virginia territory for Screenart and has been in the film business for five years. He has covered the Pennsylvania territory for Mutual and Capital and has also been in the exhibiting end of the business. He managed the Savoy Theatre in Wilmington, Del.; was assistant manager of the Metropolitan Opera House, showing pictures, in Philadelphia, Pa., and owned the Riverside Theatre in Bristol, Pa., which he sold recently to Louis Hirsh of that city.

Loftus Becomes Realart Manager.

Charles C. Loftus has succeeded Lou D. Lyon as Baltimore representative of Realart Film Company. Mr. Loftus has been in the amusement business for eleven years and at one time was associated with the United Booking offices in New York City.

During the war he was in the Quartermaster's Department of the U. S. Army, and spent 26 months overseas. He was released from the army last Thanksgiving day, and he says it was a day of thanks to him. He operated a show called the "Q. M. Frolics," while in France, after the armistice was signed and took it around to various army camps.

Baltimore Exchange Personals.

Having made quite a record for himself in booking towns in the West Virginia territory, H. M. Williams left again this week to travel over the Virginia territory. Mr. Williams booked 22 theatres out of the 24 towns he visited on his West Virginia trip.

Rosa L. Breen, who is the bookkeeper at the Baltimore office of Screenart, visited her home in Philadelphia, Pa., over the Easter holidays.

Hellman Joins Goldwyn.

Frederick R. Hellman has joined the forces of Goldwyn in the Washington, D. C., office. Mr. Hellman has been acting as traveling representative of Wallace Hugh and Palmore & Homand for several weeks.

Payette Representing United.

George N. Payette is now representing the United Picture Theatres, Inc., in the Baltimore territory. He is a brother of John J. Payette, who is well known in this city. George Payette at one time managed the York Theatre in Washington, D. C., for Harry Crandall, and he has been in the film business for four years. He has also been associated with the Mutual and Roberson-Cole companies.

R. C. Harrison, formerly traveling representative for Screenart out of the Baltimore office, has now joined the sales forces of Vitagraph and is connected with the Washington, D. C., office.

Holmes Buys Out Nolte.

The interests of Charles Nolte in the Baltimore Theatre have been bought out by Frank T. Holmes. Mr. Holmes, who has been managing the Aladdin and New Belvidere theatres, which are under the general direction of Mr. Nolte, has resigned and will devote his time to his newly acquired interests.

The Dwyers Working to Capacity.

Leo Dwyer, of the Dwyer Brothers & Co., is back in Cincinnati from New York City, where he went to appoint a new manager for their New York branch. While there he installed J. A. Kent, formerly manager of the Cincinnati exchange, for Mutual. Mr. Dwyer said the sales on Cosmographs are increasing so rapidly that it is taxing the capacity of their factory at Moorhead, Ky., to turn them out.

Allan B. Moritz Will Head Buffalo Exchangemen's Body

ALLAN S. MORITZ, manager of the Buffalo office of Famous-Players-Lasky, has been elected president of the Buffalo Motion Picture Exchange Managers' Association, succeeding J. E. Kimberly, who recently resigned as manager of the local Republic office and whose resignation from the managers' association was accepted at the last meeting. The exchange men have appointed a Grievance Committee with the following personnel: J. H. Greenwald, Fox, chairman; Frank S. Hopkins, Universal; Archie Moses, Select; Harry Marcy and W. Allen, Vitagraph. This committee will take up a complaint only in case of the Hoy service, which was recently engaged by the Buffalo organization, fail to adjust the matter.

Any exchange manager having a complaint against an exhibitor cannot serve as a member of the Grievance Committee. The next meeting of the association will be held April 10.

Mrs. George Hickey Dies.

Buffalo exchange men and exhibitors were shocked on Friday, April 2, to hear of the death of Mrs. George Hickey, wife of the manager of the local Goldwyn office. The body was taken to Oswego, the home of the deceased, for burial.

"Stolen Kiss" for Hippodrome.

Henry E. Wilkinson, manager of the Realart Buffalo office, reports the signing of a contract with Harold B. Franklin of Shea's Hippodrome for the presentation in this big house of Constance Binney in her second Realart production, "The Stolen Kiss." Miss Binney appeared on the Hippodrome screen April 8-10 in "Erstwhile Susan," and drew capacity audiences. Mr. Wilkinson reports 20 contracts closed in the Western New York territory during the week of March 29.

Interest in Lloyd Series.

C. A. Taylor, Pathe Buffalo skipper, reports much interest in the new series of Harold Lloyd comedies, bookings on which are now coming in rapidly. Contracts on the Dempsey serial also continue in great shape, Mr. Taylor reports. "His Royal Lost and Found Column: "The Man Who Lost Himself"—Found Out to Be William Faversham in His First Selznick Picture. Noted stage star is shown here in three telling scenes in "The Man Who Lost Himself," which will be released shortly.

Slyness," was shown at the Strand for the entire week of April 4. Mr. Taylor is painting up his trailer preparatory to hitting the long, long trail to the fishing grounds.

Aurora Mardiganian Coming.

P. H. Smith, manager of the Buffalo First National exchange, reports the coming to this territory on Monday, April 12, of Aurora Mardiganian, star of "Auction of Souls," in company with Lieut. Jim Anderson. She will open her engagement in western New York at the International Theatre, Niagara Falls, appearing in person at every showing of the First National feature. Mr. Smith has signed a contract for the showing at the Liberty Theatre, Canandaigua, N. Y., of "In Old Kentucky" and "The River's End."

Exchange Doings in Denver.

The Rocky Mountain Screen Club will give an athletic entertainment on Monday April 12, in the Adams Hotel. Besides eats and vaudeville, a boxing card will be staged. Every exchange man will be set back just three bucks.

Newspaper Man Now "Exploiting."

Al Birch, for a number of years city editor of The Denver Post, has been made Denver exploitation man for Famous Players-Lasky and has assumed his new duties.

New York Is Their Mecca.

Ben Cohen, Denver manager for Select, is in New York attending the company's gathering. John Childs, of the Republic offices, accompanied Cohen. Hugh Rennie, of Select's Seattle office, stopped off here and joined the Denver party east.

"Play Ball!" Shouts Cassidy.

Harry Cassidy, the well known ball player, has resigned his position as Denver exchange manager for Robertson-Cole company. After disposing of some of his farm lands through Nebraska, Cassidy will return to Denver, where he will play baseball during the summer.

Switches Over to Universal.

W. H. Edwards, for some time Denver manager for Vitagraph, has resigned and gone over to Universal as road man. H. Bradley Fish, divisional manager for Vitagraph, is in charge of the Denver office until the new manager arrives.

Canadian Exchange News.

The Amalgamated Exhibitors Circuit, Limited, of Montreal, consisting of numerous independent exhibitors of Montreal and other centres of Quebec, has taken over the business of Sterling Films, Limited, Montreal and Toronto. The Sterling company has been an active enterprise in moving picture circles of Eastern Canada under the management of Mr. I. Soskin, who was formerly an official with Messrs. Jule and J. J. Allen.

Hallmark and Pioneer productions were released in Canada through the Sterling company and the latter also controlled a number of independent pictures. The Sterling Films, Limited, also recently opened a branch office in St. John, N. B.

Getting Exhibitor Support.

The president of the Amalgamated Exhibitors' Circuit is Harry Pulos, a Montreal exhibitor, and the general manager is Phil Hazza, formerly manager of the branches of the Canadian Universal at Montreal and Winnipeg. The Amalgamated circuit was established after upwards of forty exhibitors in Montreal and vicinity had signed an agreement to support the undertaking.

Manitoba Passes Five Laws Applying to Film Exchanges

The Winnipeg, Manitoba, City Council has put through regulations to govern the storage of moving picture films in Winnipeg exchange offices. The by-law requires all exchanges to use ventilated fire-proof vault when more than fifty reels of film are stored while ventilated steel cabinets are required for less than that number of reels.

Nothing but the reels and their containers are to be placed in the vaults or cabinets.

All films are to be kept in metal boxes when not actually stored in the vaults or cabinets except when they are being handled by employees. The cabinets prescribed are to be permanently attached to the wall of an office and outside air vents for these cabinets are to be arranged.

Washington Personals.

George Payette, brother of the well known assistant general manager of the Crandall theatres, in Washington, John J. Payette, has joined United Pictures to work in Baltimore.

Bob Smeltzer, district manager for the Republic Pictures Corporation, has just returned from a long distance trip through the South. Bob says things look good in the territory and that plenty of business is in sight.

The Stork Visits the Slots.

Robert Slot, Abe Dresner's righthand man at the Exhibitors' Co-operative Film Exchange, struts around nowadays like a pouter pigeon all dressed up and nowhere to go. He is what is known as a proud papa and a little girl, a new arrival, bosses things in his tepee and "Bob" does a war dance around the nursery seven or eight nights a week when Miss Slot is troubled with colic.

Dresner Visits Big Cities.

Abe Dresner, manager of the Exhibitors' Co-operative Film Exchange, was so elated that he could find his way around the streets of New York without the aid of a guidebook and a policeman, set out to explore unknown and untrod fields. He has just returned from a ten days' trip to Chicago where he went "on business" well satisfied with having gotten a line on big doings in that city.

San Franciscans Ready for "Melon."

The San Francisco Select exchange annexed second prize in the recent sales contest for business on the new Selznick stars and are eager for the cutting of the $8,000 melon.

San Francisco's Republic Office.

L. B. Metzger, western division manager for the Republic, was a visitor in San Francisco recently about the time that local manager Edward C. Mix left for New York.

Charles C. Crowley, formerly with Pathe, is now with the Republic Exchange as special serial representative.

Haddon Stephens, formerly of the World at San Francisco and later located at Salt Lake City, but now manager of the Republic office at Los Angeles, passed through this city on his way to New York.

E. V. Clover Deserts Exhibiting.

E. V. Clover, for years house manager with the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, and who operated his own house at Stockton, Cal., for a time, is now with Vitagraph, Inc., as salesman out of the San Francisco office.

J. J. O'Laughlin Now With the Sun.

J. J. O'Laughlin, formerly with the Famous Players-Lasky Corp. in Canada and the United States, has joined the Sun Films, Inc., at San Francisco.

Universal Preview a Big Success.

The Universal exchange recently featured an elaborate preview of "The Virgin of Stamboul" at the Imperial Theatre, San Francisco, and succeeded in getting a great crowd of exhibitors together. Music was furnished by Severi's orchestra, which proved a big attraction.

Nick Turner Joins Equity.

Nick Turner, formerly with Pathe, has joined the staff of the Equity Pictures Corporation, San Francisco, which has moved to ground floor quarters at 90 Golden Gate avenue.

Minneapolis Exchange Notes.

L. J. Blumberg, assistant manager of the Minneapolis Metro exchange, returned this week from an extensive trip throughout the northwest. He announced upon his return closing of contracts for the entire output of his company at several cities.

Realart Enlarges Exchange.

The offices of the Minneapolis Realart exchange have been enlarged by Manager Harry Hollander. The enlargement gives the office triple its former space, and was to accommodate the remarkable increase in business in the Northwest, Mr. Hollander said.

Handling Fight Pictures.

The Minneapolis First National exchange is handling the distribution of the O'Dowd-Gibbons fight pictures in Minnesota.

Mitchell Joins Universal.

Affiliation of E. Mitchell, formerly of the Des Moines, Ia., Universal branch, with the Minneapolis Universal exchange, is announced this week.

Newsboys Strong for Wolfberg.

Harris P. Wolfberg, former Cincinnati district manager of the Famous Players-Lasky corporation, had an odd little party at the Paramount private theatre while in this city last week on business. He entertained a flock of newsboys who cry their papers at the Hotel Gibson. Wolfberg lived at the Gibson before being sent to New York headquarters. The programme was "Treasure Island" and the boys were told to do as they pleased.

Republic Exploiting "Girl of the Sea."

Probably the biggest and most novel exploitation campaign ever attempted in Cincinnati is under way by the Cincinnati Republic office. R. E. Flagler, manager, aided by James Carrier, exploitation manager, are devising plans for this campaign for the Selznick Republic special, "The Girl of the Sea," which will be shown in this territory before long.

Publicist Danzinger Promoted.

William Danzinger, who succeeded Joe Mayer as Cincinnati publicity man for Universal, received a telegram last week to report in New York City and assist Mr. Mayer, who is now publicity director for the Universal Corporation. Mr. Danzinger's good work attracted the attention of the New York office.

Simon Gets a Telegram.

Milton Simon, National Picture manager, is the recipient of a telegram from Lewis J. Selznick, which he is nursing around with a smile. The contents of the telegram are that the National franchise holders are to be given the benefit of Select and Republic output.

Thompson Theatres New Owners.

THE Thompson Theatre, one of the largest motion picture houses in Denver, has been sold by the International Amusement Company to David Hepner, owner of the Midland Clothing Company store. The consideration was $40,000. The playhouse will be under the management of A. J. Hepner, son of the new owner, and Glen Halland, both well known in the exhibitors' field in Colorado.

Nolan Buys Out Swanson.

Harry T. Nolan, of Denver, has purchased the interests of his partner, W. H. Swanson, in the First National Exhibitors Circuit. The purchase price, it is said, was $100,000. Swanson was one of the founders of the Swanson-Nolan Film Company, which was succeeded by the Swanson-Nolan Theatre Supply Company. He is now a resident of New York.

Bathing Girl Parade for Film.

To exploit the film, "Why Change Your Wife?" an open air bathing girls' review was held in the heart of Denver's moving picture district. A novel sign board of huge proportions was erected on a two-story building and before this board, four times daily, bathing girls appeared, wearing suits similar to those worn by the stars in the film story. The picture was exhibited at the Princess and the Rialto all week.

Talbot Cheers 500 Orphans.

A. G. Talbot, the popular manager of the America, endeared himself to the hearts of 500 unfortunate little orphan children by being their host at a matinee performance of the film story, "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come." The dependent kiddies were from the homes in and about Denver.

Feature Production in Denver.

A $75,000 moving picture is to be filmed in and about Denver this month, according to an announcement made by the Ore-Col Film Corporation, which was recently organized by A. D. Frost, of Portland, Ore., and O. D. Woodward, of Denver. The new corporation has rented space in the studios of the Englewood Film Company.

Selznick's Aviator Publicist.

L. A. Young, aviator press agent for the Selznick film, "His Wife's Money," featuring Eugene O'Brien, soared over Denver dropping imitation money advertising the film, which played at the Fox Rivoli. O'Brien, who is a Boulder, Colo., man, is a great drawing card in Denver.

Will Produce in Cheyenne.

According to word reaching Denver's movie row, the Class Pictures Company, Inc., has been organized at Cheyenne, Wyo., for the purpose of making western pictures in the old cow town. Pete Morrison has been signed to play leads. Charles E. Bartlett is director. The company will be incorporated for $300,000, with shares at par value of $10.

Arrested for Sunday Show.

For opening his playhouse in Lafayette, Colo., where the blue-Sunday laws recently passed, Alvin S. Frank has been arrested and must stand trial, by heck! The warrant was sworn out by a Lafayette minister.

Some Film Personals.

Henry Brennan, manager of the Lyric Theatre, Casper, Wyo., was noticed along movie row, Denver, last week. Mr. Brennan visited the local exchange offices of the Pathe company, where he contracted for the Pathe weekly.

R. W. Davis, for several years owner of the Palace Theatre, Trinidad, has disposed of his interests to B. B. Hinman, C. G. Chamberlain and L. L. Stonebraker, who assumed charge April 5.
C. M. Moore has purchased the Gem Theatre, Boulder, from W. A. Seamon.

Loew Plans Denver Theatre.

Denver is to have another first-class moving picture and vaudeville theatre, the Loew theatrical corporation having leased for a period of ninety-nine years the St. James Hotel Building, located in the heart of Denver's moving picture district. The hotel will playhouse to cost approximately $500,000, according to the Hitchens-Van Schaak Investment Company, who represented the hotel company in the transaction. The A. C. Blumenthal Company, Inc., of San Francisco, represented the Loew interests.

The lease on the hotel building, which is a six story structure and one of the oldest landmarks in the downtown business district, does not expire for four years. Whether or not an attempt will be made by the Loew interests to purchase the present leases has not been made public.

Plans, however, are in the hands of an architect. The house will have a roof garden and will be built to accommodate 2,500 persons.

Pictures in Glass House.

Cincinnati's glass theatre was thrown open to the public last week. It is on the roof of the Orpheum Theatre on Walnut Hills, and is to be the only one of its kind in the world.

Roof and walls are built of glass, and are so arranged that they can be thrown open, making the theatre virtually an open-air institution. In rainy and cool weather it is completely closed.

The seating capacity of the glass theatre is 1,000, giving the Orpheum a total seating capacity of 3,500. The cost of the improvement was $30,000.

The Broadway-Strand Theatre, Detroit, has installed three Motiograph De Luxe Projectors. Warren & Cohen have installed two Simplex projectors in their Rex Theatre.

Closed Three Hours Good Friday.

All Detroit theatres are reporting a good business now that the Lenten season is over. Co-operating with the movement on Good Friday of closing between 12 and 3, no Detroit theatres were open during those hours.

Miles Increases Activities.

Charles H. Miles took over the Miles Theatre on April 5 and the policy will continue with vaudeville and feature pictures. Mr. Miles announces that he is building six new theatres, one of which will be at the corner of Grand River and Roosevelt avenue, Detroit, seating 4,800. The balance will be in Ohio. The Detroit house opens in the fall.

Flint's New Theatre Open.

The New Richards Theatre, Flint, is now open for business. The Kobacker Furniture Co. own the house, and the booking is done by Charles Garfield, who manages the Orpheum in that city. This is the second new house in Flint to open within the last thirty days.

Another for John H. Kunsky.

John H. Kunsky expects to break ground for a new theatre on Mack avenue, Detroit, within 30 days. It will seat about 2,000 and will be exclusively for motion pictures.

Buys Out Opposition.

F. L. Kingston, of Cheboygan, who recently opened the Kingston Theatre, has purchased the Liberty Theatre in that city from Roland B. Riggs.

Washington Whispers

Storby Goes to Strand.

FRANK J. STORBY, who for the past ten years has been identified with the film business in Washington, has been appointed manager of Moore's Strand Theatre. Mr. Storby moves to the Strand from the Garden, where he is succeeded by Louis Stolberg, who has been connected with one of the local exchanges.

Crandall Returns.

Harry M. Crandall, owner of the Crandall Theatres in Washington, returned last week from a month's trip, during the course of which he visited Los Angeles, San Francisco, San Diego, the Grand Canyon, Chicago, New Orleans, Atlanta, Tijuana, Mexico and some few dozen other interesting points in widely divergent sections of the country.

Mr. Crandall was accompanied by Mrs. Crandall and his daughters, Mildred, Olga and Dorothy.

Crandall Overhauling.

Taking a hint from the week or so of very warm weather, which prevailed in Washington during the latter part of March, Harry M. Crandall has a number of men overhuling the Typhoon fans and cooling systems in the various houses comprising his Washington string. The Crandall Theatres are noted for their comfortable temperatures during the summer months, and the big fans and ventilators will be put in commission as soon as the thermometers in the different houses climb over the comfort mark.

Hoosier Happenings

Wins Sunday Opening Fight.

ANOTHER Hoosier exhibitor has just emerged victoriously in a Sunday opening fight. He is Frank Walters, proprietor of the Orpheum Theatre at Hartford City, Ind.

A jury in the Blackford County Circuit Court found Mr. Walters not guilty of a charge of Sabbath desecration, which was filed against him several months ago because he operated his theatre on Sunday. Only five ballots were taken by the jurors.

Walters was convicted on the charge at the first term of court and then was granted a new trial. Motion picture theatres have been operating on Sundays in Hartford City for more than a year and in view of the recent decision of the jury probably will continue to operate without further interference.

Indianapolis Theatres Crowded.

That the motion picture exhibitors of Indianapolis have no complaints to make regarding attendance at their respective theatres is indicated by an order, which was issued this week by the board of public safety to the police department and the director of the fire prevention division of the fire department. The order calls attention to the crowded condition of the downtown theatres and instructs the two departments to see to it that the theatre owners comply with the law in keeping the aisles and exits open at all times.

Motion Picture Indorsers Meet.

The sixth annual convention of the Indiana Board of Indorsers of Photoplays will be held at the Claypool Hotel, Indianapolis, April 6 and 7. Mrs. Grant C. Markle, of Winchester, Ind., president of the organization, will preside.

The program will include addresses by exhibitors, talks on community pictures, reports of state officers, general business, election of state and local officers and several round table discussions centering on censorship, etc.

The Rev. Clay Trusty, an Indianapolis minister, will speak on "Community Centers in the City," and Mrs. Fred Lucas, of Greencastle, will speak on "Pictures in Small Towns," on the first day's program.

The officers of the board in addition to Mrs. Markle are Mrs. David Ross, Indianapolis, first vice-president; Mrs. Theodore Wagner, Indianapolis, second vice-president; Mrs. E. M. Robbins, Indianapolis, third vice-president; Mrs. Fred Stitz, Indianapolis, fourth vice-president; Mrs. Granvil Renard, Union City, recording secretary; Mrs. H. O. Phillips, Indianapolis, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. E. J. Hecker, Indianapolis, treasurer.

Shelbyville Showman Very Ill.

William C. Meloy, owner of the Strand Theatre, Shelbyville, Ind., has been confined to his home for the last few days as a result of an acute attack of heart and stomach trouble. He was stricken in the office of a physician, where he had gone to receive treatment for one of his ears.

Fire Damages Theatre Front.

The front of the Baby Grand Theatre, Elwood, Ind., was damaged to the extent of several hundred dollars last Saturday night as a result of a fire which started in the operating booth. Two films and two projection machines were destroyed.

The operator, Dewey Lee, leaped from a window of the operating room and escaped uninjured. The theatre was crowded at the time the fire broke out, but the patrons filed out in an orderly manner and no one was hurt.

The Baby Grand was erected last September after the original Grand Theatre, which was under the same management, was destroyed by fire. The loss resulting from the recent fire was not estimated, but is said to be fully covered by insurance.

Fort Wayne Temple Leased.

The Temple Theatre, Fort Wayne, Ind., which was opened three months ago by Oscar Wobrock after having been thoroughly remodeled and redecorated, has been leased to Harold P. Beck and Emmett F. Sorg. Both the new proprietors are Fort Wayne men and have had wide experience in the theatrical and motion picture business, having operated theatres in Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, Cincinnati and other cities during the last eleven years. The Temple has been devoted to photoplays and occasional stage productions and will be continued on that basis, it is understood.

New House in Noblesville.

The American Theatre is the name of an attractive new motion picture theatre which was opened at Noblesville, Ind., recently. Capacity crowds attended the opening.

The theatre was accepted on behalf of the city in an address by C. B. Jenkins, who paid a high tribute to Messrs. Cullen and Wise, the proprietors, for the public spirit manifested in supplying a much needed theatre. The program also included several vocal solos and music by a special orchestra. The theatre will be opened every night in the week and will present a daily change.

Hardware Company Exhibiting.

The Daily Hardware Company, of Montgomery, Ind., is erecting a new motion picture theatre there and expects to complete it in six weeks if the weather remains favorable. The building and its equipment will be up-to-date in every respect. The show will be managed by George Daily, one of the proprietors of the hardware firm.

Montpelier's New Theatre.

According to reports received in Indianapolis recently a new theatre is being erected at Montpelier, Ind., and will be under the management of Charles M. Spray, formerly of Frankfort. The theatre is rapidly nearing completion and will be ready

Like Rajah's Jewel Box.

Mr. Smith's Theatre in Indianapolis was a transformed sight to its many patrons this week. The entire little theatre has been redecorated into what Mr. Smith has labeled "The Rajah's Jewel Box."

Beautiful transparent oriental scenes line the walls, little balconies for the musicians have been constructed on each side of the screen and numerous other improvements made. The entire theatre conveys to the patrons the idea that they themselves are sitting amid a transplanted oriental garden with rich color effects on all sides. The credit for the decorative work goes to S. Barret McCormick, manager of the Circle Theatre, and his art director, Frank Zimmerman.

With the new decorations, Mr. Smith has announced that in the future the entertainment is going to be the same from the time the doors open at 10 o'clock in the morning until they close at 11 o'clock at night. Two orchestras will furnish music continually and will be supplemented by high-class entertainments, which will be changed from time to time.

Depkin Takes New Offices.

BERNARD DEPKIN, JR., general supervisor of the New Wizard, Strand and Pimlico, and Nixon's Pickwick, Victoria and McHenry theatres in Baltimore, has taken a suite of offices on the fourth floor of the Castelnberg Building, Lexington street and Park avenue. Elizabeth Schwab, Mr. Depkin's efficient secretary, has one of the two offices occupied by Mr. Depkin.

Both offices are furnished beautifully with mahogany furniture. There are heavy green rugs on the floor and the woodwork is done in mahogany color and has the half timber effect. There is also a very comfortable brown cloth upholstered sofa in Mr. Depkin's private office.

Out-of-Town Notes.

A moving picture and vaudeville theatre with a seating capacity of 1,000 is being built at Denton, Md., by O'Brien, which is to cost $35,000 which will be two stories. It will be in operation in about two months according to the estimates.

The Globe Theatre, Berlin, Md., which has been closed for five weeks, due to the influenza, has been reopened to the public again.

Going Back to the Farm.

The Opera House, Crisfield, Md., which has been operated by M. H. Douglas, has been sold by him to Ward and Sterling. This playhouse has a seating capacity of 600 and will be repainted and given a general overhauling. Mr. Douglas, who is 60 years old, has also sold his soda water fountain and clothing store and will retire from business and is going back to his farm.

"Square Deal" Saunderson Sells Out.

J. Saunderson, known to the trade as "Square Deal Saunderson," has sold his interests in the Palace Theatre of Hagers-town, Md., to J. H. Boyer. Mr. Boyer will take possession of the Palace, May 1, but Mr. Saunderson will act as manager.

Increasing Theatre Capacity.

Plans are now under way by Evans Brothers, who operate the San Toy Theatre and Opera House in Lonaconing, Md., to make extensive improvements on the Opera House, to cost about $14,000, in order to increase the seating capacity of the theatre from 400 to 800. The work will probably be completed by fall.

Clarksburg Theatre Change.

The Palace and Odeon Theatres, of Clarksburg, W. Va., which have been owned and operated by George Murry for the past four years, have been purchased by him by the Fuel City Amusement Company, of which W. D. Williamson is the general manager. The Odeon, which has been undergoing alterations, has been opened to the public again with tabloids and pictures. Mr. Murry will retire from business for the present and may take a trip to Canada.

To Europe for Pleasure.

Isaac Peters, manager and owner of the Princess Theatre in Shinnston, W. Va., is going to make a six months' trip to Europe this summer and during his absence, his business activities will be taken care of by his partner, Mr. Simon.

Theatre Changes.

Oscar Hansen, lessee and part owner of the Jefferson Theatre, Goshen, is going to remove the gallery from the theatre and enlarge the balcony. Work on the improvements will be started soon.

The Pastime Theatre, Garrett, Ind., has been sold by A. C. Widmer to Otto Heinzerling, of that place. Mr. Widmer has not announced his plans for the future.

$2,500,000 Theatre Announced.

PLANS for a new theatre and office building to cost $2,500,000 were announced this week by Morris Slotkin, manager of the Olympic Theatre and a theatrical promoter. The new building will be at Broadway and Washington street, covering the ground now occupied by the Lyric and Family theatres and adjoining structures.

On Broadway it will take in the property as far east as the Broadway Hotel. There will be a frontage of 160 feet on Broadway and 182 feet on Washington street, and all of the land necessary for the project has been secured, according to the announcement.

The office building will take up the front part of the structure. It will face Broadway, and will be eight or nine stories high. Extending back on Washington street will be the theatre. This will be of fireproof construction throughout, and will have a seating capacity of from 3,500 to 3,800.

One Theatre Replaces Three.

The new theatre will be operated by the company, which now has the Olympic and Lyric theatres, Mr. Slotkin announced. It will present high class motion pictures and vaudeville. Construction of the new house will make one theatre instead of three, since the Olympic, it is expected, will be closed and the Family and Lyric will be done away with under the new arrangement.

This will make the third big theatre planned for Buffalo this year. Loew's theatre will get under way this month at Washington and Mohawk streets, and work on the big Shea Metropolitan will commence May 1. All of these houses will represent outlays of many millions of dollars, and give "The Queen City of the Lakes" some of the finest show houses in the country.

The Rivoli at Broadway and Fillmore is nearly completed, the Capitol in South Park avenue, near Triangle, opened Easter Sunday, and the new theatre in Hertel avenue is well along in its construction. Motion picture theatres are springing up everywhere.

Boosts Leonard on Sport Pages.

The Empire Theatre, which is the old Garden burlesque house, and which has changed to pictures with week runs, pulled an excellent stunt when it placed large sized ads on Benny Leonard in "The Evil Eye" on all the sport pages of the Buffalo newspapers. Naturally the local sport fans were attracted, and flocked to the Empire to see the world's lightweight champion as a film star.

Opens New "Falls" Theatre.

Frank Lotko has opened a new motion picture theatre on Twenty-fourth street, Niagara Falls. It is called the Colonial, and has a seating capacity of about 700. The house is one of the coziest neighborhood houses in western New York. Al Becker, of Buffalo, installed the projection equipment.

Rivoli Opening Delayed.

The Rivoli, the new theatre being erected in Broadway, beyond Fillmore avenue, and which was to have opened around Eastertide, will not open much before June. Harry Dixon, who will manager the house, is now spending all his time aiding in the work of rushing the house to completion. The theatre is built of attractive red terra cotta brick, and presents an excellent appearance, at least as much as can be seen at present.

Hippodrome Boosts Prices.

Shea's Hippodrome boosted its prices five cents beginning Easter Sunday. The new scale is 20 and 40 in the evening and 15 and 25 at the matinees. As is usual at the Hipp, Harold B. Franklin gave his patrons much more for their money than they expected, so there were no complaints. Added artists in the orchestra, a new soloist, an elaborate film program and other features were put on to offset the slight boost.

Church Continues Pictures.

So successful have been the Motion Picture-Community Singing Services at the Calvary Church on Sunday evenings that the church is continuing the stunt. On Sunday night, April 4 (Easter), two episodes from "The Son of Democracy" were presented entitled "Tender Memories" and "A President's Answer." The "movie service" was advertised in the local church pages of the press.

Flat Price at Palace.

The establishment of a flat admission price of 20 cents at the Palace Theatre by Manager Ira M. Mosher has proven a popular move. Every seat in the house, including balcony, is 20 cents, and Mr. Mosher believes that this is the correct policy for a house of the seating capacity of the Palace. Mr. Mosher is prominent in Rotary Club entertainment affairs.

Strand Using Cut-Outs in Lobby.

E. O. Weinberg, of the Strand Theatre, has introduced large cut-outs taken from the large sheets on the various attractions in his lobby displays. The figures are mounted on beaver board and placed at advantageous spots in the lobby. The effect is most striking.

Becker Gives Club Show.

Al Becker, of the Becker Theatre Supply Company, was in charge of the film part of the entertainment given by the Electric Club, of Buffalo, in the Hotel Lafayette, Friday evening, April 2. Whenever there is a film show wanted, Al is usually the man on the job. Mr. Becker has installed a new Simplex machine in Keith's Main Street Theatre, and has received an order for two machines of the same make for the new Rivoli in Broadway.

Wedding Well Advertised.

The marriage of Mary Pickford and "Doug" Fairbanks was well advertised in the local papers, most of them running two-column cuts of the principals, with long stories. Many exhibitors took advantage of this sudden rush of free publicity and booked programs featuring the two stars. Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Fairbanks' bill were quite the vogue for several days.

Excellent Exploitation Stunt.

All Buffalo turned around and looked when a man dressed in regulation Sing Sing outfit walked up Main street carrying a suit case bearing the sign, "The Honor System" at the Empire Theatre the week of March 29." The white suit with black stripes attracted the attention of everyone. The man walked all over the downtown district. It was an excellent exploitation stunt.

Ransomville Church Screens.

"The Man Without a Country," "A Wedding in Brittany," "The Magic Toy Shop" and new comedies were noted on a program given on the evening of March 30 in the Ransomville Baptist Church. Western New York churches without number are turning to the motion picture as a source of entertainment for their members.

New Theatre in Welland.

S. L. Lambert this week began the erection of a large four-story theatre building on East Main street, Welland, Ont. The theatre will be the largest block in the city, being 60 by 100 feet. A department store and bank will use part of the building.

Carver Screen Production.

Samuel Carver, manager of the Family Theatre, invited members of the press, city officials, prominent physicians and others to a private screening of "What Becomes of the Children?" in the Family Theatre on the evening of March 31. The picture was shown with full musical accompaniment. The production was shown at the Family the entire week of April 4.

Salamanca House Sold.

One of the most important business deals in Salamanca, N. Y., in several months was the sale of the Andrews Theatre on Main street, South Side, to the Columbia Amusement Company, of Erie, Pa. The deal does not include the real estate.

The consideration has not been made public, but it is assumed to be large because the Andrews has enjoyed an unusually good business since its opening eight years ago, when it was built by Max Andrews. The theatre occupies one of the best properties in the business section.

The new owners took possession April 1.

"Erstwhile Susan" Debut.

"Erstwhile Susan," the Constance Binney Realart production, received its initial presentation before the members of the Zonta Club, an organization of Buffalo business women, in the Hotel Statler at the luncheon, April 6. Marion DeForest, dramatic editor of the Buffalo Express, and a member of the club, dramatized the play for Mrs. Fiske, and her work was the basis for the screen version. The picture was shown at Shea's Hippodrome the last half of the week.

Ray Meyers in Buffalo.

Ray Meyers, former press representative for several local motion picture houses, was a Buffalo visitor this week, coming here in the interest of the Northern Baptist campaign. Mr. Meyers is now associated with Porters Moore in the operation of an advertising agency in New York City. Mrs. Meyers is a former member of the Buffalo Times editorial staff.

This fellow Jimmy Valentine Looks to Be Sort of a Good Chap Until He Spoils It All in the Last Scene—Maybe It's His Money Anyway. Bert Lytell seen in a new Metro production adapted from the widely known play, "Alias Jimmy Valentine."

THE Philadelphia North American, in commenting on the recent fire at the Moore Hotel, speaks of Samuel Gallo, manager of the Strand moving picture theatre at Indiana, Pa., as a hero. He didn't jump into the burning building and save the mother and child, or in the pathway of a runaway horse to save the heiress.

What he did was to arise in his theatre when it was filled the other evening and announce in a quiet manner that he had received orders to close the theatre at once. The audience, some of them, thought it was because of sickness, and while the orchestra played the exit march, the people filed out. Upon reaching the sidewalk, it was discovered that the Moore Hotel next door was on fire, and the theatre was threatened.

Speaking of Universals.

Charlie Baird, of the Pastime, Portage, considers "The Brute Breaker" one of the best pictures Universal has ever released. Has heard more favorable comments about it than any feature he has run in many moons.

Universal service must be well liked in Charleroi, for every time Leresche visits the Palace in that town, he finds 'em standing out on the sidewalks. And this they don't do, you know, unless it's a show they want to see.

Enlarging McKeesport Savoy.

Pete Gorris and H. R. Barney started work March 25 on the new theatre which they are to build on the site of their present Savoy Theatre in McKeesport, Pa. They have purchased additional property in the rear of the Savoy and the new house will extend from Fifth avenue through to Ringhold street, covering a plot 45x155 feet. The Savoy will be closed May 1 and it is expected to have the new building ready for opening about the first of September.

The new Savoy will be one of the handsomest houses in this section. It will entail an expenditure of about $200,000 and will have a capacity of 1,300. Mr. Gorris states that $12,000 will be spent on the matter to ventilation alone, which gives one an idea of the magnitude of the proposition. All other appointments will be in harmony with this feature.

Get National Picture Franchises.

O. H. Potter, of the Columbia Amusement Company, Erie and Warren, Pa., has secured the franchise for the Columbia and Majestic theatres in Erie and the Columbia in Warren, for all National Pictures Theatre productions.

Homestead Theatre Enlarging.

The Elite Theatre, Homestead, Pa., is closed for remodeling and enlargement, work having been started March 23. It is expected that the work will be completed by Saturday of this week. The capacity will be increased from 300 to 600 and the house is being repainted and redecorated throughout.

Buy's Washington's Idle Hour.

M. A. Modi, formerly an exhibitor of Mannington, W. Va., has purchased the Idle Hour Theatre at Washington, Pa., from W. H. Wheatley. The latter intends to make his future home in Texas.

D. C. France in Oil Business.

D. C. France, one of the best known men connected with the moving picture industry in the Pittsburgh section, manager of the local branch of the United Theatre Equipment Corporation, 1006 and 1008 Forbes street, has resigned his position with that company, to take effect April 10. Mr. France will become affiliated with A. S. Davis, formerly a well-known film man, who is now in the oil business, operating extensive fields in various parts of the country. Mr. France is peculiarly fitted for this class of work, having been in the construction business prior to his entry into the moving picture game.

Frank L. France, brother of the retiring manager, has been chosen successor of the latter. Frank has been with the company for the past six years and will prove a good man for the position.

New Lincoln to Open April 5.

The New Lincoln Theatre at Parkersburg, W. Va., of which Mr. Smoot is owner, is rapidly nearing completion and the formal opening date has been set for April 5. The house has a seating capacity of 900, and is one of the handsomest theatres in that section of the country, and represents an investment of $100,000. A 15-piece orchestra will provide the music for the new house and a souvenir program of thirty-two pages will be issued with the opening.

Luce Buys Belle Vernon House.

C. N. Luce, a business man of Belle Vernon, Pa., has purchased the Bijou Theatre in that town and will take possession of the same on April 1. The house will be remodeled and enlarged from its present capacity, 250, to 450.

Ike and Mike to Syria.

Ike Peters and his brother Mike, who control several theatres in and around Shinnston, W. Va., have secured passports and are going back to the old country, Syria, for a six months' vacation trip.

Sympathy.

The Lissman girls, well known in several exchanges of Pittsburgh, have the sympathy of a host of friends in the death of their father, who passed away Thursday, March 18.

The Cat Came Back.

S. L. Driggs' pet cat, "Dick Driggs," played an important part in the showing of "Pollyanna" at the Driggs Theatre, Clearfield, Pa., when it innocently meandered across the stage just as the cat in the film was lost. Did they laugh? Ask Driggs—he knows.

The Girls Change, Too.

Miss Mary Loughrey, formerly of the Paramount exchange, Pittsburgh, is now a member of the Rowland & Clark force, acting in the capacity of assistant to the publicity director, Samuel Sivitz.

Will Picture Cleveland History.

ANNE LUTHER arrived in Cleveland April 1 to begin work on a special historical production showing the progress of the city during the last fifty years. The picture is backed by the William Taylor Sons Company, a big department store, and is being made to show in the city during the Taylor golden jubilee week, which begins April 21.

The picture is being made by Universal Film Manufacturing Company's industrial department from data compiled by local historians. It is under the direction of Lem F. Kennedy, a Universal director. Roswell J. Johnston is the cameraman. On Easter Sunday pictures of the fashion promenade were made.

Sam Bullock Sells Columbia.

The Columbia Theatre, one of the oldest neighborhood houses and one that has made a mint of money, has changed hands. Sam Bullock, who operated it for many years, has sold it to J. Stein, his competitor, who runs the New Palace on St. Clair avenue only a few blocks away from the Columbia. Mr. Stein closed the house for two weeks, during which time he redecorated it and made several alterations, and it was reopened Easter Sunday.

Will Build in Port Clinton.

The Port Clinton Amusement Co. has been incorporated for $100,000 for the purpose of building a big theatre in Port Clinton, Ohio. The company is headed by Fred P. Reichert, who owns two theatres in Port Clinton.

West Coast Whispers

J. D. Williams Visits San Francisco.

J.D. WILLIAMS, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, was a visitor at San Francisco late in March, coming here to confer with Fred Dahnken, Jr., on matters connected with this institution. He was especially interested in plans for the new house to be erected on Fourth street by the Turner & Dahnken Circuit, and states that when completed this will be the finest theatre showing First National pictures, besides being the largest in the entire country, surpassing even the Capitol Theatre, New York, in seating capacity.

Loew's, Inc., Adding to Chain of Houses.

Loew's, Inc., through Ackerman & Harris, has purchased the Wigwam Theatre, this city, and will take possession shortly. A deal is under way for acquiring another district theatre, and it is planned ultimately, when its building program is completed, to conduct six houses here. Through Ackerman & Harris it has just purchased a one hundred and twenty-five foot lot on Curtis street, Denver, Colo., opposite the Tabor Grand Opera House, where a fine theatre will be erected. At San Francisco considerable work is to be done in the present houses, it being the plan to make a new entrance to the Casino and to expend $50,000 in improvements at the Hippodrome.

To Select Theatre Site.

Martin Beck, president of the Orpheum Circuit, arrived here recently to select a site for the San Francisco Junior Orpheum Theatre, and will remain until this is decided upon. This new house will have a seating capacity of not less than 3,500, and its program will include moving pictures, as well as vaudeville, the performance being continuous. Several locations in the vicinity of Seventh and Market streets are under consideration. The theatre will be named after the street on which it is located.

Theatre Features Fashion Show.

A fashion show is not a new idea for a moving picture house, but the management of the California Theatre evolved a lot of new stuff in putting on a spring event in conjunction with "The City of Paris." Eighteen beautiful girls, a novel stage setting and a story in pantomime woven about Miss Fashion, together with a prologue song by Ren Black called "Clothes," and Herman Heller, with his fifty-piece orchestra, assisted in putting it over in great shape. A fashion matinee for women only was a feature.

Company Returns from Truckee.

Forty-five members of a Lasky company headed by George Melford arrived at San Francisco late in March from Truckee, where work has been under way on snow scenes for the past two months.

Airplane Stunts Attracted Crowds.

D. V. Levin, manager of Loew's Hippodrome, San Jose, Cal., offered the residents of that city a free aerial treat during the showing of "The Great Air Robbery." Every day at noon an aviator from a nearby field flew over the city, looped the loop, spiraled, and performed the latest in air feats. In addition to packing his house he received the good will of the merchants of that city, as many came to town to see the free entertainment.

Castle to Go to New York.

Eugene Castle, formerly in charge of the Pacific Coast edition of the Fox News, is no longer with the Fox Film Company, and plans to go to New York in April to form new connections. Bert Moissant has also resigned his position with this concern.

California Trade Briefs.

Eugene I. Perry, manager of the T. & D. Theatre, Oakland, Cal., is planning a trip to New York in June.

The California Theatre, Pittsburg, Cal., is nearing completion. It has a seating capacity of 1,500.

George F. Sharpe, of the Liberty Theatre, Fresno, Cal., has been made chairman of the committee on moving picture participation for the annual Raisin Day Festival, and has secured the consent of Pauline Frederick to act as queen of the day. Tom Mix will also take part in the event.

Will Produce Canadian Features.

THE Canadian Government has granted a Federal charter to the "Patricia Photo-Players, Limited," of Montreal, Quebec, and a capitalization of $1,000,000 has been authorized. Those interested in the company, the object of which is to produce Canadian features, include A. Reynolds Allison, an English playwright; Maurice R. Coste, and William C. Smith.

Women Take Command.

Two women have taken the ownership and management of the Isis Theatre, Fernie, B. C. The two lady exhibitors are Bernice Winnett and Rita Todd. They have signed up for Pathe features.

Authorities Show "Fit to Win."

After presenting "Fit to Win" to men only under the auspices of the Alberta Board of Health, the Bijou Theatre, Calgary, Alberta, arranged to present the picture to women only during the week of March 29. The provincial authorities are arranging to show the picture in all cities of Alberta to segregated audiences.

Another propaganda picture dealing with sexual troubles, "The End of the Road," was recently shown for a week in Massey Hall, Toronto, under the auspices of the Canadian National Council for the Combatting of Venereal Diseases. For this showing arrangements were made for a series of lectures by prominent local health authorities, including Dr. C. J. Hastings, Toronto Medical Officer.

Two More Allen Theatres.

Two more new theatres have been added to the chain of Allen theatres in Canada, the new houses being located in London and Toronto. The new Allen Theatre, London, which has 1,700 seats, is under the management of T. W. Logan, who is also in charge of Allen's Majestic Theatre in that city.

The other new house is Allen's Parkdale Theatre, Toronto, which was opened on April 5 under the management of Ben Yillingser, who was formerly in charge of Allen's Bloor Theatre, Toronto. The Parkdale Theatre is primarily a suburban house, but it is complete in every detail, and has seating accommodation for 1,800.

William Richmond, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Calgary, Alberta, has resigned. He has gone to Toronto to take up new duties in the moving picture field there.

Walsh Employs Detective in Making "The Deep Purple"

ORIGINAL investigations conducted by a staff of expert criminologists, headed by the famous detective, W. J. Burns, form the basis of elaborate and massive features in the forthcoming R. A. Walsh production, "The Deep Purple," presented by Mayflower Photoplay Corporation.

W. J. Burns, for many years one of the country's foremost detectives, was employed in a consulting and advisory capacity and directed the efforts of a staff engaged by Mr. Walsh, with the detective's advice, in ferreting out reliable and startling information.

A great amount of data on the methods and mannerisms of the modern high-class confidence men was collected and turned over to Director Walsh as detail and atmosphere in making the production. As a result, the original successful play by Paul Armstrong and Wilson Mizner was considerably altered except as to the main plot outline.

A number of massive sets were designed by William Menzies, Mr. Walsh's art director. One of these is a huge set of a cabaret scene of great depth and beauty, in which Bird Millman, the aerial performer, does one of her original acts.

The production will be released shortly through Realert Pictures Corporation. Bookings have already been received for the month of May.

Mr. Walsh's personal staff now includes Harold Horne, assistant director; Earle Brown, scenario writer; James Marcus, studio manager; Joseph L. Holton, assistant studio manager; William Menzies, art director; Vincent Collins, assistant art director; Lucien Andriot, cameraman; Arthur Hirschberg, assistant cameraman; James T. O'Donohoe, head of the play-reading staff, and Ralph S. Mahon, personal secretary.

Melford Completes Scenes in Sierras.

George Melford's production, "The Translation of a Savage," by Sir Gilbert Parker, the scenario for which has been written by Frank Condon, wires the Lasky Studio that he has concluded the snow scenes in the high Sierras and is now engaged in making river shots on the Sacramento River, from where he will go to San Francisco and embark with his company and technical staff on an Australian liner to make a number of important ocean shots. He will return to the studio after a short time to do the interiors for this Paramount Artcraft offering.

Louisville Letter

Pitou Wants Macauley's.

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made that Augustus Pitou, of New York, has a deal pending for the lease on Macauley's Theatre, planning to take over control on August 1, 1920, from the estate of the late John T. Macauley.

Million Dollar Theatre Deal.

The Majestic Amusement Co. has closed a fifty year renewal lease on property occupied by the theatre on Fourth avenue, and it is reported the rentals represent more than a million dollars for the property, rentals, including the stores at the front. The company has leased a lot of adjoining property, and will erect a new house or greatly enlarge the present one as soon as its new Rialto Theatre is completed in the fall. This company now controls more Fourth street property than any one business organization in the city.

Kentucky Theatre Burns.

The Mannering Theatre Building of Mid-dlesboro, Ky., and several offices and shops in the building, were completely gutted by fire in mid March, the loss being placed at $75,000. R. L. Browne was owner of the building.

He's "The Figurehead" in this new Selznick production. He's holding the winning hand in scene one. Because she is the winner we present Anna Q. Nilsson's picture in the center.

Watch the Amazing Growth of the South Advises E. E. Heller of North Carolina

THAT a great wave of business prosperity is sweeping over the South and commerce and industry are booming there in far greater measure than in other parts of the country is the statement of E. E. Heller, of Charlotte, N. C. Mr. Heller is one of the best known men in the motion picture industry in the South and is the manager of the Pathe branch office at Charlotte. He believes the motion picture business will clearly reflect in the coming year the remarkable spirit of progress which has set in all over the South.

"Theatres of the South are enjoying the most prosperous times of their existence," he stated in an interview, "and the reason is not far to seek when we realize that towns which counted their inhabitants in hundreds a few years ago now boast of populations of from 5,000 to 50,000.

"Everybody is at work, great new factories are going up and the small, slow-moving communities of the South of a few years ago are rapidly disappearing. They are giving way to fast moving little cities of an ultra-modern character. Labor conditions are not as bad in the South as elsewhere and capital is flowing into the South.

"All this activity means that a great recreational necessity is being created. When people work hard they must play and they must be entertained. When they are successful they insist on being entertained in a high-class manner. Necessarily, old theatres are giving way to new and modern places and the progressive exhibitors of the territory are leading other business men in their forward-looking spirit. Yes, you can safely predict a great year for the motion picture business all through the South."
